efforts made by our ebullient friend the member for Sarnia (Mr. Brandt), the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Ramsay). Many of us imagine that the member for Sarnia has a considerable future in this place and I just wanted to share publicly my sense of disappointment at his leadoff. I know it was his first and it was credible but perhaps not to his usual standard.

One of my colleagues allowed as to how it was almost robotic. I thought perhaps that was a good word. Those of us who know the member for Sarnia know that he is a lively and engaging orator and he did not show those qualities as he marched methodically through a script which, dare I think it, might have been prepared elsewhere.

There were many serious and thoughtful and some entertaining speeches. To cite but some, I want to say in his absence to the member for Prince Edward-Lennox (Mr. J. A. Taylor) that his observations, reciting as he did some of the recent periodical literature that he had been reading in the Atlantic Monthly, I thought made a good speech. I thought he properly directed our attention to some of the very major structural changes that are taking place in the North American economy.

I thought the member for Carleton East (Mr. MacQuarrie) was very good in his discussion about technology transfer and what future lies ahead in that connection. I listened the other night with my friend the member for Ottawa East (Mr. Roy) to the histrionics of the member for High Park-Swansea (Mr. Shymko) who treated this House to, if nothing else, entertaining and elegant French.

I want to say as well that I read the speech of the government House leader, the member for Scarborough North (Mr. Wells), who seems to have taken his marching orders from Peter Oliver in his recent treatise on how the Conservative Party of Ontario has been much given to intervention, therefore one can live more easily with the trust company legislation and, dare I say it in the presence of my illustrious friend the member for Leeds (Mr. Runciman), the intervention in the oil business.

I did not want to go on at length about that but I thought the member in his comments about Ontario Hydro might do well to read some of the other literature, because it is not quite as Mr. Oliver would have one believe.

I want to say seriously that in my eight years here I have seldom heard as timely and as well prepared and as excellent a speech as I heard from the House leader of the New Democratic Party, the member for Sudbury East (Mr. Martel). It was a long speech, but it was a speech I would recommend to the attention of every member. It deals, as many will know from being here and having heard it, with the issues of occupational health and safety. I say, as at least one member, it is a model of the kind of work that all of us should aspire to in our parliamentary responsibilities and I congratulate the member for Sudbury East for an excellent address on a very important subject.

I thought the intervention by the member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick) was exceptional, not only for what it told us about his views in terms of the Ontario Securities Commission but also for the fact that it was the first time in eight years that I ever heard the member for Riverdale read from beginning to end a speech in this place. I thought perhaps he had the night before been with myself and the Premier to a dinner with the Aga Khan, where the Aga Khan treated us to a script which was almost as methodical, and perhaps the Aga Khan left a very substantial impression with the member for Riverdale.

I want to say I thought the member for Hamilton Centre (Ms. Copps), my colleague the Liberal Health critic, did our side well and proud in her leadoff.

I thought the member for Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria), surveying as he did the hapless procurement policies of the Ontario government, was excellent.

I thought the member for Brandt-Oxford-Norfolk (Mr. Nixon) as he surveyed the current political environment in somewhat truncated form was also very entertaining.

I thought as well, as I always do, that the member for Kent-Elgin (Mr. McGuigan), as he takes us through the intricacies of agricultural philosophy and politics, presented this House with a very timely intervention.

I heard or read at least eight or 10 speeches that I think are a credit to this place. To reiterate what I said earlier, many of the responses in this debate have been vastly superior to the document read by His Honour some three weeks ago. Let me repeat, I cannot imagine a more clear indicator than this speech from the throne that neither this government nor its leader has any plans to have any plans.

4:10 p.m.

I agree entirely with the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Peterson) when he says that this throne speech "lacked vision, vitality. It is full of well-worn platitudes and rehashed promises." It is hard not to agree as well with the leader of the New Democratic Party that in fact this throne speech "simply indicates to the people of Ontario that there is light at the end of the Tory gangplank."

I would like to digress for a moment. I would like to coin a phrase, and the leader of the New Democratic Party is very apt in that connection. I want to say in digression that there were a couple of observations in terms of the situation on the day of the Lieutenant Governor's address which I think deserve brief comment by me.

The seating plan was one. There was one small indicator in the seating plan that struck me as perhaps more than passingly important. I know the Office of the Premier fairly well organizes who sits where and who is invited and all of that. As I looked out over the distinguished heads of those gathered here on the floor and elsewhere, I thought of how many opportunities and how many places there were for government people to sit. I was struck to see over there in the middle of the floor Dr. E. E. Stewart cheek by jowl with Mr. Eddie Goodman, QC.

I thought it was interesting that of all the places in this chamber, of all the opportunities, the government's chief bureaucrat was cheek by jowl with the government's chief political aide, the Premier's chief political aide. Perhaps that tells us something of the neutrality of the Ontario public service, about which I have sometimes complained. There may be some opposite who will say, "Oh, just an overly suspicious opposition member."

Let me just say I am delighted the federal Tory leadership campaign is under way, because it has taken away from this place the former Deputy Minister of Tourism and Recreation, the former national director of the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada, Mr. John Laschinger, who while he was here in his senior public service function, I am told by very good sources within the confines of the Ontario bureaucracy, was not only running his department but was actively engaged in two leadership campaigns, one for the member for St. Andrew-St. Patrick (Mr. Grossman) provincially and another for the federal Conservative member for St. John's West.

I am pleased that the federal leadership campaign of the Progressive Conservative Party has taken away that esteemed former public servant to his more likely calling. But I thought too it was interesting in so far as just how neutral is the Ontario public service at its senior levels.

A quick word about television. It strikes me yet again how difficult it is for many of us to convince the government to bring an electronic Hansard to this place. I know there are discussions; I know there are debates; I know there are countless government members who decry the millions of dollars that might be involved.

But it strikes me, as I know it attracts itself to your fancy, Mr. Speaker, that on the two major government occasions, the speech from the throne and the budget, there is no difficulty; the government is more than a little bit interested in lending its heart and its soul and its resources to the electronic media. I think this Legislative Assembly, as an independent parliament for those of us who know or care, might think about extending those practices that we have here on the throne and on the budget.

I want to say that this speech from the throne is, of course, as the member for Port Arthur (Mr. Foulds) pointed out, directing our attention to the hoped-for economic recovery. Certainly the document is full of hopeful language in that connection. It cites a number of indicators. The consumer price index, we are told, is now roughly at half its level of two years ago. There is "moderation in the unit labour costs, which are a healthy sign for the economy. There is consumer confidence which has expanded to some degree."

The throne speech goes on in its very early pages to remind all of us that there really is not very much that any provincial government can do to materially assist the economic recovery of the nation as a whole.

I thought my friend the member for Kent-Elgin, who, I want to reiterate, is one of the most insightful people and politicians it has been my experience to have known, pointed to a very interesting fact in comparing this throne speech with earlier versions of same. The member, in his very excellent remarks of some days ago, noted with interest the almost complete lack of what the analysts call fed-bashing. They seem to have made up, but there were throne speeches in my time here that were full of, "It is all Ottawa's fault."

I think this speech is important for what it does not say in that connection and that fact struck my attention, as it did the attention of my colleague the member for Kent-Elgin.

I want to note in this connection that the throne speech indicates the Progressive Conservative government of Ontario applauds the recent appointment of the Macdonald federal royal commission on the economic union. On page 7 it says, "While the recently established federal Royal Commission on Economic Union and Development Prospects for Canada was a welcome initiative" So it is interesting to note for the record that the Macdonald royal commission—complete, presumably, with its per diems—is thought of approvingly by the Ontario government.

Mr. Brandt: We didn't buy the whole package.

Mr. Conway: The member for Sarnia says they didn't buy the whole package. This is a government that will not talk too loudly about the per diems of that royal commission. If one were to survey the public accounts and do the proper arithmetic, Donald Macdonald may be a piker by comparison to what is paid out by the Ontario government.

Certainly we note that the government of Ontario calls out again to the Prime Minister of Canada to convene a first ministers' meeting on the economy at the earliest opportunity. Presumably that is the kind of initiative this government has in mind for economic rehabilitation.

I was pleased to see that the auto sector attracted the attention of the government; but I was surprised, with this paean of praise to protectionism in that sector, that the Premier did not treat us to his Lada speech, the one he gave in Ajax or Pickering two or three years ago. I think Hughie floated that once, the Premier read it and someone told him that perhaps it just was not as Mr. Segal had written it. We have never heard that speech again.

I know there are distinguished members in the gallery here, perhaps in the Canadian Press or others, who can refresh my memory, but I think we heard that Lada speech only once. Perhaps it had something to do with the fact that the only Lada I used to see in the legislative parking lot belonged to a former distinguished member of the executive council who shall, of course, remain nameless.

I want to read from the last paragraph of page 7 of the throne speech:

"For its part, the government of Ontario is resolved to bear its full share of responsibility and to continue to provide leadership in the weeks and months ahead. My ministers, therefore, in their several responsibilities, will be placing before you, in this session, components of a clearly defined three-part program.

"Measures will be introduced to contribute to an enduring economic recovery which will create the jobs necessary to allow all Ontarians to lead productive lives; to strengthen the management of the province's affairs and to respond to the critical concerns and needs of Ontarians."

If I may digress for a moment, what, pray tell, could that mean, "to strengthen the management of the province's affairs"?

I would like to stop for a moment and talk a little bit about some of those things. My colleague the member for Rainy River (Mr. T. P. Reid) very excellently and not very many weeks ago produced a document that indicated just how vacant and how hollow the Board of Industrial Leadership and Development experience has been.

I draw to members' attention the very excellent speech made by the member for Rainy River as he took us through chapter and verse, step by step, of the two-year BILD experience. It is really extraordinary that this government imagines it as a comprehensive industrial strategy and economic recovery program.

I will try to be a little bipartisan here, if I can. I read the federal budget of the member for Outremont, Mr. Lalonde, a few weeks ago and I was struck by that part of his budget—I think it is called the economic recovery package, the $4.5-billion grab bag of initiatives—

Mr. Stokes: It was $4.8 billion, was it not, after the revision?

Mr. Conway: It was $4.8 billion? Perhaps. It was several billion.

4:20 p.m.

I have to say to the member for Sarnia I think Mr. Lalonde has been reading provincial political papers in Ontario from the early days of 1981. In that federal Liberal budget of but days ago I think I see BILD II. I will look forward to seeing how it develops.

Mr. Brandt: You are putting some distance between you and your federal colleagues, aren't you?

Mr. Conway: As an objective observer of the political scene, I want to say to the member for Sarnia—who, unlike me, cannot say he has known but one political affiliation in his adult life—that while I am not perfect, I am less spotted in that connection than he.

In response to that second item, "to strengthen the management of the province's affairs," just last weekend I was struck by the ads that festoon most of the daily press, those great big, quarter-page or half-page ads, "Tax Grants for Seniors." There they were again. Let me just say that if the Premier and the Treasurer want to streamline the province's affairs they will reconsider that initiative. In talking this week to my constituency office in the great community of Pembroke, I find my constituency assistant is upset all over again about the number of seniors who continue to be confused by that program.

None of us here is in any way disposed to reduce assistance to the seniors in this province who require it. But if there ever was a boondoggle, the public accounts committee and others in this Legislature—I well remember my very distinguished colleague the member for Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry (Mr. Villeneuve) 18 months ago, in a discussion with the Deputy Minister of Revenue, relaying the frustration of a very capable constituency politician, and it really has not got any better.

Everyone knows that program has nothing to do with delivering assistance to seniors, but everything to do with the so-called visibility question, a cheque from the Premier at Queen's Park. If this province wants to do something about streamlining the management of its affairs, it might well start there.

My illustrious colleague and friend the member for St. Catharines (Mr. Bradley) has pointed out, as has my good friend the member for Wentworth North (Mr. Cunningham) and others in this caucus, the shame that this government continues to spend at such outrageous levels, millions more than ever before, on government advertising. My friend the member for Wentworth North supplied me with data to indicate that in 1981-82, a year after the election, the total advertising account in this province is $40.3 million, almost double what it was four years earlier.

No wonder the Treasurer is so handicapped as he seeks to find funds for the social policy envelope. He would do well to listen to my friends the member for St. Catharines and the member for Wentworth North in reviewing that budgetary appropriation. He could start by scrapping that tax grant program and going back to the more efficient, more progressive tax credit scheme that was well accepted, well in place for many years and delivered much-needed assistance to the seniors in this province who required that kind of help.

Mr. Eakins: You did not need a hot-line number either.

Mr. Conway: You did not need a hot-line number, as my friend the member for Victoria-Haliburton points out. I do not know whether anybody in Burnt River, in Cobocok or in the great village of Haliburton, which sent some of its illustrious journalists here today, can get that hot line. Perhaps the member for Victoria-

Haliburton might confide in this House. In Pembroke, in Deep River or in Deux-Rivieres one cannot get that hot line at all.

If this government is serious about efficiency factors, that is a good place to start. There are thousands of senior citizens in this province who, this very week, are bewildered about what is going to happen to their much-sought-after assistance in the coming weeks.

From the point of view of myself and my colleagues, nothing concerns us more about this throne speech than the complete want of direction in terms of new initiatives in the area of job creation. He is not here right now, but my friend the member for Wellington-Dufferin-Peel (Mr. J. M. Johnson) the other night in an especially personal and poignant way pointed out just how close the trauma of unemployment cuts for most of us.

For those members not here the other night, the member for Wellington-Dufferin-Peel talked about family experience in that connection. I thought he made the point perhaps better than any of us. I would only hope that the member would at least privately confide in the leader of this government that this kind of platitude and this kind of empty shell does little or nothing for those now almost 750,000 young, middle-aged or older Ontarians looking for work and not able to find it.

In that connection, I point to the very excellent work done by my colleagues the member for Kitchener-Wilmot (Mr. Sweeney), the member for Essex South (Mr. Mancini) and the member for Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) who, over a period of many months, worked very hard and travelled very far, often under circumstances that were not nearly as agreeable as those of our illustrious parliamentary assistant colleagues across the way, the ones who ride in a ministerial car or fly in the government's aircraft, while opposition critics find themselves somewhat less generously provided for.

The Sweeney task force report on youth unemployment, the Liberal task force on jobs for youth, is reading I would recommend to every member, including the member for London South (Mr. Walker) who has important responsibilities in this connection. I want to quote very quickly from some of the Sweeney task force update of March 1983.

"When the Liberal task force reported in June 1982, it noted that unemployment among those aged 15 to 24 was at 16.4 per cent, equal to 186,000 young people. By February 1983, scarcely eight months later, the numbers had increased further to 20.4 per cent and 211,000 persons. The unemployment rate for those 24 and under is more than twice as high as the rate for those over that age."

This Liberal task force report also draws to our attention the incredible views of the lead minister in this respect, the Provincial Secretary for Social Development and member for Scarborough East (Mrs. Birch), who on one occasion allowed as to how students and young people were perhaps not nearly as aggrieved by these economic hard times as unemployed executives. From that kind of comment, can we take any solace at initiatives which are really going to mean anything for those 200,000-odd young Ontarians out of work, people spoken of, as I said earlier, by the member for Wellington-Dufferin-Peel.

The task force goes on to point out, for example: "In 1980-81, the province of Ontario spent $58.80 on job creation per unemployed youth. This year, the ratio fell to $45.28 per youth, a decrease of 23 per cent. In essence, available funding for youth programs has dropped by almost a quarter during exactly the period when young people are most in need of help.

"The situation is not likely to improve in the summer of 1983," says the Sweeney report. "With youth unemployment expected to be near 25 per cent, it would seem logical for the Ontario government to devote extra resources to combating the problem. Indications are that this will not occur. Funding for one of the three major summer programs has already been announced and, of course, that is the so-called summer Experience program. It is sharply down.

"Experience '83 will receive $12 million, exactly the same amount as in 1982. By the government's own estimate, 300 fewer jobs will be created this year than last. From peak support of $19.5 million in the Experience '79 program, where it created 13,610 jobs, the program this year will create something in the neighbourhood of 8,500 jobs.

What are we paying the member for Brantford (Mr. Gillies) for? He sat here the other night and offered great advice and what he and his superminister are doing. The young people of Brantford city and elsewhere in this province will judge this government by the record. The record of that particular Experience or youth employment initiative is clearly inadequate.

As the curve of youth unemployment rises sharply, the curve of Ontario government support drops commensurately. That is not what we consider to be an adequate response.

4:30 p.m.

My friend the member for Essex South pointed out the other day, in what I thought was a very good release, that one of the other programs, the Ontario youth employment program whereby the government subsidizes the hourly rate to $1.45, was clearly something less than we had been led to believe. In 1982-83, although $23.4 million was provided to the Ontario youth employment program by regular budgetary means, with a further $7 million voted in supplementary appropriations, only $24 million was actually spent. This government is not even spending the money this House appropriates for youth employment at a time when the requirements are everywhere.

I want to give the government credit. I think the summer Experience program and the Ontario youth employment program are essentially good programs. In some ways they are innovative. The fault we find with this government is it will not fund these good programs to anything like the levels required by the current economic exigencies. That I think is the shame, and that I think is how and why the promise of 1981 has not been kept to those 211,000 unemployed Ontarians, at least in the spring of 1983.

The Liberal task force and the update are excellent directions for this government to consider, and in terms of policy—I do not have time to read it all—the recommendations are several. They are practical. They deal with everything from student aid to the whole question of manpower retraining and a whole series of issues in between.

The record of this government is not particularly good. I was reminded when I looked through the throne speech that about three or four years ago the government in another throne speech announced that, in consideration of increasing obligations for manpower policy, it was going to restructure the Ministry of Labour and call it the ministry of labour and manpower. What has come of that?

All I heard at the time was there was an enormous fight between the then Minister of Labour, now the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Elgie), and the Minister of Colleges and Universities (Miss Stephenson). The members know who won that. They know who would win any combat involving the Minister of Education and Colleges and Universities. That commitment, of course, has fallen into the back corners of the Deputy Premier's office. That says a lot about our expectations of these throne speeches.

As I travel across the length and breadth of the Ottawa Valley, there is nothing more compelling than the concern felt everywhere—in my own household, with younger brothers who are graduating from the educational establishments of this province, through to older people who are being thrown out of work for the first time in 35 or 40 years. This throne speech offers them nothing. This government, as my friend the member for Essex South pointed out, is not even spending the moneys this Legislature has appropriated in that regard.

I would like to say a brief word about agriculture, not because the subject deserves that since clearly it deserves a lot more, but I have never been prouder of the activities of any of my colleagues than I have been in recent days of my friend the member for Huron-Middlesex (Mr. Riddell) who, without exception, is the most knowledgeable, most articulate and most innovative farm leader in this place. I want to say, in his absence, that not many days ago my friend the member for Huron-Middlesex with my leader and the member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Elston), in a tour of the western peninsula and in the great town of Wingham, outlined the kind of agricultural initiatives that we as a party see as absolutely central to the rehabilitation and recovery of that sector.

Briefly, we are all, including the member for Lincoln (Mr. Andrewes), aware that the Ontario farm adjustment assistance program, the so-called OFAAP program, has not delivered the kind of assistance we think it could or should. For example, we think its criteria should be relaxed in the lowering of the 10 per cent equity factor. We think as well there should be—the member for Lincoln nods his head and let him stand on the side of a tougher line with the farmers of this province—

Mr. Nixon: I can hear him nodding his head.

Mr. Conway: The member can hear him nodding his head. Well, I do not know about that, but we think OFAAP should be amended immediately to allow for the inclusion of many farmers who, under the current regime, cannot take advantage of its offering.

I note that of the $80 million allocated to that program, the latest research would indicate something in the neighbourhood of only $20 million has been spent. We believe, on the basis of our best data, there is a substantial amount of money available to distribute to a farm community which, in some areas, requires it very much.

Only days ago I met a delegation in my constituency office headed by the president of the Renfrew County Federation of Agriculture. They brought the needs of agriculture in rural eastern Ontario to my attention. I want to tell my friends the members for Algoma (Mr. Wildman), Lincoln (Mr. Andrewes) and elsewhere that the problems in eastern Ontario are not often the same as they are in the more prosperous reaches of perhaps Brant county or Kent and Elgin. We have farmers who are more marginal. They need assistance that can be delivered by a more relaxed interpretation of the rules of OFAAP.

We think the time has come for this government to deliver on a young farmers' credit assistance program, a long-term credit assistance program. It is true, as my friend from Brant would say if he were on his feet, that for years this long-term credit program has been announced and promised to young people in this province. It is repeated again in this document.

Mr. Nixon: I was a young farmer when the government started it.

Mr. Conway: Exactly. The member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk (Mr. Nixon) was a young farmer.

Mr. Nixon: I was too late.

Mr. Conway: We say to the member for Don Mills (Mr. Timbrell), the putative Premier of the dying days of the Conservative dynasty, where is the program? It has been offered many times before.

I say the member for Huron-Middlesex has devised a farm strategy that incorporates real and meaningful assistance to young and middle-aged farmers that will deal with many of the current problems that can be addressed.

I say again, we take note of the fact this government has an $80-million appropriation but to this day it has spent only $18 million. Again, as we pointed out on the Ontario youth employment program, it is absolutely pointless to put money into those programs and then not spend it. We do not see any problems of expenditure when it comes to its enthusiasm for advertising.* Undoubtedly, and invariably, it goes over budget.

Mr. Ruston: There is more there.

Mr. Conway: Certainly, as the member for Essex North (Mr. Ruston) points out, there is lots of time and money for advertising but it appears that for OFAAP, for the young farmers' long-term credit, there is decidedly less enthusiasm to spend the money.

In the remaining moments I want to talk about two issues that are of interest to me. I will touch upon them briefly.

I note in the throne speech there is a paean of praise to the women of this province. I will not go on reading that part of the throne speech which invites our attention to the important role that 52 per cent of the population of Ontario, which is female, is playing. It is 52.4 per cent of our population, according to page 14 of the document.

I want to say now in the presence of my good friend and party leader, the member for London Centre (Mr. Peterson), there are two initiatives which this government could take now to deliver the kind of assistance that would alleviate critical difficulties for women, particularly older women, in one category at least.

It is not good enough to appoint the Premier's former press secretary to the chairmanship of the Ontario Status of Women Council and think it has done a good job. Boy, did I chuckle the other day when I heard Sally Barnes thought the two pages and four paragraphs in this document were quite appropriate, thank you. Can one imagine that? I know Sally fairly well. I rather like her. I certainly respect her. But as the cutting edge of independent analysis in this province on women's issues, she is hardly that.

I want to say the Leader of the Opposition in this Legislature has put on the floor of this House two specific initiatives which could do something for women. One is not to appoint the recycled Deputy Premier (Mr. Welch) into some high chair of judgement on women's issues. Clearly, that is an indication of absolute and abject bankruptcy in terms of government policy.

I thought it was interesting in this connection that a few years ago we had a throne speech, I think it was 1978, where we were told that the Ministry of Labour—that was about the same time it was getting the manpower responsibilities—was going to play the lead role. This throne speech indicates a want of confidence in the capacity of that junior ministry to do anything meaningful.

The Leader of the Opposition a year ago, and in one other case two years ago, put on the floor of this chamber two specific initiatives I want to touch upon briefly. I will read his resolution of a year ago. It stands in the name of the member for London Centre.

"That, in the opinion of this House, the government move without further delay to deal with the immediate and urgent needs of senior citizens, particularly the single elderly, by increasing the level of Gains payment to bring their incomes up to at least 60 per cent of the income level of a married couple in order that they might better be able to maintain a more adequate standard of living and thus a more dignified lifestyle, and implement other much-needed reforms to our pension system, including dropping its veto of the child-rearing drop-out provision to the Canada pension plan."

The government often asks the opposition, with justification, "What are you for?" The Leader of the Opposition has put before the government of Ontario two practical, necessary initiatives that will deliver much-needed help to women in this province. Let the Premier of this province stand in his place moments from now and say to the Leader of the Opposition and the 52.4 per cent of our population that he is really serious about doing something in respect of women's issues, that he will move immediately to support the guaranteed annual income system enrichment along the lines of this resolution and that the government of Ontario will also withdraw its veto, the only veto left, of the child-rearing drop-out provision.

If the Premier of this province and his government want to give substance to these words, let him follow and let them follow the very able advice of the Leader of the Opposition, my colleague the member for London Centre.

I see the member for Brampton (Mr. Davis) arriving and I appreciate his attendance.

Very briefly, my colleagues in the caucus as well have proposed a program we believe would be an important stimulus to the housing sector. As a member from the hardwood hills of the Ottawa Valley, where the lumber industry is an important positive influence on the economic life and times of the 50,000-odd people it is my pleasure to represent, I want to say that, when the Leader of the Opposition proposed to the government of Ontario a $145-million rental stimulation program that would encourage the construction of 15,000 units and create 26,000 person-years of employment directly, not to speak at all of the tens of thousands of man-hours of indirect employment, he tendered to the government of Ontario good, sensible, workable advice.

As I read the last pages of the throne speech, my eyes turned to the bicentennial. I do not want in the presence of more Loyalist types than I am to indulge in a great debate on that, but I was thinking of it last night as I watched the nightly news. I can imagine the summer and early fall of 1984. I can see the landscape. The sun shines across this Edenic Ontario of ours, and in royal procession are the member for Brampton, the Queen of Canada, the Pope of Rome and Walter Borosa. I can see it now, and God only knows what George Gallup and Lou Harris will have to say when it is all over.

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Robinson): Order.

Mr. Conway: I want to say in the presence of my colleague and sometime friend the member for Brampton that I am pleased he is here for the nine minutes of my remarks, because I have wanted to share with him brief observations about some of the more governmental aspects of his administration in recent days.

The member for Port Arthur (Mr. Foulds) anticipated some of my thoughts in this connection, and I will even use some of the same words. It has been my view, objective and dispassionate as it always is, that we have seen in recent months a government adrift and in many respects at war with itself.

My friend and colleague the Leader of the Opposition says this was a throne speech without vision, vigour or direction. I ask, is it any wonder, with the way the government, the executive council, has been behaving of late?

In the early days of the mid-1970s, at least in my experience here, the public disputes of members of the cabinet of Ontario were reasonably rare although often entertaining. Who among us can forget the day when the member for Ottawa South (Mr. Bennett), the then Minister of Industry and Tourism, allowed as how, with respect to the Edwardsburgh land assembly, his colleagues the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development or Housing, as it was at the time; Don Irvine, the member for Grenville-Dundas, and the former Treasurer, John White, must have "been off their nut to have bought the Edwardsburgh land assembly."

That was a reasonably rare occurrence. Now what are we treated to? A spectacle. I am going to recite quickly some of this. Mindful as I am, loyal British subject and all that, of the requirements of the British parliamentary tradition, the notion of responsible government, cabinet solidarity, common cause, and of course disagreements of a major kind on major issues, allow one the opportunity of resignation if there cannot be agreement.

What has the recent experience been? We have seen the Treasurer publicly disagree with the Premier on the issue of the government's single most significant initiative of this parliament, the purchase of Suncor. I will not embarrass the Treasurer with his public differences of opinion with the Minister of Industry and Trade (Mr. Walker)—

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I challenge the honourable member to verify there was any such public disagreement at any time. Many times there was agreement in this House.

Mr. Conway: I have speeches. I do not have time, but I will refer them to the Treasurer.

The Minister of Industry and Trade says government does not provide any real jobs and the Treasurer, responding to the Leader of the Opposition in the spring of 1982, talked about all the wonderful jobs he had been creating. I am only taking their public utterances at face value.

Much more interesting is the fact the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry), a man who has played a lead role in the constitutional debate, has publicly disagreed with the leader of the government on a critical policy question, namely the issue of the veto for Quebec. Not only has he disagreed with the Premier and the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. Wells) but, after he was slapped, he got up and did it again. Days after he was scolded and rebuked by the government leader, a headline in the Ottawa paper Le Droit on February 8 said of him, "McMurtry ne cède pas." No concession from the Attorney General though the Premier enjoins him to join the government line.

I found it interesting as well that the government House leader, the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs and the Attorney General publicly disagree with the Premier on the issue of section 133. They have indicated different opinions on a variety of occasions.

I do not want to embarrass my good friend the member for York East (Mr. Elgie) but the public dispute between the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Elgie) and the Attorney General on the role of the Ontario Securities Commission and the publication of its various and sundry reports is a matter of record.

Clearly, the Attorney General, the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing and the poor Minister of Tourism and Recreation, the member for Ottawa West (Mr. Baetz), have publicly different positions on the efficacy of municipal referenda on nuclear disarmament.

Of course, the Attorney General and his boss, the Provincial Secretary for Justice (Mr. Sterling), and the member from Timmins, the minister of natural disaster, the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Pope), all have different positions in public on freedom of information.

We know the Attorney General and the Minister of Health (Mr. Grossman) have very different opinions on Bill 127 than the czarina of all education. We know the Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson) and the Minister of Health disagree almost completely on the business of medicare and I can imagine what she has been telling him about that latest regulatory change on the health disciplines matter of opting out. I can just hear them.

We know the member for St. George (Ms. Fish) publicly rebuked the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Ashe) on the question of equalized assessment.

We have seen the public disagreement of the Minister of Natural Resources and the Minister of Northern Affairs (Mr. Bernier) on the whole question of the Indian fishing treaty. What did the Minister of Northern Affairs say? For any Politics 100 student this would be mind-blowing but, quoting the Minister of Northern Affairs, he said, "As the Premier would say, it is healthy that we have different points of view."

4:50 p.m.

Does that not say something for responsible government and cabinet solidarity? For example, we have seen the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Drea) publicly disagree with my good friend the former Liberal spear-carrier in Elgin, the distinguished long-time member from the St. Thomas area. He says, quoting the St. Thomas newspaper of recent days about the minister's decision to close the St. Thomas Adult Rehabilitation and Training Centre in this fair town: "I don't know why the minister would want to close up a program that is working as well as START. Governments do some funny things sometimes."

We all know the Minister of Community and Social Services and the Minister of Health are not talking on group home policy. We know the Minister of Community and Social Services took a Parkdale initiative affecting the Minister of Health without even the minister's knowledge of what he was doing.

I will not go on to embarrass the Premier with the views of the member for Leeds (Mr. Runciman) on metric.

We have seen the Minister of Community and Social Services disagree fundamentally with the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development (Mr. Henderson). We know that the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development and the Minister of Community and Social Services disagree on the agreement for rehabilitating the English Wabigoon communities.

I want to say to my friend the Premier, welcome home, welcome back. I am delighted he has returned here and that his fanciful voyage on the spaceship Challenger is now ended.

We have learned a lot in that intervening time. We know the former Conservative Prime Minister thinks he is a regional candidate. We know Norman Atkins has forgotten the campaign of 1971 and Allan Lawrence. It was mind-blowing to see Atkins on television lately with this effusive praise of a man about whom he felt somewhat differently about 11 or 12 years ago.

We hope the Treasurer's forecasting strength in terms of the budgetary policies in his charge are better than his knowledge of the Premier's intentions. The member for Ottawa West (Mr. Baetz) was quoted not long ago as saying, "I am 99.9 per cent sure that he'll go." Well, does that not prove what we have always thought about the member for Ottawa West? I have got to say in fairness to the Premier, I personally think one of the contributing causes in his staying here was 14 months of watching the leader of the NDP in this province and being determined not to repeat that mistake.

In conclusion, this is a government adrift, at war with itself, and we strongly encourage this House to vote with our amendment and turn to a new and fresh approach to the management of the public's affairs.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, it is always a difficult task to follow such an excellent speech and to use my limited persuasive powers to persuade the members opposite to support what the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Peterson), as he went through the receiving line after the delivering of that speech, said to His Honour: "Your Honour, that was a great speech and well delivered." He says his most realistic and objective things when he thinks he is in private and cannot be quoted. Except, I happened to be standing next to His Honour and I remember what he said.

I was unable, like the Leader of the Opposition, to hear all the comments of the leader-in-waiting of the Liberal Party as he wound up this traditional debate, and I apologize to the member for Port Arthur (Mr. Foulds), but I do have a few notes. I did get some of it from the speaker in my office, which interrupted another gathering, and I will say his speech was more interesting than the discussion I was having.

Mr. Renwick: There is a leader-in-waiting to your left.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would say to the senior citizen of the New Democratic Party, the member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick), as I said the other day, we would treat him with far greater respect and affection if he had been on this side. We would never have done that to him.

We have a feeling in our hearts for senior citizens. Not only do we have a feeling, we demonstrate it. If he decides to cross the floor of the House, I will put him on the front bench. It may be away at this end, it may be away at that end, but I assure him we will not kick him upstairs. If he brings his daughter with him, he is more welcome.

Mr. Conway: Failing that, there is always the municipal board for Kitchener.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well, I have to say with that I just go by rumours. He teases us about one Mr. Rosenberg. I understand the other was at his leader's fund-raising dinner. I know it is not true.

An hon. member: He was at yours, too.

Mr. Nixon: All he needed was $200.

Mr. T. P. Reid: He did not pay. He gave us an apartment, instead.

Hon. Mr. Davis: He is not confessing. When somebody told me that, I said the Liberal Party of Ontario would not have that gentleman at its dinner. Now, tell me I am right, that they did not. Tell me he was not there. I just cannot believe it. I guess I only assumed from the total lack of denial that—Is that why he did not mention the Rosenbergs in his address for the first time?

Mr. Conway: I was not aware that he was.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh, he was not. There were so many there. I understand. It was a John Turner-for-leadership dinner. I understand why they were there.

Get out into the real world in Brampton, I would say to the member for Renfrew North (Mr. Conway). A well-advertised fund-raising dinner for the Liberal leader of Ontario and they had a phone booth with 39 people in attendance at the dinner.

An hon. member: There were free tickets.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Hope springs eternal.

Mr. Conway: How are you doing in Brant-Oxford-Norfolk?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I will tell you, we will get more than 40, maybe not a whole lot more, but we will get more than 40.

Mr. Nixon: You cannot get more than 40.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh, yes we can. I think we can.

Mr. T. P. Reid: There aren't that many derelicts or kids under nine there.

Mr. Gillies: No, they are all Liberals out there.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I was going to say to my good friend, it takes one to know one, but I would not say that to him. I am talking in a political sense. He is a political derelict when one comes down to it. He does not even confess to being a Liberal.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I represent all the people.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I dare him in the next election, if his wife lets him run, to use the words "community party" up where he is. It will not work. I forewarn him; it will not work.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I think we have heard that once somewhere before. Joe Clark tried that one.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I listened to a number of the observations and read some, and I guess the proper thing for me, sir, is to congratulate you, as have others, on the excellent way you are governing this House.

I was delighted to hear the leader-in-waiting of the Liberal Party make the same observations. I just hope he sticks to those over the next several weeks. I assure you, sir, I have made a note of them and I intend to remind him of them on the first occasion he gets up and says, "What I said then really did not apply to what I am saying today." But I will remember.

I also, of course, would like to thank the member for Sarnia (Mr. Brandt), the distinguished gentleman from that community giving such able representation, for his eloquent and excellent address in moving the throne speech itself, and of course to the—

Mr. Van Horne: You will find another way to reward him, in the fullness of time.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Well, of course, unlike the member's party, we earn what we get on this side of the House. We really do. How did he get up into the front row?

5 p.m.

I also want to thank the member for Parry Sound (Mr. Eves) for his excellent remarks and his contribution, and the members of the government who have participated in this debate. I think it is fair to state that the members on this side of the House gave some focus to their comments and demonstrated some confidence in terms of the future of this province. They were not negative, carping or critical. They understood the realities of this province.

Mr. Conway: I heard the member for High Park (Mr. Shymko). I understood him too.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Has my friend read some from his members?

Mr. Martel: The Tory speakers were looking for cabinet posts.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I know what the member for Sudbury East is looking for, and I have done my best to accommodate; but he has failed every test.

I understand the Leader of the Opposition has a pressing engagement; I do not quarrel with that. But I offer this brief observation, because I have been in this House a shade longer than he has, a shade longer than most members of the House, and have watched the political process.

As the member from Sudbury once observed, this is not a tea party; we are not here to enjoy ourselves, although I must confess that I do enjoy myself on most occasions. But I am intrigued by the approach of the Leader of the Opposition. I hope the leader-in-waiting will convey this to him in a constructive sense.

I observed at the conclusion of the 1981 throne debate: "Not once was there a comprehensive, constructive policy enunciated by the Liberal Party of Ontario. That is one reason they are over there and we are over here." Nothing really has changed in that two-year period.

Mr. Nixon: You should have been in here listening to the last speech. You would have heard the alternative put forward very effectively by my colleague when you were having tea with your unwelcome visitors.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I never said my visitors were unwelcome, and I want to assure the honourable member that I was not having tea.

Mr. Nixon: I am not prepared to comment on what you were drinking.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I assure the member that I was consuming nothing. That will come as a surprise and disappointment to him, but in my office I am afraid that is sort of the tradition.

The Leader of the Opposition actually realized this fact on September 25 last year when he was addressing the members of his own party, the Ontario New Liberals, in London. He stated, and I think he was right in this observation, "It is no accident that there is no longer a single provincial Liberal government today." That obviously was a very factual statement made by the Leader of the Opposition and one that reflects the malaise of that party, which has been a great party in this province.

At the same function in London, he urged young Liberals to be "agents of democratic revolution." I have to say to the acting leader of the party, that was not the impression the Leader of the Opposition created when he was interviewing the chairman of the board of Norcen on David Peterson's Ontario. Did the acting leader see that tape?

Mr. Conway: No.

Hon. Mr. Davis: No? I have some advice for him. As leader-in-waiting, he should have a look at that tape.

On Tuesday this week, I understand, the Leader of the Opposition, because he really did not have any relevant issue to raise since I was not here, said, "We are becoming a province without a Premier." I was not here Monday and Tuesday; I make no apologies for that fact. But I want the leader-in-waiting to convey to the Leader of the Opposition that I am going to be here as Premier. I guess the most disturbed persons yesterday at 10 minutes before one o'clock were the leader of the Liberal Party and the leader of the New Democratic Party of this province.

Another great quote was in the London Free Press again. The leader of the Liberal Party was quoted as saying: "Those guys, Tories, can do more after tea than I can do in a lifetime in opposition." Hallelujah! I agree with him. It is true.

He was quoted by the Canadian Press wire service—I just want to tell the members that I pay attention to what their leader tells me—on January 21, 1982, as stating, "Stupid policies will hurt this party in the future as they have in the past." I say, "Amen." It is true.

I have a lot more but I do not have time. I just suggest to the leader-in-waiting that in my political experience, while I have never had the responsibility of leading a party in opposition—

Mr. Martel: Is that why you wouldn't run federally?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Yes, I gave it thought. I say very sincerely that there is great merit in attacking the policies of a government in power. That is the responsibility of an opposition party. But I also know there has been a growing tendency to become very personal in terms of attacks on ministers.

I would ask the leader-in-waiting to talk to a law class at a faculty of law not too far distant from here and sense what its impressions were when the leader of his party attacked the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) of this province in a very personal way. I think he will find this also in terms of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Elgie).

I happen to know what the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations has gone through in the discharge of his responsibilities. It is fair to be critical of his ministry's function. It is fair to be critical of what the policies may be. But to say that he does not believe him or he does not trust him when he gives his best information to the House is not the way, in my humble opinion, the political process should work.

I do not say for a moment that ministers of the crown are above making mistakes. I cannot think of any, but sure, they make them; I make them. To err is to be human, and we are human on this side of the House. We do not err too often. But I do not think it helps the Liberal Party of Ontario to create the perception of these personal attacks upon individual ministers of the crown. I have tried to stay away from that in terms of my own political experience.

I will give members some factual information. Interjection.

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, I was not. I was quoting exactly what the member's leader said. I did not make any comments.

I will give members some factual information. They can be critical of differences of opinion that may exist on this side of the House. He can exaggerate them, I say to the leader-in-waiting, but it is the public perception that counts and he should know that in terms of public perception the Liberal Party of Ontario is at one of its lowest ebbs in recent political history.

Mr. Van Horne: Baloney.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It is true.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I want to say, before its members take too much delight, that the New Democratic Party is not much better off. I read what the leader of the New Democratic Party said about my being distracted by the leadership of our federal party. I confess that I was. I took two days—actually it was a day and a half. I gave it my undivided attention.

But I have the whole chronology of what happened when the member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) announced his resignation. I know exactly how many weeks it took the present leader of the NDP to decide whether he would move from the major leagues to the minor leagues. I know how long it took him to decide whether he would run for a seat in this House. I know how long he sat up there leading the fortunes of his party, 30 feet away from his responsibilities as a member. He should never speak to me about being distracted, because he did not have the foggiest idea of what he wanted to do then; I am not sure he has the foggiest idea of what he wants to do now.

5:10 p.m.

What intrigues me—I say this to the leader of the New Democrats—is a quote I have got for him.

Mr. Martel: Is this a quote from the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Timbrell)?

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, this is a quote from a very prominent member of the New Democratic Party. I will not identify him yet. He was commenting on the results in the 1968 election. Nothing really has changed. I do not believe much changes in history. "The almost unbearable self-righteousness of the NDP was revealed in all of its glory." That was not Stephen Lewis. That was not any other noted journalist. That was the member for York South (Mr. Rae) in the University of Toronto Varsity in 1968, and nothing has changed.

Mr. T. P. Reid: They have got more self-righteous.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: What does the member mean, who was in charge? I was Minister of University Affairs. I identified him then as potentially an intelligent young man who might have the wisdom to become a member of this party, but knowing full well he never would; so I kept track of him. Does he want some more? No, I am taking too much time.

Some hon. members: More.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Can I come for a few moments to—

Mr. Wildman: To the throne speech.

Mr. Breaugh: Don't be distracted.

Hon. Mr. Davis: No, I do not want to be distracted. If it were not for the distractions I would not have half as much fun.

Mr. Martel: You have nothing to say.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The member for Sudbury East is just about provoking me.

Dealing with some of the objectives in the throne speech, I listened very carefully to the observations about youth unemployment and the activities of the task force. I will make no comment. I think the leader-in-waiting was endeavouring to be constructive. I respect that. I am not sure how helpful the ideas were, but I think the motivation was fine.

I said earlier today that in terms of particulars, it is necessary for the members of this House to wait until the presentation of the Treasurer's budget on Tuesday of the coming week. I think I am fairly objective, and I do not minimize the depth of the economic problems this province and this whole country have faced, but I said a year ago and I believe it to be true that we are emerging from the economic difficulty. We have weathered it better than many other places in terms of the impact.

I heard the member for Renfrew North (Mr. Conway)—and I will not tease him any more about being the leader-in-waiting; we all know it is true, so there is no point stating the obvious any further—and the observations he made about my neighbour the member for Wellington-Dufferin-Peel (Mr. J. M. Johnson), who represents that great riding that takes in Caledon.

I do not think any of us in the past six to eight months has not experienced individual problems presented to us in our constituency offices or here at the House in terms of the impact of the present economic situation upon the lives of individuals. For me, as head of the government, it has been a very difficult period. While we here are, I hope gainfully employed, I think we can have a sensitivity, an understanding and an awareness of what these people are experiencing.

Once again I can fairly state that this government, in terms of what it has attempted to do, has demonstrated a sensitivity. Sure, it can be argued that we could do more, that we should spend more, but at the same time we have a responsibility to retain some measure of balance and some capacity in terms of fiscal management.

I do not minimize the present situation, but at the same time I really have a genuine measure of optimism. I look at the auto sector. While not as deeply involved as the member for Essex North (Mr. Ruston), the member for Essex South (Mr. Mancini), the member for Oakville (Mr. Snow) and the member for Oshawa (Mr. Breauth), we do have some modest interest in the great riding of Brampton.

Mr. Cooke: Who owns that company?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Listen, I make no apologies. I went to see the Prime Minister of France, and I said to him, "Prime Minister, irrespective of your political philosophies, the more you invest in Brampton, the more I will take." I make no apologies for it. I say to the financial critic for the New Democrats that I have listened to him and I have listened to others who, over the past two years, have said how Windsor is going down the tubes, the auto industry is going down the tubes and we are never going to recover, we are never going to survive.

I ask the member to look at the figures today. I ask if he is prepared to make the same observations today, because the reality is that the auto industry, particularly in Ontario, shows real signs of recovery. In terms of any percentage figures, we have a higher level of employment in the auto sector in this province than does any state of the union. This is true. Partly that is because of good management by government and partly because of product allocation, which turns out to be beneficial. I accept that. However, there was a readiness to write them off a year and a half ago. In fact, it has not happened. When I am speaking about the auto sector—

Mr. Martel: Things are so good in St. Catharines.

Hon. Mr. Davis: There are problems in many places. There are still problems in Sudbury; I accept that.

Mr. Martel: Still? They are monumental.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I accept it. Briefly, because I did not have much time, I read the member's presentation; I read the task force report that he publicized today. I do not know who was smoking what when they drafted it, but ask him please to analyse the mathematics of it. It is great to say, "We are going to spend $11 million" or whatever it is "over five years." The members are telling the people of Ontario they are going to nationalize just about everything in sight, but they should tell everybody how they are going to afford it.

Mr. Martel: That is Jim Gordon.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The members probably have not even read the document; they probably have not read their own policy paper. Oh, they have not read it. It only came out this morning; they have not had the time.

Dealing with the auto sector—and I am not totally comfortable in these approaches, because they can appear to be contradictory—I have said in many speeches, as have the Treasurer and the Minister of Industry and Trade (Mr. Walker), that it is fundamental that this province export and be competitive. We have to understand that to survive economically we are going to have to deal with our competitors in a constructive, friendly fashion.

While there may appear to some members of the House to be some measure of contradiction when we say in the throne speech that we would support particular measures for the auto sector, I put it very simplistically on this basis: I think we are dealing with a market situation that cannot be described as being totally free in that sense of the word. Ontario does not have the capacity to adjust the value of the Canadian dollar. We are not in a position, as are some nations, to alter our dollar values to make our product more competitive in the marketplace.

The auto sector is so fundamental to the economic wellbeing of Ontario and, through that, of Canada that I am prepared to support certain initiatives that do not protect our auto sector but rather give it a better opportunity to compete, to adjust and to see that it gets a fair share in terms of what is happening in other countries.

I was in western Europe very briefly and talked to some people at the European Economic Community, who are great believers in free trade. I said to them, "How many automobiles do you allow in from the Far East?" The figures are staggering. Some countries allow 2,000 units and some 3,000; one allows 5,000 units. These people believe in free trade, but they have policies that restrict free access.

In Australia, when I was there for business purposes, I found intriguing that in a country that has some feeling about "competitive nature and free trade" there is an 85 per cent Australian content rule so that their auto sector can survive.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: We have been saying that for years.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Some of the positions of the opposition are a shade contradictory; those of the government are always consistent.

While I think it is fundamental for Ontario business and all of us to understand that our ability to compete economically must be geared to an international situation, we cannot fight that. It is fundamental as well that we recognize that this industry is fundamental. While some opposite might point out a contradiction, and I do not think they will, I hope they understand the rationale behind it.

When I am speaking of this I should point out it is fundamental, as we look down the road not just in the next two months or six months, that as we see signs of economic recovery taking place we have to understand something fundamental. It is not a popular thing to say, but all of us must maintain a real measure of moderation in terms of what we expect to take out of an economic upturn.

The competition out there is, without question, tough. We have to understand what is happening in countries where we compete. We have to look at the experience in the United States. Whether the people over there like it or not, they happen to be our best customers, they also happen to be our strongest competitors. There must be a degree of moderation. We must understand that when the economy picks up, and when profits begin to improve, if they are not reinvested the recovery will not be sustained.

My late mother always said "moderation in all things." She was referring to another matter, but I think it applies. It is essential for Ontarians and Canadians to exercise a degree of moderation. This has to be understood by the public sector, by the private sector and by government.

I listened to some of the observations of the member for Renfrew North in terms of financial management. The Treasurer will deal with this on Tuesday, but I may not get the opportunity because I will not be speaking immediately after Tuesday.

I have to say that on any objective assessment, one reason this province has been able to give some encouragement to a recovery, one reason we have been able to maintain a degree of stability through these difficult months, is because this province happens to have the best-managed government of any government in Canada. I say that without fear of contradiction. It is not an easy responsibility.

Mr. Nixon: You believe in moderation but not in humility.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I would say to the member that if I have one attribute it has always been humility. He may not agree with that.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: There are some days. I know exactly the quote the member is prepared to use but it is very old. I have a better one for him but I will not tell him today.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I tell the member for Kitchen (Mr. Breithaupt) that he worries about the age of this government. I wish, and I know he wishes, that he was as vital, as enthusiastic, as energetic, as confident and as capable as the members on this side of the House because if he felt that way he might be over here instead of over there. Look at this group of people. They are energetic, enthusiastic, confident and capable.

[Applause]

Hon. Mr. Davis: To retain the members' modesty, they are not to applaud themselves. They can applaud me but not themselves.

When I say this about the need to understand the financial management, the Treasurer is pressed and every minister of the crown is pressed, as the members opposite are, by individuals, groups or organizations seeking more by way either of assistance or encouragement from government.

Part of our responsibility, unfortunately, is to say "no" on occasion. Part of our responsibility is to say to people for whom we have great sympathy, "We cannot afford it." That has been a policy of this government and one reason we have been able to manage the affairs of this province effectively in a financial sense. I want to give the Treasurer full credit because I do not sense the members of the opposition will do so on Tuesday even if, in their heart of hearts, they would like to do so.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot keep track of the clock. How much longer have I got?

Mr. Speaker: The Premier has 21 minutes and 40 seconds.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I will not take 21 minutes. Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I expect to see ads go across there any time.

Mr. Rae: It won't be long. We will be paying for them.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The Minister of Tourism and Recreation (Mr. Baetz) will have "Yours to Discover." The members opposite should have that on their side right now, "Yours to Discover," or "Preserve It, Conserve It."

I want to deal with one other part of the throne speech that—

Mr. Martel: You have not dealt with any yet.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I have. I have dealt with the auto sector, the economy and youth employment. I do have some words of advice for the member for Renfrew North. Before he comments on what this government is doing with respect to women, on the policies that will be emerging, and on the fact we will have some definitive proposals for the public of this province, before he sets himself up as an expert knowing anything about it, he ought to change his marital status so he can speak with some modest degree of knowledge.

I have said this to Ronald too. That was friendly advice.

Mr. Wildman: Are you serious? Susan Fish, do you agree with that?

Hon. Mr. Davis: What do you mean? Susan, stay away from him.

I want to deal with the reference in the throne speech to certain initiatives the government will be proposing with respect to altering the legislation in the area of French education. I want to deal with it simply and in a very constructive fashion. Some have suggested there is a modest degree of contradiction in the proposal the government will be bringing forward during the course of this Legislature and positions the government had taken in previous constitutional discussions.

I would like to remind all members of the House that the determination and initiative taken by this province to include in the Canadian Constitution the education of young people in either of the two official languages of Canada where numbers warrant was done to encourage some of our sister provinces to participate. It has been the law of this province for some years that where sufficient numbers or heads of families are together, the school boards will provide an educational experience. We have done it in a way I think has been acceptable, in a way that has been understood and in a way that has been sensitive.

It has been the view of the government, and I say this as a personal view as well, that we have reached a point in this province where, in the field of special education for instance, if a youngster was in Orangeville and the Dufferin board was not able to offer a course in special education of some kind, he was able to purchase that service from the Peel board or vice versa.

It is not a new principle. It is not unique. What we are doing in this proposal is extending as a matter of principle to the francophone youngsters and the anglophone youngsters, in those areas where they constitute the minority, the opportunity for an education in either of the two official languages of Canada as a matter of legislated right here in the province.

Mr. Bradley: I did not hear about that in the Carleton by-election.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The member for St. Catharines (Mr. Bradley) misunderstood. Some day I will try to explain it to him and to the member for Renfrew North. I hope to be able to do that on a personal basis because, with great respect, the member's former leader—I will not get into that since he is not here. The member does not understand it.

Mr. Bradley: I understand very well. I saw—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Come on. The member does not understand it because he is disappointed he lost.

Hon. Mr. Pope: Did you hear what Stuart Smith said in Timmins?

Hon. Mr. Davis: That is right, and what your friend said up in Mattawa.

I am trying to deal with this without being controversial. I can remember what some of his members said in Essex if he wants. I will not, but do not raise that with me.

Mr. Bradley: Don't set yourself up as a man of virtue on that issue. I saw those—

Hon. Mr. Davis: Come on. I would never be as presumptuous as the member is to set myself up as a person of virtue on any issue. I do it out of conscience and out of sensitivity. The member should not let his ego get in the way of his own good judgement. I mean it.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: Take some time to talk about the unemployed for a moment.

Hon. Mr. Davis: If the member opposite does not think this is a serious issue, I regret that. I want the record to state that the member for Scarborough West (Mr. R. F. Johnston) does not believe the education of francophone youngsters is a serious issue. Is that what the member is saying?

Mr. R. F. Johnston: Don't give me that garbage. I am talking about the unemployed.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I will come to the unemployed, but can I not deal with this issue? Is this not an issue important to the member's party? Then do not interrupt.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: Certainly it is. We know where you have stood on it for the last 20 years, so don't start that on us. We know where you have stood on this for a long time.

Mr. Rae: Don't get on that stuff.

5:30 p.m.

Hon. Mr. Davis: He started it. Tell the member for Scarborough West just to relax, sit back, and let me finish.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: Don't get into name calling. Deal with some substance.

Hon. Mr. Davis: No one is name calling. The member is the only one who has that tendency.

I recognize sensitivity, but this is a matter that is important not just in terms of the educational rights of these young people, but in terms of a principle and a policy for the Legislature of this province.

I will not deal with the other aspects which will be more complicated in terms of what is going to be presented, in terms of school board structure and the responsibilities of the minister. To me, the significant aspect of what was contained in the throne speech under that section was a simple, basic right, and that is the right of a francophone or anglophone youngster to have an educational program in his or her own language. That is something we will see carried out.

[Applause]

Mr. McClellan: On the applause meter, I would say that is a minus three.

Hon. Mr. Pope: I didn't hear you applaud.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I did not see him applaud at all. I thought the member for Cornwall (Mr. Samis) would show some measure of enthusiasm. I certainly know the member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick), if he were still on the front bench, would have applauded.

I will not deal at length with further economic discussions because we will have ample opportunity on Tuesday.

I would like to finalize my observations by going back to the member for Renfrew North when he was observing about what he felt were certain contradictions emanating from ministers of the crown. I have been Premier for 12 years and I was a minister for nine years. I have heard this sort of tactic used before.

The member from Sudbury used to do it with eloquence. He used to do it with a certain flair. He had a style. I sat there and listened. He reorganized the total front bench and then sat down knowing in his own heart of hearts that he or his party would never be in a position to assume the responsibility for the actual judgements that are made on this side of the House.

Things have not changed. I have listened. I have tried to encourage their co-operation. I am earnestly seeking their support for this enlightened throne speech and what it means for the future of this province. I know in advance I have failed because nothing has changed. The New Democrats are captives of their own theology. They have that tunnel vision which has no real future in terms of the people of this province.

I look at the Liberal Party or community party of Ontario. I see contradictions, I see lack of leadership, I see no cohesion in caucus and I see them being there five years hence. The faces may change but the policies will not alter and this government will be here for some years hence.

Mr. Speaker: On Tuesday, April 19, Mr. Brandt moved, seconded by Mr. Eves, that an humble address be presented to the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor as follows:

To the Honourable John Black Aird, an officer of the Order of Canada, one of Her Majesty's counsel learned in the law, bachelor of arts, doctor of laws, Lieutenant Governor of Ontario:

We, Her Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the Legislative Assembly of the province of Ontario, now assembled, beg leave to thank Your Honour for the gracious speech Your Honour has addressed to us.

On Thursday, April 21, Ms. Copps moved, seconded by Mr. Nixon, that the motion be amended by adding the following thereto:

"This House, however, regrets that the speech from the throne fails to address the most serious problems facing Ontario today, reflecting a total lack of government initiative, leadership and policy necessary to resolve these concerns, namely, the continuing unemployment crisis, particularly among this province's youth; the pressing need for a definitive industrial strategy, particularly the need for massive training and retraining programs; the urgent need for affordable housing in this province; the preservation of Ontario's health, social and educational sectors, and particularly support for hospitals, day care, services for the elderly and post-secondary institutions; the continuing problems facing farmers during these recessionary times. Therefore, this House declares its lack of confidence in the government."

Today Mr. Foulds moved, seconded by Mr. Rae, that the amendment to the motion for an address in reply to the speech of the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor be amended by adding after the word "time," and before the words, "Therefore, this House declares its lack of confidence in the government," the following:

"And further, this House regrets that the provincial government has utterly failed to respond to the bankruptcy of Liberal government policies and has instead simply produced a vague and aimless speech worthy of liberalism itself rather than acting decisively to provide jobs, health and housing for Ontario's people."

The first question to be decided is the amendment to the amendment to the motion.

5:47 p.m.

The House divided on the amendment to the amendment by Mr. Foulds, which was negatived on the following vote:

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I would like to indicate the business for the remainder of this week and for next week.

Tonight we will deal with legislation; first, committee of the whole on Bill 7, followed by second reading and committee of the whole, if necessary, on Bills 3, 4, 5 and 13. If there is time, we will have second reading of Bill 2 and committee of the whole, if necessary.

Mr. Conway: The waste bill?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Not tonight.

Tomorrow, Friday, May 6, we will continue any legislation that is not completed this evening.

On Monday, May 9, we will also continue with any legislation that has not been completed, and then as time permits we will debate government notice of motion 6 standing on the order paper respecting concurrence in the appointment of the chairman of the Commission on Election Contributions and Expenses.

On Tuesday, May 10, routine proceedings will begin as usual at 2 p.m. When they are completed, there will be a short recess until precisely 4 p.m., when the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) will make his budget address. As indicated before, the House will not sit next Tuesday evening.

On Wednesday, May 11, any of the usual committees may sit.

On Thursday, May 12, budget replies by both opposition Treasury critics will be in the afternoon, and in the evening we will begin the budget debate, which will also continue on Friday.

The House recessed at 6 p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

Thursday, May 5, 1983

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

House in committee of the whole.

TORONTO FUTURES EXCHANGE ACT

Consideration of Bill 7, An Act to incorporate the Toronto Futures Exchange.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Mitchell moves that clause 1(c) of the bill be amended by adding at the commencement thereof, "commodity."

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Chairman, it may be that in this some explanation would be needed, because the term "commodity futures contract" and the term "commodity futures option" are apparently to have similar meaning. Are we now adding a third item so that we are reading "commodity," "commodity futures contract" and "commodity futures option" to have the same meaning? Is that the intention?

Mr. Mitchell: Mr. Chairman, was a further amendment, an eighth amendment numbered 1(f), circulated to the honourable member, perhaps late yesterday?

Mr. Breithaupt: I received a series of amendments that came to the office yesterday.

Mr. Mitchell: There was an amendment 1(f), which is an addition. The member will find that amendment 1(f) brings the whole thing in line following his question.

This is a housekeeping amendment to coincide with the introduction of the term "commodity" in subsection 4(1) of the bill.

Mr. Breithaupt: So this in effect makes three component parts in clause 1(c) with respect to the amendment?

Mr. Mitchell: That it does.

Mr. Chairman: Will somebody read it the way it should be read now?

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Chairman, it would appear that clause 1(c) would read as follows: "'commodity,' 'commodity futures contract' and 'commodity futures option' have the same meaning as in the Commodity Futures Act."

Mr. Mitchell: That is correct.

Mr. Chairman: Thank you.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Chairman, the honourable member who just spoke is correct. I am sure he understands that there is a definition of commodities, commodity futures contract and commodity futures option in the Commodity Futures Act. This puts the definition, therefore, exactly in line with that act.

This act would be incomplete if we did not give a definition for "commodities." Nobody would know what one was talking about if one were talking about commodities. So it is very important that we have the definition in there if this futures exchange is going to work.

It is precisely for that reason that we will vote against the insertion of the word "commodity." We oppose this bill in principle and, therefore, we do not particularly want to see it working well. But if the bill is going to work it is necessary to have the definition of "commodity" in the Commodity Futures Act.

The definition is: "Commodity means, whether in the original or a processed state, any agricultural product, forest product, product of the sea, mineral, metal, hydrocarbon fuel, currency or precious stone or other gem, and any goods, article, service, right or interest, or class thereof, designated as a commodity under the regulation."

We find that makes a very broad definition and the Commodities Futures Exchange will be able to deal in all those items, plus anything the minister may want to add in the regulations.

Precisely because there are futures exchanges around the world, if there is no futures exchange here, there is still going to be the trading necessary under the present system.

We should be moving away from the principles of manipulators in the market and towards international futures agreements that put stability into prices. Therefore, we have voted against the bill and will be voting against this amendment as well, because it makes the bill more functional and it is the function we are not in agreement with.

8:10 p.m.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Chairman, we will support the bill. We recognize the necessity and the requirements for a commodities futures exchange. The member for Welland-Thorold (Mr. Swart), in his lonely approach to speaking on this bill, has missed the requirement to have this kind of framework in place to deal properly and appropriately with these circumstances in which the agricultural and other operations of the world exist. We will be supporting this amendment.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of Mr. Mitchell's amendment will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the ayes have it.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Mitchell moves that clause 1(f) of the bill be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"'Futures member' means a member of the corporation who conducts the business of trading commodities, options on commodities, commodity futures contracts and commodity futures options and who is admitted to membership in accordance with the bylaws."

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Chairman, I am prepared to accept the amendment.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Chairman, we also will accept this amendment. It is a definition that does not fundamentally affect the bill. It is a necessary definition.

Motion agreed to.

Section 1, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 2 and 3 agreed to.

On section 4:

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Mitchell moves that subsection 4(1) of the bill be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"The object of the corporation is to operate an exchange in Ontario for trading in commodities, options on commodities, commodity futures contracts and commodity futures options by the members of the corporation and other persons authorized under subsection (2)."

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Chairman, in this circumstance, the changes with respect to the option of the corporation seem to be appropriate as they now include the three portions of the terms that were referred to in the original definition section. I am quite prepared to accept the amendment.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Chairman, I realize this change is made to incorporate into this subsection the word "commodities" as well as "commodity futures contracts" etc., and once again it is necessary. However, the principle is outlined thoroughly in this one section that tells what the commodity futures is all about, and because of that we will vote against this section.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Chairman, there has been some discussion about this before. Our party expressed concern about the nature of the bill at the time it came up some time ago for second reading. I want to say a few words about what is really happening here.

The government has moved once again and has decided to accept the representations made from Bay Street with respect to the creation of this commodity futures market, the Toronto Futures Exchange, which will be linked to the Toronto Stock Exchange but which will be to some extent independent of it.

In the course of this, not only will there be trading in commodities and in commodity futures but also, and I believe this is new for Ontario, in options on commodity futures which, as the parliamentary assistant to the minister knows, are a means of gambling with almost no money down at all. When you buy an option, you pay a very low price. If it goes up, you make a lot and if it goes down, you lose virtually everything put in.

What the government has done is to add another financial or gambling instrument into the structure of Toronto's financial network. It seems to me an argument could be made that perhaps this is a sensible thing. That might be so if this had been a government which over the course of 10 years, or the time prior to the creation of the futures exchange, had been actively at work to make sure there was a future for commodities in Ontario.

Instead, what we have is a government that is prepared to create a commodity futures market so people who live in North York or Forest Hill, people who want to gamble or, as some would argue, perform a function in the market, although I am not sure what it is, people who want to play with money around real commodities are facilitated, while people who simply want to produce commodities in Ontario and make a decent living from that find themselves unable to sell their commodities. They find the commodities they sell are not price-supported; therefore, they do not have assurance against the kind of vicissitudes of the market which have existed for so long. They find this is a government that is not prepared to back them up.

A few days ago I spent a bit of time in England visiting my wife's relatives. When I was there, it seemed to me that under Margaret Thatcher one could see very much the same kind of thing we can see here in Ontario under the Progresssive Conservative government. Mrs. Thatcher and her government are very much prisoners of the City of London. They are very concerned about the status of sterling, the status of the Bank of England and the status of the financial and commodity markets in the City of London. They are so transfixed about what happens in London and in the financial industry in that country that they have completely forgotten about the need to ensure there is a future for commodities and manufactured products and the people who make them in Britain. That is a situation that is happening here as well.

If there were to be a balanced policy, then the government would say: "We have an intention of creating a market for commodity futures, but first we are going to make sure the men and women, the families and the communities who depend on those commodities are going to have a decent, assured future and that will be our priority. We are going to take action with respect to all those miners who have been more than half a year without work in Sudbury to ensure they can have a decent future for themselves, their children and their families. We are going to take action for those farmers who were so hard hit by the increase in"—

Mr. Chairman: I have allowed the honourable member to continue on at great length. I think it is time I got him back to the subsection.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Chairman, this is very much on the subsection. It says, "The object of the corporation is to operate an exchange in Ontario for trading in commodities, options on commodities, commodity futures contracts and commodity futures options by the members of the corporation and other persons authorized under subsection (2)."

Not only is this a broad definition, but also it is this kind of commodities trading which in the past has been used to bankrupt decent, ordinary people who are producers of corn, oats, barley and other commodities. All commodities are provided for in this legislation.

You may find it uncomfortable, Mr. Chairman, but perhaps occasionally in this House we should pause, step back and look at what can only be described as mistakes that have been made in the past in terms of the victimization of ordinary people by the powers of finance capital. I am sorry to use those words, but that is what is facilitated by the creation of this futures market.

The minister's parliamentary assistant can say, "There are some economies in the world that are inflexible, that have no give and take at all and that do not work particularly well because they do not have some mechanisms such as the mechanisms that are proposed in the futures exchange." That may be, but that is not the situation here. In this province, are we to give priority to the needs of people or to the needs of finance?

What this amendment does—and I hope the parliamentary assistant responds to this—is simply to underline the intention of this government to make sure the people who deal in pieces of paper and make fortunes therefrom will have priority over the needs of people who deal in real things and are finding their existence very tough.

I found the whole procedure, the whole series of events that surrounded the exemption from action against Conrad Black not curious at all when it comes to the priorities of this government, when it comes to somebody whose only useful purpose in society has been to dicker around with trading in shares and trading in commodities. People like that could come in, they could talk to the minister, they could get exemption. They could do all kinds of things that would be quite unconscionable. On the other hand, when it is somebody such as one of those poor farmers who in the end had to resort to direct action because nothing else was around—

Mr. Ruston: There are a lot of farmers in Ottawa.

Mr. Cassidy: I have the richest farm land in the province in my riding of Ottawa Centre. I hope the honourable member will recognize that. When it comes to the needs of those farmers, people who have been driven to the wall by high interest rates, by high costs of inputs and by inadequate returns for their products, can they walk in to see the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry)? Can they even dream of having an interview with the minister of whatever it is and with one or two of his assistants to bring their plight before him? No, they cannot.

It seems to me that is the kind of priority we are getting from the Conservative government. We have seen today or yesterday how the actions and the attitudes of this government, and in particular of its leader, eventually catch up with them. It is poetic justice to me that it was the inaction of the Premier (Mr. Davis) with respect to the rights of Franco-Ontarians and the way the Premier treated the legitimate concerns of western Canada that finally came up to haunt him and to drop him from becoming leader of the Progressive Conservative Party and possibly Prime Minister of Canada.

Mr. Chairman: The member for Ottawa Centre is going a little far afield.

Mr. Cassidy: I am just about through, Mr. Chairman. I only want to suggest that the priority this government gives to the needs of financiers over the needs of ordinary people is going to catch up with it one of these days.

Mr. Mitchell: Mr. Chairman, I feel I have to respond to the member for Ottawa Centre in that there is a farmer in this Legislature who spoke on second reading. I refer to the member for Kent-Elgin (Mr. McGuigan). I think he defended this for the benefit of the farmers out there. I stand to be corrected, but I seem to recall him speaking very emphatically in support of this bill. The bill is a form of protection to make sure that what is being carried on at present becomes regulated.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Chairman, it was interesting to note that the interjection by the member for Ottawa Centre comes from what I believe is the exact same seat where Dr. Shulman, the former member for High Park as it then was, sat during his years in this Legislature. During those years I recall he was quite a champion of a variety of economic opportunities from which we read that he did rather well.

Certainly one is told that in this life the best way to make a million dollars is to write a book about making a million dollars, or by starting one's own new religion. Those two things aside, the mechanics of operation that clearly exist in the marketplace to balance and deal with the expectation of commodity futures are the realities of the world in which we live. To ignore that is something we would do at our peril.

As I recall, the parliamentary assistant quite clearly reminded this House of the learned and particularly professional contribution my colleague the member for Kent-Elgin brought to the second reading debate on this subject.

You may recall, Mr. Chairman, that after my introductory remarks and those of the member for Welland-Thorold it was indeed a delight to hear someone who knew something about the bill speak. Accordingly we welcomed not only some additional and intelligent comments but also the necessity to deal with these problems of agricultural development in a balanced and reasonable way.

Certainly the whole object of this bill, which is in subsection 4(1), is something with which we on this side of the House can agree, because we know the necessity of planning and dealing with commodities in Ontario.

In spite of the cri du coeur from the member for Ottawa Centre, we will be supporting this amended section.

Mr. Chairman: I am going to ask the member for Kent-Elgin (Mr. McGuigan) to—

Mr. Nixon: Repeat his speech?

Mr. Chairman:—to have a little kick at the can here.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Chairman, is there rotation here?

Mr. Chairman: I did not see anybody stand up over there.

Mr. McGuigan: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I hesitate to enter this debate because I felt that—

Mr. Swart: When will you recognize me, Mr. Chairman? I will make it easy for you.

Mr. McGuigan: Mr. Chairman, I really do not want to repeat that speech and I hesitate to enter the fray at all because I thought it was evident to anyone who calls himself a financial expert that the honourable member has been spouting a great deal of nonsense as to breaking and enslaving the farmers of Ontario.

I would certainly concur with him that I would not want to be part of any bill that was going to do that, but what we are talking about here is simply a system that is a part of doing business.

Today, a farmer planting beans or corn or a number of these main crops in Ontario could contract that crop on the futures market at a pretty reasonable price. He could calculate his costs, because he knows what his fertilizer, gasoline and all those things are going to cost him right now. He could work out his expected yield and he could determine by selling it on the futures market today at a certain price that he would come up with a profit.

Of course, if he wanted to gamble, he would not go into the futures market. He would accept whatever price was available in the fall, be it high or be it low.

When one is talking about gambling—and I think in the last debate our friend referred to farming as something akin to prostitution, although I do not know that prostitution and gambling have any connection—the greatest gambler in the world is the farmer.

He plants his crop and gambles that in the fall there is going to be a certain price on the world market available to him. He can decide then whether he wants to sell it in the cash market, or he can gamble further and store it on his own farm or in a hired elevator, hoping that a few months down the road the price will be higher. But he is dealing in a gambling operation; one takes the gambling out by referring to the futures commodities market.

Just to give a hypothetical example: suppose someone came up with a new recipe for breakfast food that had been test marketed and tried by the nutrition people and the health people and they decided there was a good market for it.

Then he would go for financing and he would tell his bankers: "Well, it is going to cost so many thousands or millions of dollars to put in this processing line. It will cost certain amounts for advertising. There should be, according to our figures, a profit when this is brought to the market some two or three years down the road from now."

Of course, the banker would say: "That is fine based on the prices you have shown us for the basic raw material, but how do you know that two years down the road you can buy that basic raw material at the prices you are currently quoted?"

Of course, the person could answer: "Well, I can lock myself into a contract right now that will tell me two years from now I can buy that commodity at that price and, therefore, I have taken the gambling out of it. I am going to make my profit simply on the narrow margin between the cost of operation and the selling price." One takes the gambling out of it.

8:30 p.m.

Someone else, of course, assumes that gamble. They are the people I think our friends are disparaging, those people who have money and are willing to take some chances. They provide the liquidity for the whole market system because, when I deliver my corn in the fall of the year, I do not phone the elevator and say, "Are you accepting corn today? "Are you paying for corn today?" I do not bother with that. I know they are accepting corn today and I know they are paying for corn today. I go in and I can sell my grain on that cash market for the cash price of that day.

Certainly, that money does not come out of the huge endless pool of money that operator has because they simply do not have that kind of money. We are talking about millions and billions of dollars. That liquidity comes from the people who are willing to take a chance and they serve a very useful purpose.

I have some hesitation myself about the matter of options because, if there is anything evil in that system, it has to be in the matter of options. That is a highly levered situation. Anybody who goes into an option contract and does not know what he is doing is laying himself open to committing financial suicide or laying himself open to making millions of dollars. As long as it is done for a useful purpose, it does serve a purpose.

If I could go back to the case I mentioned, the fellow with the breakfast food. The banker might say to him: "You've only got so much money to invest in that two-year contract. What are you going to do beyond that?" He could say, "I have taken out options to go beyond that because, for a small amount of money, I can buy a lot of options." Of course, it is dangerous, as I explained. Nevertheless, there are commercial applications for it. I certainly assume that under this act and the other act there are guards and systems in there to prevent abuse of the system.

Remember a few years ago when the Hunt brothers decided to corner the silver market? They got silver up to about $50 an ounce. I am not aware of the exact price today, but it is something in the $5 or $6 range. They decided to corner the total silver supply in the United States and they came awfully close to it. In fact, they had billions of dollars invested in it. The only thing is there was still silver on the market when they ran out of dollars and they could not get that last ounce of silver. That last ounce of silver killed them. It collapsed the whole market and they had to divest themselves of vast quantities of holdings and stocks amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars.

They had violated the Securities Act in that an individual person or corporation or even a family—it was a family that was involved in the Hunt group; I am not sure now whether charges were laid against them or whatever happened to them, but they had violated a rule that said a group could only acquire a certain percentage of the total supply. If we have those rules in this instance and they are looked after and enforced, those terrible things should not happen.

I want to close by saying that what we are talking about is, in general, giving the opportunity to those people who want to take the gambling out of their operations. They can lock themselves into certain prices on either buying or selling and they know what they are doing. This provides the liquidity that is required to carry those stocks that provide the food, clothing, shoes and all the various minerals and lumber that we all use in our daily lives.

If one wants to talk about international commodity agreements, the most recent one that has been violated—there was a piece in the paper today; I think is Iran which has agreed to a $2 discount in the price of its oil. What it really comes down to is that international agreements, though written in blood, are not worth a nickel. They are just not worth anything because how do we enforce an international agreement if one of the participants says, "I am opting out of it." Do we send in the marines? Who do we send in to enforce that agreement?

Mr. Breithaupt: Verbal agreements aren't worth the paper they're written on.

Mr. McGuigan: I will not try to upstage that one.

International wheat agreements collapsed in the early 1970s. There was simply more wheat available than there were markets. It is a natural thing that, if one has a supply of a commodity, one is hungry for money and is trying to sell it. If one can sell it for two cents under the market and move a volume of that commodity, that is going to happen. That does happen in international commodity agreements, whether they are signed by socialist countries or by capitalist countries. Whoever signs them, they are not worth a nickel.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Chairman, I am kind of pleased the member for Kent-Elgin spoke first, because I think he did put this whole thing into some kind of perspective, although I may not agree with all the comments he made.

When he speaks about the future purchasing of commodities, having a contract between the producer and the purchaser down the road certainly is not evil, it has some real benefits. But that is not what this futures exchange would provide. It provides for the manipulation of the sale and resale of those contracts.

Mr. McGuigan: It provides the liquidity.

Mr. Swart: Yes. They can be sold over and over again, and they can be traded. As the honourable member has so ably pointed out, not only is this really a sort of sale of these in the exchange, but there can also be manipulation; and there is manipulation of the price. Somebody can corner the market.

He used the illustration of silver. Even in the companies that produced the silver, which were the beneficiaries of that tremendously high price, it was not the workers in those silver industries, regardless of where it was in the world, who perpetrated the ripoff of the public—and that is what it was; it was the speculators, the people who tried to corner the market. This has been shown to be the case over and over again when one gets into these futures exchanges and people have looked for alternatives to them.

Nothing is perfect in our society. I am the first one to agree with that. International agreements are broken. But by and large those international agreements on commodity prices have brought stability for a period of time to those commodities.

I do not think there is anyone who can deny that the efforts by the producing countries, and the purchasing countries too, to set commodity prices for both coffee and sugar have had some beneficial effect by taking them out of that commodities exchange, where it was left solely to private sector investors who would corner the market to determine what the price was going to be at any given time. I think those are the kinds of goals we have to work towards.

I am old enough to remember, and I am not sure whether the member for Kent-Elgin is, the controversy when we set up the wheat board. An awful lot of farmers opposed it and they gave some of the arguments the member gave here today. But a majority of those farmers determined they could no longer leave it to the futures exchange and the exchange market, so they tried to get greater stability.

It is not directly related, but it has a real bearing on what we are talking about today. They had control over that price. If we could do that further through the international market, we would have greater stability and there would be more for the producers than some manipulation by the financiers by getting prices way up to some fictitious level so they benefit themselves and not the producer.

8:40 p.m.

We in this party think those are the kinds of directions in which we should go. To further facilitate this trading in contracts, particularly now in the options of contracts, without any efforts being made for the stability of commodity prices through international agreement or whatever means can be used, just seems to us to be going in the wrong direction. That is why we oppose this bill and why we are opposing this amendment.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, I gather from the way you recognize me that you are less than enthusiastic about the continuation of this fine debate. I think it is one of the best ones we have had in this House since this afternoon. However, I wanted to be sure you had the benefit of my personal experience in this connection.

I am one of the farmers described by my colleague the member for Kent-Elgin who grows corn and soybeans. In fact, the availability of futures contracts removes some of the gamble in what I, my wife and family are undertaking on our 100 hectares. The prices of the corn and beans in our market depend almost exclusively on what happens in the Chicago grain exchanges.

Many people in this House and in this country somehow think of Canada as the great breadbasket for the hungry world. We should be aware that Canada produces three per cent of the grain in the world, that all of Canada—

Mr. Chairman: Stay on topic.

Mr. Nixon: All right, I have already told you this, but I have not told everybody.

The state of Iowa grows more grain than all of Canada put together. We have some strange idea this commodities futures exchange to be established downtown in some boardroom in the new skyscraper the Toronto Stock Exchange is building is going to have very much to do with prices. I think we are really off track. If we wanted to object to something we might well object to the effect the Chicago grain exchange has had on our prices where the Moguls, so graphically described by the socialist on our left, perhaps have from time to time had an unwarranted effect on the prices.

Mr. Chairman, do not fool with your gavel.

Mr. Chairman: Okay.

Mr. Nixon: They have had an unwarranted effect and influence on the prices that we long-suffering farmers have had to contend with. The only thing that has provided the least bit of buoyancy in the market we are now in—that is for anybody smart enough to hold over his or her corn or soybeans, and I am not in that group, I am sorry to say.

Mr. Breagh: We would have known that without the confession.

Mr. Nixon: Right, but the only thing that has provided any buoyancy is once again an initiative by the government of the United States with a program that they call the payment in kind program.

I know, Mr. Chairman, that you will not want me to spend a lot of time talking about that, although you have permitted a full range of discussion as to why the Premier (Mr. Davis) did not run for the federal leadership. That did not seem to faze you so I know you can stand a moment or two of this. It is directly associated with the importance of the establishment of a futures exchange here in Toronto.

The payment in kind program established in the United States is a result of the American federal government buying, particularly in corn surpluses, over the last few years. This is an effort to maintain the world price of corn for American farmers.

Any buoyancy we have had has not been a result of any initiative by the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Timbrell) in Ontario or any other minister of agriculture that I know of offhand. Instead, the prices, depressed though they have been, have been maintained at that level because of the initiative of the government of the United States. They have bought millions of bushels of corn, put them in storage at public expense and they decided, and I really congratulate them for this sort of initiative, that they were going have to phase this out. They put forward a program to the corn farmers of the United States saying, "If you will not plant an acre of corn, we will give you the amount of corn you would have grown for nothing." That is out of the corn the government has bought and is storing.

This has resulted in a decrease of 20 per cent in the acreage to be planted, much of it already planted. Of course, the futures exchanges, realizing the amount of corn being grown is reduced, immediately responded by raising the future prices and that affected our price here. Therefore, the so-called payment in kind program of the United States has a dramatic effect here.

On the other hand, we are very much the tail of the grain-producing dog in that respect. We can take advantage of world prices but we have little influence on world prices unless we find ourselves in a political circumstance where the President of the United States says to Russia and lots of other countries, "We do not like you because of what you are doing in Afghanistan"—or some equally far-fetched argument to make the farmers suffer—"and we will not sell you any grain."

In those instances, on some occasions it is possible then for Canada to take advantage of an artificially skewed American market. But as far as we are concerned in our own farm operation, we sell up to 50 per cent of our crop in advance to a local grain dealer. It happens to be a branch of a fairly large company, an international company, but we do business with it and we have a great deal of confidence in the people who handle the local office.

Sometimes I feel I make a mistake not doing more business with small grain dealers because most of them are good supporters of mine, at least they have been until they read what I am saying. We must be aware many of them are trying to get into the future grain market business and they deserve a good deal of credit because they are full of initiative and they provide a tremendous service to the farm community.

The only place I have some agreement with the finger shakers and the quiverers from the socialist party is when there is some idea that some few cents from each one of the contracts I enter into with some local grain dealer is going to be skimmed off for some approval of a marketing supervising bureaucracy here in Toronto on the 32nd floor of the new Toronto Stock Exchange. There will be some people who have nothing whatsoever to do with the cultivation of the land skimming off some sort of ridiculous fee, supposedly a professional fee, that is simply going to reduce our profits.

I believe there will be substantial safeguards, however, established for the farmers and for the grain dealers on both sides. I suppose that as long as one is dealing with a company as large as Cargill, which I believe is the largest in the world and now has offices in most areas of Ontario, probably there is no fear that the farmer is going to be taken, in some financial way, on the delivery or the storage of the grain. However, it is quite true that smaller operators, with the very best of intentions, find themselves six months or a year down the road unable to fulfil their commitments. This has happened in the past and I believe certain safeguards are necessary.

I would also say that, rather than sit back and let the grain Moguls of the Chicago Stock Exchange dictate all the prices and policy and remove any profit that is in that aspect of the business, we might as well have our share of it here. As the former member for High Park, Dr. Morton Shulman, pointed out repeatedly in this House, anybody who is not dabbling in the futures market is somehow stupid and all one has to do is do what he does and make a million. I tend to do what he does about six months late, that is the only thing wrong. However, one of these times, my ship is going to come in.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Chairman, I listened with interest to the comments from the member for Kent-Elgin and also the member for Brant-

Oxford-Norfolk (Mr. Nixon). I do bear in mind the fact they are practising farmers, or have been in the past, and that my profession, my trade, has been otherwise.

However, I would like to bring to the members' attention the fact this is not a simple market which has been created just for people who want to get some security against the risks of farming with respect to their crop between the spring when they plant and the fall when they are going to collect it. This is a market which can deal, and on which people are entitled to deal, in all forms of commodities. I think perhaps the House would be interested in knowing just how wide that actually happens to be.

8:50 p.m.

The definition of commodities is actually in the Commodity Futures Act which this House adopted a few years ago. It says, "Commodity" means, whether in the original or a processed state, any agricultural product, forest product, product of the sea, mineral, metal, hydrocarbon fuel, currency or precious stone or other gem, and any goods, article, service, right or interest, or class thereof, designated as a commodity under the regulations."

I have not had the opportunity to peruse the regulations at great length, but I think some of my friends from the Liberal Party may have and maybe my former colleague from High Park knows them well as well.

I would like to point out the purport of that definition is that any manufactured product of any kind would qualify. Any type of processed, as well as unprocessed, food and any type of processed, as well as unprocessed, naphtha products would qualify.

The reference to service can be defined under the regulations. To take a perhaps ridiculous example, this means one could have an option about how much it is going to cost in five years' time to send a kid to university, or to have day care for an infant to protect one's self against that kind of a risk.

I said earlier what I thought was wrong was the sense of values in terms of the kinds of things this government gives priority to. We have already had a bill on commodity futures. It seems to have given the Ontario Securities Commission ample powers to permit the Toronto Stock Exchange to clone or spawn the futures exchange, or something very similar to it, without reference back to the Legislature in terms of this particular legislation.

For example, the futures exchange that is being created here will have the power to have futures in interest rates, if that is provided for under the regulations. It will certainly have power to have futures in such commodities as gold and silver. My friend the member for Welland-Thorold has given me some comments here about a teasing article by Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner and Smith, the thundering herd, with respect to the kinds of gains speculators can make by speculating in gold futures.

They say, "Consider the profit potential demonstrated by precious metal futures in 1979." That must have been a good year because they used it as an example.

"During the year, the 1979 gold futures contract advanced from $237 to $510 an ounce. The dollar value of this range was about $27,000 per contract. The margin to contract ranged from $2,000 to $8,000." In other words, by putting down $2,000 one might have made $27,000. That is a heck of a long way from the kinds of modest services to the farmer performed by speculators as the member for Kent-Elgin was talking about when he talked about a farmer trying to protect himself against the price fluctuations toward the end of the year. In the case of silver, the gain per contract could have been as much as $100,000 in 1979, and the amount of money that was actually required to be put down was $1,500.

Those are futures. When it comes to options, the fact is the amount required in terms of margins is a good deal less again. Therefore, we should probably put it under the Ontario Racing Commission and suggest a 14 per cent or 15 per cent parimutuel tax be exacted on this kind of trading by the government of Ontario on behalf of the people. That is the kind of business it happens to be.

It was interesting to me, looking at some high roller who said he was going to come back into the commodities market here in Ontario after he was kicked out by the OSC back in 1977 that, according to an article by Jim Foster in the Toronto Star in February, two-thirds of the people who buy commodity options, who choose to speculate that way, lose their investment within six months.

That is a long way from the kind of simple risk hedging described by the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk and by the member for Kent-Elgin. This is speculation, pure and simple. It is speculation in commodities that have nothing to do with the forest, the fields and other natural resources we have here in Canada. It is, as I said earlier, a form of the purest kind of finance capitalism.

I suppose there may be people who sit in their beds, like John Maynard Keynes used to do back in the 1930s, speculating in currency futures on behalf of King's College, Cambridge, and also on his own account. In an hour and a half he managed to secure both a personal fortune and the fortune of that college. I suppose there are people like that.

I do not happen to think it a particularly useful type of function, and that is why we are objecting to this bill as a whole and to subsection 4(1) which defines the objects of the exchange in such broad terms that almost anything could, under the regulation, be subject to legitimate gambling without even being taxed by the Ontario government on the Toronto Futures Exchange.

Mr. McGuigan: Mr. Chairman, certainly there are cases where people have got into the market purely on a speculative basis and have made large amounts of money. The old story is when they go to the race track, they never tell about the races they lose. The statistic that is widely quoted in the commodities business is that 70 per cent of the people who go in to speculate lose their money.

I would like to submit this is generally beneficial to the primary producers because, when people go in to speculate, they generally go on the positive side of the market. There is a negative side and a positive side. Because we always like to think prices are going to go up, we tend to go in on the positive side and those people who are speculating generally buy in at a future price.

There are very few people who go in and do what is called selling short. Those are the people who believe that six months down the road the price will be much lower than it is today. They might look at the grain market and say: "Look, the grain market is overpriced. We are paying these farmers too much money. I believe six months down the road I can buy grain for 50 per cent less. Therefore, I will sell grain at a low price."

They go in and make a quote into the market for six months from now to sell grain at a low price, betting or hoping that when that contract comes due the actual cash market will be down lower. They will buy from the cash market and they will make a profit on the difference between the cash market and that commodity market at its expiry date.

They assume a great risk when they do that because they are gambling about what happens to crops on the other side of the world. We must remember in the other hemisphere there are crops coming off at the opposite time of the year, and we must remember in the warmer climates of the world there are crops coming off any time of the year because there is no difference between winter and summer. There are rice crops, and rice is one of the huge commodities in the grain market. It is now second to corn and not too long ago it was first. They are gambling on what happens six months down the road out in those fields all over the world.

If there should happen to be a real shortage, if a disease or drought comes along, and they gamble wrongly on agreeing that six months from now they are going to sell so many thousands of bushels at a price, they could be scrambling out in the market to cover that sale and their losses know no limit. They may have agreed to put a figure on it that next fall they will sell corn for $2 a bushel because they think the price of corn is going to go down. Instead, there is a huge shortage next fall. They have to come up with that corn at $2 and they might have to pay $10 for it. There is a huge risk in selling short.

There is not nearly the risk in being long because, if they said the price was $3, the maximum they could lose on any contract if the price went down to zero would be $3; assuming the price went right down to nothing, they could not lose any more than $3. But if they sold short, the losses they could suffer would really be unlimited. The result of this is that very few people sell short, and it is on a short sale that the terrible things our friends are talking about happen to primary producers. So I would submit that most of what happens in the market is on the positive side and helps the primary producers.

There are dangers in setting up a market. We certainly would not want to set up a market for a commodity that is handled in very small quantities. If it is a very small quantity, there is a terrible danger that with a little bit of money and manipulation someone could get a good-sized portion of that market. We do not want to handle that sort of situation. We want, of course, to have the safeguards we have already talked about.

I do have certain fears about options, because about a year ago a young constituent came to me who had been sold options by a high-priced boiler-room type of salesman in the commission market. The person who had bought the options was in no position to take that kind of gamble. He lost, of course, as most people do in those situations, and it put him in a very bad state of affairs.

I would submit that any salesman who would force options on a person or would even sell options to a person in that sort of situation is one who has absolutely no ethics, and surely I would think that under our regulatory process something could be done with that kind of operation. But again, we are responsible to some extent for our own mistakes, and one does not do those sorts of things a second time.

But I want to emphasize that in general one can make a very good argument, and I think it can be backed up by the facts, that people who speculate in the market generally contribute to that market. I do not mind a bit taking money from a doctor or a lawyer or anybody else who thinks he is going to get rich off me. I do not mind taking his money one bit.

Motion agreed to.

Section 4, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 5 and 6, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 7:

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Mitchell moves that clause 7(1)(b) of the bill be struck out and the following substituted therefor: "(b) Two public directors or, where the bylaws so provide, up to four public directors."

Mr. Mitchell: Mr. Chairman, this is to ensure that there is adequate public participation in the decision-making process in the exchange.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Chairman, I recall that when we were looking at this legislation earlier on there was some discussion of an increased opportunity for public directors beyond those persons who were particularly involved in the exchange itself.

I would like to hear from the parliamentary assistant as to the immediate plans. If we are to have two public directors now and eight others, so that the total number of the governors would be 10, perhaps he could advise us if the intention is to increase that now to 12; or just how we are to have this legislation available, whether or not it is going to be used immediately with respect to the increase in the number of public directors.

Mr. Mitchell: I stand to be corrected, but my understanding is it will be governed by a board of directors of 11, which may be expanded to 13 at the request of the Ontario Securities Commission. My understanding is they must be appointed by the Lieutenant Governor by order in council. Five of the directors will be elected by the trading members, three directors will be elected by the Toronto Stock Exchange, which is the sponsor member, and two public directors are to be approved by the Lieutenant Governor in Council, and that number is expandable to four. The president is appointed by the rest of the board after nomination by the TSE.

Mr. Breithaupt: I was incorrect when I said 10. I should have said 11 at that point, Mr. Chairman. I appreciate that explanation, and I presume this opportunity for increase is something that is going to depend upon the experience of the board as it sorts itself out and develops over the next several years.

We have been given at least the option in legislation and it is certainly one we welcome. I think a balanced public interest of not 50 per cent, but something more than just two of 11 is a good idea. We have been given that opportunity and I look forward at least to a consideration after a year of operation of this and some statement or comment in estimates, if not otherwise, by the minister or the parliamentary assistant as the case may be, as to how things are sorting out and whether the positive requirement for additional public directors is seen as a useful result of the experience of the governors.

Mr. Mitchell: In response to the question raised by the member, I can say without question that the minister would be pleased to keep him aware of what is happening and how the futures exchange has been operating and whether there has been proven to be the need to expand to the additional two directors. I am sure he will be able and only too happy to provide all that information.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Chairman, this bill does not have any kind of a sunset clause. It is interesting that when it is something that serves the needs of the financial community sunset clauses seem to get forgotten. When it is something that serves the needs of the people, the Minister of Industry and Trade (Mr. Walker) and people of his temper of mind within the government party seem to be very keen to put an end to it within a very short time.

With respect to this subsection, I would like to point out for the record exactly what the process is concerning the so-called public directors. It is true that the public directors cannot be trading in futures and cannot be members of the stock exchange, nor can they be associates or insiders of members of the exchange, if I remember correctly; however, to call them entirely public is a misnomer.

In order to become a public director of the Toronto Futures Exchange there are no fewer than four hurdles of acceptance that must be passed. In the first place, the candidates must be recommended by a nominating committee that contains at least two people, the president of the futures corporation and the president of the Toronto Stock Exchange. I would suspect that those people are not guilty of too many heresies with respect to the interest of the futures exchange. They are not likely to get somebody to oppose them, who is going to rock the boat too far as a public director.

The second hurdle is they have to get by the president of the corporation and the president of the Toronto Stock Exchange, and maybe somebody else from the nominating committee as well.

The third hurdle is that the nomination has got to be accepted or approved by the cabinet and by the Lieutenant Governor in Council. We all know how these things work. It would be ludicrous to think that the cabinet as a whole sits around and scratches its collective ears and decides at length on every such appointment. There is a patronage secretary or an appointments secretary or somebody like that who works close to the Premier and whose job it is to vet those kinds of appointments if that is what is required in the legislation, or in fact to dig into his or her files and find appropriate people to be appointed to these kinds of quasi-public positions if there is not a matter of approving somebody else's nomination.

Therefore, somebody who works for the Premier and whose job among other things is to make sure that friends of the Conservative Party are kept happy and get their due share of the rewards or spoils of office, has the responsibility to look over the recommendation coming from the president of the stock exchange and the president of the Toronto futures corporation.

Of course, it is not my experience that the mindset of those particular individuals is going to be that much different from the mindset of somebody who makes appointments or proposes appointments on behalf of the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

Then the matter has to pass a fourth hurdle, which is that it actually has to go through the cabinet, although that is basically a formality. The Premier says, "Look, my guys say it is okay." The cabinet says, "Fine," and it is done.

When we have passed that fourth hurdle there is to be a fifth hurdle. The fifth hurdle is that after all this is done we do not even have an appointment. All we have is a nomination of a public director or two and, according to subsection 8(3), the public directors will then be elected annually by the board of directors. In other words, the public directors have to be acceptable to the president, to the chairman of the stock exchange, to somebody who works near the Premier, to the cabinet and to all of their other fellow directors.

Those people are meant to represent the interests of the public and make sure the futures exchange is not forgetting it has responsibilities to the public at large. It has a responsibility to small investors who may choose to have a little fling on the speculative market in commodities and options. It has a responsibility to make sure that crooks or near-crooks do not gain a haven in the financial markets of Ontario by being able to play in the futures market.

But the people who are there to keep the futures exchange honest on behalf of all of us must, in fact, run that gauntlet, possibly every year, I am not quite sure, in order to get appointed or reappointed.

It is my understanding that if it comes to a conflict between some big general idea of public wellbeing or public good, and pleasing the people who are responsible for one to stay in that particular office—who either name that person, propose that person or validate the nomination—one is more likely to look to those people who have the control over whether that person can keep on coming back, maybe who have control over the per diems that person receives for doing the job—maybe it is an honorific post, I do not know and it does not particularly matter—but it seems to me that these public directors are public in name only and in fact they do not genuinely represent the public.

I would have liked to have seen this government take perhaps a radical point of view, but look around to see whether there were not some other people or groups representative of the people of Ontario who might be appropriately asked to make nominations to the futures exchange, and then strip away all of this other business of three or four levels of approval before they could get in.

It would be interesting if the Catholic bishops of Ontario, to take one example, could be asked to make one nomination to represent the public on the Toronto Futures Exchange; it would be interesting if the Ontario Federation of Labour could be asked to make one nomination of a public-spirited individual to be a representative on the Toronto Futures Exchange; it would be interesting if the Ontario Public Interest Research Group, which has done some excellent work, mainly through the universities, could be asked to make a nomination of a third public director to the Toronto Futures Exchange.

One can think of other groups. Perhaps the association of mayors and municipalities, or the Association of Municipalities of Ontario, could be asked to make an appointment. Who knows where one might find some possible, legitimate sources in this society. Perhaps—and I think this would be a good idea—the Ontario Federation of Agriculture would be one since obviously its members, as has been argued by the member for Kent-Elgin (Mr. McGuigan), do have some interest in there being some modest amount of futures trading taking place in Ontario.

There are just four suggestions for legitimate nominators of public directors who would be perceived by the public much more obviously as being public and working in the public interest than this kind of system the government has come up with.

Whether we vote against it or not does not particularly matter. What is important now is to put some ideas on the record. I say to the parliamentary assistant and his minister that I intend to pursue this matter since I am now critic on of financial and commercial affairs. There is a real question of legitimacy in terms of many of the institutions that govern our society.

If we were the government, we would be making the kinds of changes I suggest. Were we not in a position to change the institutions outright, we would seek to try to change them so that they would genuinely reflect the public interest and not just the interests of self-serving interest groups, which seems to be the government's idea of how these things ought to operate.

I have begun to do some thinking about the kinds of institutions we need in our society, looking ahead perhaps 10 or 20 years. It may not be possible to change or transform those institutions entirely, but it should be possible to find ways of reflecting the public interest, the interests of employees and workers, consumers and owners of capital in the various institutions that make up our very complex and prolific economy.

We should be looking towards that kind of thing rather than seeing a situation where there is a continuing and increasing polarization, where poor farmers, for example, feel, perhaps unlike some of the Liberal representatives of farmers in the Legislature, that their interests are no longer being served by the institutions that have bankrupted them with high interest rates, Liberal interest rates; unlike the situation where consumers find themselves increasingly radicalized and turned off by the lack of protection they get in the marketplace, unlike the situation where workers grow more and more fearful because of the increasing number of toxic substances that are used almost wantonly by their employers and they have no effective powers to fight back and make sure their work place is a healthy, safe and decent kind of a place.

We can change that. We should be talking about changing that. In this province, the Premier (Mr. Davis) is never without a quip about how we are the finest—

Mr. Chairman: Getting back to the section.

Mr. Cassidy: —the richest, the most progressive province in Canada, in North America, let alone the world. He is wrong about that. None the less, we do have some opportunities in this society to experiment with ways in which the interests of the whole society and not just particular interests can be represented.

I would say to the parliamentary assistant very seriously that when he is drafting this kind of bill and looking at the public interest, for goodness' sake do not let the stock exchange and people there define what they think is the public interest. Have some independence for once and look at the public interest in terms of all the people of the province.

Mr. Mitchell: Mr. Chairman, I would like to take a couple of moments to reply to the member for Ottawa Centre. The minister and I, when I was taking the Business Corporations Act through committee, gave a commitment to attempt to resolve an issue raised by the member's caucus, that is, the independence of one third of the board of directors. I assure the member that the sort of thing he is talking about is being looked after.

I should point out that the Toronto Stock Exchange has had public governors for 14 years. It is my understanding they have consistently proven that they are public representatives. Election in this Toronto Futures Exchange is going to be identical to that which is carried out within the Toronto Stock Exchange.

Mr. Cassidy: Election is by the existing board, which means it is self-perpetuating. There are a couple of controls in the sense there is a nomination from outside, but it is only from down the hall in the office of the chairman of the exchange and the president of the futures exchange. While there is some kind of rubber stamp that comes here, the most that can be done there is that the Lieutenant Governor in Council and the Premier's people will ensure that it is a Conservative public director rather than, God forbid, somebody who happens to have Liberal connections or perhaps even be nonpartisan—or even, my God, somebody who had been active in some way with the New Democratic Party. Those are the kinds of controls.

I would suggest that something a good deal more vigorous might be experimented with here. The Toronto Futures Exchange is brand new. It does not have, I dare say, the type of reputation and perhaps the goodwill that has been built up or the traditions that have been built up by the Toronto Stock Exchange, which has, after all, been around for a long time. But I would also remind the minister that it has had its share of scandals and problems within, as well as prior to, the last 14 years.

This question should be looked at more seriously than to say, "We will do something about seeing that at least one third of the directors in each corporation are independent of the corporation, that is, are not directly affiliated financially with it." That is not good enough.

Mr. Chairman: We have all heard the amendment to the section. All those in favour will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the ayes have it.

Motion agreed to.

On section 8:

Mr. Mitchell: Mr. Chairman, I propose an amendment to subsection 8(5).

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Mitchell moves that subsection 8(5) of Bill 7 be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"No person shall be elected as a public director unless the person's nomination for election is approved by the Lieutenant Governor in Council on the recommendation of a nominating committee constituted in accordance with the bylaws and co-chaired by the president of the corporation and the president of the Toronto Stock Exchange."

Mr. Chairman: The member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Cassidy: I am happy to yield, as the member of the Liberal Party intended to go first.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Chairman, in looking at this amendment, it would appear that instead of having the joint recommendation of two persons who are going to be particularly involved in the operation at the exchange, there is now a general nominating committee which will take that place.

The co-chairmen of that committee are going to be the two persons otherwise represented, but I would like to hear from the parliamentary assistant as to the makeup and numbers of persons expected to be on this nominating committee.

I agree with the comments made by the member for Ottawa Centre concerning the hurdles, as he referred to them, for a public representative to become a member of the governors of this exchange. It is important we ensure the public members of this group are seen to be readily and clearly appointed without any difficulty that might occur by the filtering process that may develop in the hierarchy of steps that has to be followed under the present system.

I would like to hear as to the strength and background of this nominating committee to ensure the process is as open as possible, realizing the ultimate requirement of any of these appointments by order of the Lieutenant Governor in Council is a decision by cabinet that has clear political overtones involved along with the responsibility and abilities of the persons to be nominated.

Mr. Mitchell: I do not have the exact makeup of the nominating committee, as the chairman will note by the amendment. It is a nominating committee as structured under the bylaws of the exchange.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Chairman, what that means, in effect, is it would probably perpetuate the idea of a self-perpetuating board. The nominating committee would likely be struck from the existing board of directors, except for the fact that the president of the Toronto Stock Exchange would become a co-chairperson of the nominating committee with the president of the Toronto futures corporation.

I have basically made the comments I wanted to make on this item. This is not a means by which we get public directors; this is a means by which we get directors who are in harmony with respect to the way they view the world and with respect to their social, class and financial background with the people who will be the directors of the Toronto Futures Exchange.

The only difference between the public directors appointed by this process and the directors who are elected by the members of the exchange as a whole will be the fact that they are not directly involved as participants in or as members of the TSE or the TFE. That is the only difference. Apart from that, nothing at all is different.

We are going to oppose this section. I could have spoken perhaps a minute or two ago on subsection 8(3), pointing out that—

Mr. Boudria: But you didn't.

Mr. Cassidy: No, I didn't, because in the interests of seeing this whole committee stage through—

Mr. Chairman: I will give you a minute now.

Mr. Cassidy: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I was pointing out there that, rather than have the public directors elected by the board of directors, which means they are a self-perpetuating kind of thing, they should be selected by some outside body and appointed to the Toronto Futures Exchange if they are to have any genuine independence at all.

With respect to this section, for the reasons I have given before, we do not think these are public directors at all; and if the government's idea of the public interest is this and nothing else, then they are pretty poor protectors of the public interest.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Chairman, just to follow through on the comments made so far, it seems to me the amendment we are bringing in could be seen to be insubstantial in that, if the two persons referred to are the nominating committee, we really have not changed anything. We have said that A and B will make a joint recommendation in the subsection as it was printed; now we are saying there is a nominating committee which shall be chaired by A and B. Of course, they could be, in fact, the nominating committee with no other additions, so I want to make sure we are not giving the appearance of a broader nominating committee and not just really subverting it and keeping it the way it was.

I do think we should hear what the expected bylaws are going to be as to the size and makeup of this nominating committee, because I think it is important that it be done quite clearly with expectations of involvement now rather than replacing two persons with a committee chaired by two persons who may be not much of a replacement.

Mr. Mitchell: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to assure the member for Kitchener, and I think I can do this in all honesty, although I cannot—and I say this quite directly—give him the precise numbers, that it most definitely will be made up of the president of the corporation, the chairman of the Toronto Stock Exchange and several members; but I am unable to give the honourable member that number at this time. I think I can assure him it will be broader than just the two members. In fact, part of the rationale is to broaden the nominating committee.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of Mr. Mitchell's motion will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the ayes have it.

9:30 p.m.

Mr. Cassidy: The Liberal Party voted nay and members of our party voted nay.

An hon. member: They voted aye.

Mr. Cassidy: They voted aye, did they? I beg your pardon. They were together, just like this afternoon. Okay. Thank you.

Section 8, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 9 and 10 agreed to.

On section 11:

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Stevenson): Mr. Mitchell moves that subsection 11(2) of the bill be amended by striking out "a member" in the third line and inserting in lieu thereof "any person or company of a class referred to in the bylaw."

Motion agreed to.

Section 11, as amended, agreed to.

Section 12 agreed to.

On section 13:

The Acting Chairman: Mr. Mitchell moves that section 13 of the bill be struck out and the following substituted therefor:

"13. The corporation may acquire by purchase, lease or otherwise and may hold for any period of time any land or interest therein, whether or not such land or interest is necessary for its actual use or occupation or for carrying on its undertaking, and may sell, charge, lease or otherwise deal with or dispose of such land or any interest therein."

Mr. Mitchell: I have just a brief explanation, Mr. Chairman. As members know, the Toronto Stock Exchange is moving to new quarters and the Toronto Futures Exchange will be a part of that new facility. The purpose of this is to ensure that the Toronto Futures Exchange, together with the Toronto Stock Exchange, has the corporate power to participate in the development of its new premises in downtown Toronto.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Chairman, I find this amendment more difficult. The commodity futures exchange is to be a body without share capital, and it is to be a body that does not have the purpose of making a profit, interestingly enough. In fact, in section 5 it says, "The corporation shall be carried on without the purpose of gain for its members, and any profits or other accretions to the corporation shall be used in promoting its object." Its object, as we went through before, is to provide for the operation of a commodity futures or futures options exchange. It is a rather narrow type of purpose.

The difference between the amendment and the original section is that, in addition to buying and holding property, it says the corporation may sell or dispose of it. If you are going to buy it, I suppose you have to be able to get rid of it. What bothers me, though, is that the original subsection of the original section allowed the corporation to acquire land or interests in land, whether or not such land or interest was necessary for its actual use or occupation.

I begin to ask myself what the devil we are doing that for. Why is it that the futures exchange is being put in a position where, having no share capital of its own, it can effectively speculate in land or in interests in land and property—basically in office buildings, but it could buy a mine in northern Ontario, I suppose, if it felt like it—for which it had absolutely no purpose at all and for which it had absolutely no need at all? The minister's parliamentary assistant may say: "It is not likely to do that." My response to that would be: "If it is not likely to do that, why the devil give it the power?"

Perhaps, before I continue, the parliamentary assistant could explain why on earth those words have been put in, because if they stay in, we are going to oppose this section. I do not see why we should create some type of monster which (a) is there to encourage speculation and (b) has been empowered by the Legislature, and does not have to pay corporation tax or meet other obligations that other corporations have to do, to speculate in property itself.

Mr. Mitchell: Mr. Chairman, I should point out that the Toronto Futures Exchange is going to be a participant in this development in downtown Toronto. There have been some requirements that the stock exchange has had to meet in being able to acquire the building and move into it.

I cannot give the member all the ins and outs of that. Suffice it to say that I think the basic premise behind this motion is to allow the Toronto Futures Exchange to acquire premises larger than it currently needs so it will have them available as it grows.

Mr. McGuigan: Mr. Chairman, a similar situation comes to mind. I do not know whether I have the correct name of the act but I believe it is the Ontario Food Terminal Act which governs and runs the food terminal on the Queensway. The food terminal was built some time in the early 1950s, not too many years after the Second World War, to accommodate the fresh fruit and vegetable market, and it replaced the old St. Lawrence Market in downtown Toronto.

It was not too long after they were operating that they realized the thing was such a success that it was expanding and needed more land. I cannot give the members the date or anything of that sort, but it was probably about 20 years ago that they bought land north of Toronto. I think it is somewhere up around Highway 400, and it was to be used for future expansion. They held that land for a number of years, but the pressure to expand became less, and the efficiency at the food terminal became greater as they moved to bigger trucks and handling equipment, faster movement through the terminal and so on.

A couple of years ago or so they sold that property at a big profit and reinvested the money back into the food terminal. The Premier (Mr. Davis) was out there about a year ago. There were a lot of pictures taken with him and the then Minister of Agriculture and Food opening up the new section of the terminal. Instead of expanding the area horizontally, they went vertical. They put parking garages and a number of facilities on several layers.

I suppose without that provision one could have argued at any time during the period that they held land that really was not required. Of course, events might have been different if they had lost money on the holding of that land rather than making money. But, in either event, the intent when they bought it was to take care of future expansion as they felt they were going to be forced out of that area of Toronto. However, that did not happen. One could have argued in the interval that they had land that was not required for their operation.

Unless there is something devious in here that all of us are missing—and I certainly would not want to be any part of such a plot—I do not have any trouble supporting this section.

9:40 p.m.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Chairman, this section empowers the Toronto Futures Exchange to purchase and acquire the farm that currently belongs to the member for Kent-Elgin. That is what it does.

If, for example, it had said, "The corporation may acquire any land or interest therein which is necessary for its actual use or occupation, but which may be required for its future use, and may sell"—

Mr. Mitchell: Carrying on its business; carrying on its business.

Mr. Cassidy: That is right. "Which is necessary for its actual use or which may be necessary for its future use."

Mr. Mitchell: But it is very specific—"in carrying out its business."

Mr. Cassidy: No. It says it may acquire now, whether or not that land or interest is necessary. In other words, it is directly the opposite. Perhaps the parliamentary assistant would like to explain.

Mr. Mitchell: As I tried to point out, the Toronto Futures Exchange is moving into the new building in a partnership, one could say, with the Toronto Stock Exchange. This section, I am assured by the staff as well, is purely to allow them to acquire space which is perhaps larger than they can immediately use but which will be there when the need definitely arises. It is for nothing any more sinister than that. I find the amendment quite clear when it says, "necessary for its actual use or occupation or for carrying on its undertaking."

Mr. Cassidy: I say to the parliamentary assistant, since his staff have assured him of that, why on earth does the section not say that? We have a problem in this House with legislation that is drafted and goes through the legislative committee of the government, giving powers we should not be giving. Surely the futures exchange does not want the farm of the member for Kent-Elgin. I understand that.

There is nothing particularly wrong, if we are going to have the damned thing, with the futures exchange acquiring a bit of extra space in the new stock exchange building to accommodate future expansion. There is nothing particularly wrong with that either. There is no reason why the legislation could not say that.

What I would like to propose is that by agreement we stand down the subsection, we stand down the committee stage, we go and do a couple of the bills the parliamentary assistant wanted to get through tonight, and then he can come back with an amended section which says what he tells us he wanted to do. That would make an awful lot more sense than saying, "Well, we know it is sloppy, we know we were wrong, but we are going to bull it through because we have the votes."

Mr. Mitchell: Mr. Chairman, with respect, I do not intend to stand the bill—

Mr. Nixon: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman: If you will permit me, I want to bring to your attention that the Globe and Mail of tomorrow's date, printed tonight, contains substantial detail of information purported to come from the budget to be presented to this House next Tuesday.

The basis of all the objections on any budgetary leak—and this is apparently a leak of many of the important budgetary documents—is that the rights and privileges of members of the House are transgressed.

Since the House is in committee and it is not your responsibility to respond to a point of privilege of this importance, I would move that the committee rise so that the matter can be brought to the attention of Mr. Speaker without delay.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Chairman, I am sure we are all very concerned with the story that is purported to be in the Globe. I have not seen the paper; I gather my friends have it over there. I am sure it would bother all of us, but I do not think it behooves any of us to discuss it in detail at this time without the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) here or any other members here at the present time.

I would have to say we should continue with the business of this House until we have a chance—

Mr. Elston: No. There is a motion on the floor.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I am suggesting the committee not rise and report. I am suggesting the committee continue on.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order: It is very clear. Standing order 85(a) says, "A motion that the Chairman leave the chair is always in order, takes precedence of any other motion, and is not debatable."

The whole point is that the matter should be brought to the attention of the Speaker without delay. I suggest the government would be ill advised to stand in the way of such a report to Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order: While the rule appears to be pre-emptory, it would not be the first time that a pre-emptory rule of this House did not quite mean what it said. If there is a problem about the meaning of that rule—and I doubt that anybody in this House knows anything other than what it says—I suggest it may be appropriate to recess the committee for 15 minutes to allow the Chairman to consult about the matter.

Mr. Chairman: I would like to do that. I will leave the chair for 10 minutes. The House will resume at 10 o'clock.

The committee recessed at 9:47 p.m.

10:05 p.m.

Mr. Chairman: At this point, I would like to thank the member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick) for encouraging me to leave the chair for 10 or 15 minutes to re-evaluate the chair's position on the motion made by the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk (Mr. Nixon). I would like to thank all members for their patience.

Under reading of standing order 85(a), I have no choice but to accept the motion. The motion is not debatable. As a result, I will accept the motion that the chair now rise and report to the Speaker.

All those in favour of the motion will please say "aye."

All those against will please say "nay."

In my opinion, the nays have it.

Call in the members.

11:23 p.m.

Mr. Chairman: Order. To refresh everyone's memory, I am dealing with the motion that has been brought forward by the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk under section 85(a) of our standing orders, that I do now rise and report.

The committee divided on Mr. Nixon's motion, which was agreed to on the following vote:

Ayes 90; nays 0.

On motion by Mr. Nixon, the committee of the whole House reported progress.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I want to bring to your attention a matter—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Nixon: This is the first opportunity—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

The House adjourned at 11:26 p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

Friday, May 6, 1983

The House met at 10 a.m.
Prayers.

BUDGET SECURITY

Mr. Peterson: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker: I know that an emergency debate has been filed with you for your consideration, but I also am very strongly of the view that this point of privilege is going to need a determination by you.

It regards what we consider to be one of the most serious breaches of privilege of members of this House, certainly in recent memory. I am of course referring to the publication in the first editions of today's Globe and Mail of an article revealing the purported contents of the 1983 Ontario budget of the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller). Apparently, the Treasurer has not denied that these are discarded budget documents, and this raises the very important question of accountability and, indeed, questions of honour and privilege.

At the outset, may I say that I believe there are three very important principles involved in this matter: the principle of budget secrecy, the principle of respect for the Legislature and the third principle of ministerial responsibility.

There is no question in the minds of the members of my party that the Treasurer personally is an honourable man. We are not suggesting for a moment that he in any way had a personal hand in this most unfortunate incident occurring. But we also know that there are conventions, there are rules and there are practices of this esteemed institution. Nothing historically has been more sacred than the secrecy surrounding the budget documents, and material that appears to have come from the budget has entered the public domain.

Security has very clearly been breached, and because of this breach we cannot be sure what other information may be available for people to use for their personal or institutional gain. Indeed, the entire budget process has been poisoned by this most unfortunate episode.

We have to ask ourselves why we have secrecy surrounding a budget. It started with a king who wanted to preserve fairness, the lack of advantage to any of his commoners as a result of proposed changes in taxation. The purpose of secrecy was to tell all citizens at the same time what policies were to be changed so no one individual could take advantage.

Budget secrecy symbolizes that fairness, justice and the principle of respect for the Legislature and the privileges of the members therein. It symbolizes British fair play.

There are many precedents which deal with budget leaks such as this. In 1936, for example, the India Secretary in the British government disclosed an excise tax that would affect stock markets in advance of the budget release. He took the honourable course and resigned.

In 1947, the Chancellor of the British Exchequer, Hugh Dalton, told a reporter en route to the House of Commons that there was to be an excise tax increase on cigarettes. Even though this disclosure was made only moments before the budget was released, the minister resigned.

More recently, in Newfoundland in 1978, the Minister of Industrial Development and Rural Development made it known in advance of the budget that there would be no special support for regional hospitals. Although he only stated what was not going to be contained in the budget, he still took the honourable course and resigned.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Peterson: In each of the cases I have mentioned, the conventions of the British parliamentary traditions were adhered to and the minister resigned. They became questions of honour.

Beyond the many precedents, another important test is whether the information leaked could be of advantage to anyone. From the information disclosed in the Globe and Mail reports of today, it would appear that the material does affect the conduct of daily economic business in the province.

For example, the documents include figures on the funding provisions for the renter-buy program, the budget statistics and an indication of cuts in agriculture, industry and trade sectors, which have implications for many institutions. Private lenders could take advantage of the information with respect to government-funded programs in evaluating the creditworthiness of individuals.

Indeed, the size of the deficit and the apparent move into the private market to finance has other implications in the financial area.

It has been pointed out by the parliamentary expert Eugene Forsey that the tradition of secrecy is based on the need to prevent people with prior knowledge of what is in the budget from making a "killing."

There is also a long-established principle that a Treasurer is responsible for security as well as the content.

As honourable members, as friends of the Treasurer we can all sympathize with his personal dilemma, but he has found himself in a most unfortunate position which has become for him a question of honour. We have had other Treasurers in the past who have found themselves in apparent conflicts of interest and who took the honourable course and voluntarily resigned without delay.

The Treasurer had the option of coming to the House last night at eight o'clock upon finding out of about these breaches. He chose to absent himself from the House and not take the members of this Legislature into his confidence with respect to the very serious breach.

In addition, members will note that no lesser person than the Treasurer himself has set the standard for public morality on this issue. There was a recent incident in Ottawa—I am sure members are aware of it—when the Minister of Finance there changed the figures. This Treasurer described it as "cute." He said, "Those of us in the business think it is a very serious problem."

He went on to say that the federal Minister of Finance then admitted his leak and did not wipe the slate clean. He said, "I thought the rules were such that you had to quit after that sort of thing."

Mr. Speaker, those are the words of the Treasurer of this House. I say to you sir, our privileges have been very seriously abused. It is going to call for you, sir, to make a judgement. You sit in sole judgement on this matter. It is a very weighty responsibility that you have. You have obviously been getting a great deal of advice in the past 12 or 14 hours. That being said, I call upon you to exercise your responsibility with the great care it deserves in this situation.

10:10 a.m.

Mr. Speaker: The member for York South.

Hon. Mr. Eaton: We want a report on the BC election.

Mr. Rae: No, I am not going to talk about British Columbia this morning. I have more important items on my mind.

Hon. Mr. Ashe: Tell us about BC.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Rae: Mr. Speaker, it is a pity that the leader of the Liberal Party could not quote himself on the subject of Marc Lalonde. I think that is an irony we will all have to live with.

You have heard, sir, the basic arguments that have been set out for you with respect to the traditions on budget secrecy, ministerial accountability and the personal responsibility of the minister for what is taking place. I simply want to—

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Rae: I hate to interrupt these personal quarrels, Mr. Speaker, but I wonder if I could just have your attention for a moment.

The arguments with respect to budget secrecy and ministerial responsibility are important, and I will make them to you very briefly, since they have been put to you.

The tradition with respect to the secrecy of the budget is crystal-clear. If I may say so, this tradition was respected even in its breach in the events we saw in Liberal Ottawa a short few weeks ago. The importance of that should not be lost to you.

The second major principle, which I think has to be recognized as equally important as the tradition of budget secrecy and which is fundamental not only to this Legislature but indeed also to the entire parliamentary tradition, is the principle of ministerial accountability and responsibility. It is a tough doctrine, in some respects it can be a rough master; but it is nevertheless the principle of our political and constitutional life which must be respected.

The principle is that in this instance the Treasurer is responsible for maintaining budget secrecy. The Treasurer is responsible from the time whatever thoughts he or his ministry may have with respect to the budget are first formed to the moment they are put on paper, to the moment they go from the Treasury to wherever the Treasurer decides to have it printed—he can have it done in house or have it contracted out; that is his responsibility. He is responsible for all the security arrangements with respect to that budget. That is the personal responsibility of the Treasurer, and if information leaks out at any time during that entire process, during that continuum, it is the personal responsibility of the Treasurer for that leak.

Hon. Mr. Eaton: Even if it's stolen?

Mr. Rae: Now, I heard a comment from somebody else saying, "Even if it's stolen?" I would say that if it could be established—and I have not heard anything that would suggest this—that there had been a surreptitious break and enter and a direct theft of documents that no security arrangements could conceivably have prevented, then this House would want to listen to that evidence and would want to weigh it very carefully. I think that is a fair statement to make: I think we would all want to listen to it.

But I do not think the facts as we have heard them so far have disclosed that; and if the Treasurer is saying we have not heard all the facts, that is not our fault. We were here last night. Where was he? The Treasurer chose to be elsewhere and did not speak to the House about the events, and I am afraid we have to reach our judgements this morning on the basis of the information we have available thus far.

I want to make just one other point, Mr. Speaker. When you are considering this as a question of privilege, when you consider the basic test, which I suggest is, "Has the work of any member of this Legislature been impeded, been prevented?" I say that it has. In the normal course of events there would be a budget lockup, critics would be informed of the contents of the budget and we would be able to deal with those contents in an informed and reasoned way and to respond accordingly.

Each and every member would be able, on the basis of equal information, to communicate with his constituents on the contents of the budget. Members would be able to make whatever arguments, from different sides of the fence and from different points of view, they would with respect to the information that had been made available. I suggest, with a leak of this magnitude and of this proportion and the way in which it has been done, we have been prevented from doing our job in the way we are normally accustomed to doing our job.

Some hon. members: Come on.

Mr. Rae: No. I think that is a reasonable test. I suggest to the members that on the basis of that test you are entitled, sir, to rule that this amounts to a breach of privilege and that the privileges of this House and of each and every member have been abused.

In that sense, sir, I want to suggest that you reflect a while on the arguments that have been put before you. I think we have a very basic problem here. In my view, the Treasurer should do the honourable thing; he should resign. The matter should be referred to a committee, and if that committee finds there was the kind of evidence I have suggested might be persuasive, then it is possible for us to look at the Treasurer's position again.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Rae: The budget process has been deeply tainted. The budget process now is thoroughly flawed. The budget cannot go ahead in its current form. If the Treasurer has the gall—

Interjections.

Mr. Rae: Wait for it.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Rotenberg: Hang him first and then have the trial. What kind of nonsense is that?

Mr. Rae: The member for Wilson Heights (Mr. Rotenberg) is getting excited.

Mr. Rotenberg: Come on, be fair; you started out well. Bad enough you want him to resign, but you want to hang him before the trial.

Mr. Foulds: You can get up later on a point of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Rae: If I may make this point again to you, Mr. Speaker, I suggest the budget process now is fundamentally flawed. For the Treasurer to say, as I heard him say this morning, that we do not know whether there is a leak and we will have to wait until Tuesday to see what is in the budget is an argument that is totally derivative of Marc Lalonde. That in itself makes it suspicious to me.

In addition, the Treasurer knows today whether there has been a leak, and he cannot pretend he does not know whether there has been a leak. For him to suggest that we will only know on Tuesday is an argument that does not hold water. The Treasurer is in a unique position to change the budget between now and Tuesday. I suggest that process would be completely improper in the light of everything that has taken place.

Mr. Speaker: I put to you the case, which I think is a reasonable case, that there has been a fundamental breach of privilege. I think it can be shown that there are countless instances in our tradition where ministers have accepted personal responsibility. Even though it is a rough test, even though it is a tough test, it is a test that all of us must live by. None of us as individuals make the rules. We cannot make the rules as we go along in this place. The rules are there for the protection of everyone.

If sometimes they mete out a justice that seems a little hard in some circumstances, that is the way it has to be to protect the basic traditions of this place, to maintain the essentials of budget secrecy and to maintain the principle that a minister is responsible for what goes on in his jurisdiction and in his department. He must bear personal responsibility before us, as representatives of the citizens of this province, for sins of commission and for sins of omission as well.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, we are speaking on a purported point of privilege. We are not engaged in a debate on whether the Treasurer should resign, whether there has been a budget leak or anything of that nature. We are discussing what the Leader of the Opposition stood up and said he was speaking on, a point of privilege.

We had a request for an emergency debate given to us last night. I have indicated to both parties we are agreeable to that debate. I submit the speeches we have had should properly be made in that emergency debate.

I will read from Parliamentary Privilege in Canada, by the former law clerk and parliamentary counsel to the House of Commons, at page 191 regarding "Privileges Concerns Member as Member, Not as Minister, Party Leader, Whip or Parliamentary Secretary." I will just read one paragraph, sir, because I am sure you are very familiar with this book:

"Furthermore, parliamentary privilege is concerned with the special rights of members, not in their capacity as ministers, or as party leaders, whips or parliamentary secretaries, but strictly in their capacity as members in their parliamentary work. Therefore, allegations of misjudgement or mismanagement, or maladministration on the part of a minister in the performance of his ministerial duties do not come within the purview of parliamentary privilege. And neither does an allegation that a minister permitted a budget leak constitute a matter of privilege."

That is in that book. If I could quote from another writer, Michael Valpy said in a recent column in the Globe and Mail:

"A string of Speakers, stretching back more than two decades, has ruled that budget leaks do not constitute a breach of an MP's privilege. Breach of privilege means that an MP has been prevented from speaking freely, been molested or threatened or bribed, or something of that nature."

Mr. T. P. Reid: Do you believe everything that's in the Globe now? Read this morning's edition.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I believe everything—

Mr. Speaker: Never mind the interjections please.

Hon. Mr. Wells: After reading this morning's Globe and listening to what has been said, I think the person whose privileges have been molested and mistreated is the Treasurer.

Let me also remind my friend of something. I am sure the House leader for the Liberal Party, who is an astute student of parliamentary rules and precedent, will realize when he looks at some of the precedents about budget secrecy in the United Kingdom my friend talked about that, as Eugene Forsey said in a letter recently published in one of the papers, "All those precedents in Britain involved leaks of tax changes." Just remember that.

I submit that the question we are dealing with at this point is whether this is a legitimate point of privilege. There is a string of precedents from Speakers for decades that will show, as the law clerk of the House of Commons has shown in his book, that the matter we are on now does not constitute a point of privilege. Let me read two paragraphs from the last Speaker who has made a decision on this.

This is from Madam Speaker Jeanne Sauvé on November 18, 1981. This was in the case involving the publication by Canada Mortgage and Housing Corp. when there was a debate somewhat similar to this and questions of points of privilege and so forth. I will not read her whole statement, but there are these two paragraphs.

"What this particular precedent says to us is not that breaching budgetary secrecy is a question of privilege but that the honourable member for Kenora-Rainy River"—and I am sure my friend knows who that member is—"had a question of privilege because he had been accused by a newspaper of breaching budgetary secrecy and doing something dishonourable in the exercise of his function. That is the important point which has to be considered in this case.

"I must repeat that the protection of privilege has to do with the protection of the capacity of honourable members to function as members in this House. If we are dealing with the wrongdoings, conduct or behaviour of a minister or the methods used by a minister of which some honourable members do not approve, that does not constitute a question of privilege, although it might be of great importance to the honourable members concerned. It is difficult for me to deal with such matters as questions of privilege."

Mr. Speaker, I can say no more than that while we are prepared to debate this matter for the full time this morning in an emergency debate, which we are agreeable to, this certainly does not constitute a point of privilege. No members' privileges have been abused by the events that have occurred in the last little while.

Mr. Speaker: The matter that has been raised by the Leader of the Opposition and joined in by the member for York South is indeed a very serious matter with wide ramifications. In the brief time that has been given to me to hear the arguments put forward, I am not going to try to make a judgement on this matter immediately. I will take it under consideration and make a decision and a judgement as quickly as possible.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your comment that you are going to take time and take the matter under advisement. I hope you will not mind if I, and perhaps certain other members, have an opportunity to express our views on the point to you.

Mr. Speaker: If I may, with all respect, I think the three parties have put their positions forward very eloquently. Rather than getting into a wide-ranging debate at this point, I must say there has been enough representation for me to make a judgement. I say to all honourable members that we should now get on with the regular business of the House.

Mr. Nixon: I regret, Mr. Speaker, that I cannot accept your advice in that regard. You may recall that at the first opportunity we had to put this before you last night you were unwilling to accept my advice on that occasion, and I may have an opportunity to raise that with you again.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Nixon: I want to say now, without expressing my view to you as an elected representative—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Nixon: I personally find it unacceptable, and you will certainly have to dispense with my services in this House if you are not prepared to hear my views on this matter, which I consider of urgent importance.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I respect the feelings of the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk. I certainly respect what he may have to say, whatever that may be. But when points of order or points of privilege have been raised, I think I have been very generous in listening to others besides the member who originally raised—

Mr. Nixon: Were you generous last night?

Mr. Wrye: What happened last night?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am not going to get into a debate. There is nothing provided for in the standing orders—

Mr. O'Neil: The government House leader (Mr. Wells) talks about being fair, but you cut us off last night. You would not listen.

Mr. Speaker: I am not going to enter into a debate, but I would suggest to all honourable members once more to make themselves familiar with the standing orders.

10:30 a.m.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, there is no standing order that says only three views, one from each party, are to be heard by Mr. Speaker. I know of no such standing order and if you are introducing such a standing order then I must strongly object. I am not prepared to let this occasion pass without giving you the benefit of my views on this important matter. I beseech you to take your place in the chair and allow other elected members to express their views on this point of privilege. Nothing less is acceptable.

Mr. Speaker: Obviously, I have—

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I am concerned about the decision which you are about to make and rise in support of the point of the individual members' rights to speak on the matter.

Mr. Speaker: I certainly respect that point of view. It was not my intention to limit anybody, but rather to facilitate the business of the House after having heard—

Mr. Breithaupt: This is the business of the House.

Mr. T. P. Reid: There is nothing more important.

Mr. Speaker: Order—after having heard the representatives of the three parties; however, if it is the wish of the members of this assembly that I hear further representation, I will be pleased to do so.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I am not going to speak on this. Obviously what my friends want is a chance to discuss this matter. The speeches the members opposite gave had nothing to do with a privilege matter. My speech dealt with the privileges.

To facilitate all members who wish to discuss this, with the agreement of the two other parties, we would be agreeable to suspending all other business and moving into the emergency debate right now.

Mr. Nixon: I would like to point out to the government House leader that if we suspend the business for a debate on a matter of urgent public importance, the minister knows full well that nothing is concluded. The clock runs out at 1 p.m. As soon as the debate starts his own colleagues disappear and do whatever they do. We look at all the blue seats.

In this circumstance, Mr. Speaker, this is a day when you are going to earn your money. You have had quoted to you the thinking of Mr. Valpy, Mme Sauvé and the Speaker in the House of Commons in 1680 on this. I want to submit to you, if you will give me an opportunity in a few moments, that obviously the Premier and the Treasurer are considering this matter lightly. They are counting on their 68 supporters simply to inundate the opposition and to support what may very well be the eventual ruling that our privileges have not been interfered with.

I would submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that if you were to judge that our privileges have been abrogated, the Treasurer is done. Obviously he is not prepared to make this decision on his own, as was clearly the example established by at least one of his predecessors.

He is prepared to sit there and smile with the Premier, with 68 members beating their desks thinking that is justice. It is up to you, Mr. Speaker, to realize that the documents in the Globe and Mail which we have read have already had an impact on the citizens of this province. Think of what the farmers of Brant-Oxford-Norfolk think when they see the expenditure for agriculture is to be reduced by 13 per cent. It is already less than 1.5 per cent of the budget. Can you think of what the bankers are going to say to the farmers who go in there to get an extension of their loan?

We stand in the place of the nine million taxpayers in this province. The traditions, the procedures in this province since we entered into Confederation and before, have been established on the secrecy of the budget. The Treasurer had his opportunity to use another procedure if he chose. He could certainly have opened it up, as he has said, and that may be the view of himself or his successors in the future. But he did not do that. He maintained it as secret, went through all of the jokes about Scary Tales comics and so on, but now we find, for example, that the money to be available for industry is to be reduced by 38 per cent, according to the papers in the Globe and Mail headed by Budget Statement by the Hon. Frank Miller, Budget 1983.

I would say to you, Mr. Speaker, if you consider that does not interfere with the business community, the farm community and our responsibility to represent them, then you are making a grave error indeed. If you do not make such a judgement in this connection, it means that the Treasurer, affable man that he is, with the support of the resurrected Premier of Ontario sitting back with his usual complacency when he is under any pressure at all, will simply laugh this out with the support of his 68 members.

It is up to you, Mr. Speaker, as the custodian of our privileges, to rule that they have been interfered with. When you do, there must be a resignation of the Treasurer, the establishment of a new budget, under new budgetary leadership, and nothing less is acceptable under the circumstances of our privileges being so seriously breached.

I simply end by saying, Mr. Speaker, that you must understand that we stand in the place of the nine million citizens of Ontario, residents of Ontario for whom we speak and who elected us, and that the breaches of information have affected business already. The farmers in my constituency, the business people in my constituency, had the right to receive this information all at the same time and not have it leaked out by press investigation.

There really is only one choice for you, Mr. Speaker, and that is to rule not that he should resign or that somebody was stealing something, or that a committee should look through garbage bags, but that our privileges have been breached.

Mr. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I want to deal with the comments made by the government House leader that this matter is somehow not particularly serious and does not constitute a breach of privilege because we are not dealing with a tax measure.

That is preposterous. The main leak, the main item that has been spilled from the budget, has to do with the five per cent Ontario health insurance plan premium increase. The government of Ontario raises hundreds of millions of dollars through the taxation of people through premiums. It is preposterous to argue that somehow this is a mere peccadillo, this is not serious, this is somehow insignificant—a five per cent increase in one of the major government user taxes, indirect taxes, sales taxes.

As if that were not enough, the Treasurer was heard on the radio this morning at least to suggest that he was prepared to pull a Lalonde and extricate himself from the mess that the government is in by somehow adjusting the budget between now and Tuesday night. The clear inference, and I may say the clear threat, is that there is a possibility of a further increase to the OHIP premium.

If the budget process of Ontario now gets to be created, adjusted, influenced, affected as a result of this process, we are in a complete and preposterous mess. The Treasurer has compromised the budget-setting process of Ontario in the most profound and complete way possible.

If he does not change the budget between now and Tuesday night, if he is unwilling to do it in front of the Legislature, he verifies that the leaks are indeed bona fide budget documents. If the budget figures are changed between now and Tuesday night, it is clear that the budget process itself has been affected by this.

Mr. Gordon: What a childish argument.

Mr. McClellan: I do not know what is childish about a major alteration in a major tax of the government of Ontario as a result of the negligence of the minister of the Treasury. It is a very simple proposition, and I fail to see how the government can think it will simply get away with this by stonewalling and steamrolling.

Mr. Conway: Mr. Speaker, I will be brief. I want to join in this debate—

Hon. Mr. Ashe: It doesn't look brief from here.

Mr. Conway: Mr. Speaker, if I may have your attention and that of honourable members, it is a serious matter. I appreciate the interventions that have been made by others. I simply want to make a few comments in specific terms.

First, it concerns me greatly that the indications are that the Treasurer knew as of about late yesterday afternoon or early last evening that this material was going to be in the public press at or around 10 p.m. last night, and I do feel that the privileges of honourable members have been abridged to this extent at least: that the Treasurer had a duty and an obligation to the 124 other members with whom he shares this place to come here at the earliest opportunity, to express himself on these matters and to indicate the circumstances in which this apparent leak or spill had taken place. That he did not do so is a serious breach of the privileges of the members of this House.

In fact, as the member for York South has pointed out, there may be a variety or a whole host of circumstances surrounding this material of which we are not yet apprised. The Treasurer had a duty, it seems to me, to come to this place as soon as he knew there was going to be this kind of press report to take members of this House into his confidence. In that respect he did not do the parliamentary thing, and I believe the privileges of this House, to that degree at least, were abridged.

The government House leader referred to Parliamentary Privilege in Canada, by Joseph Maingot. I do not want to repeat that, but I do want to indicate, as has been mentioned by a number of other members, that there is a variety of issues at stake. The fundamental one for me, of course, is the whole concept of ministerial responsibility, something the Premier (Mr. Davis) and I were talking about in this place some few hours ago. The principle of ministerial responsibility is absolutely central to this debate. The minister, as has been pointed out, has responsibility for this budget from its conception to its delivery on budget day.

Sir Geoffrey Howe, the current British Chancellor of the Exchequer, recently allowed, and I will quote one sentence from his comments on the subject of budget secrecy: "The budget is shrouded in secrecy until the chancellor unveils his master plan. He presents it as a fiscal fait accompli, receptive to neither the benefit nor the opportunity of prior examination or constructive comment."

I think in a real way this remark says it all. The principle of ministerial responsibility, as R. MacGregor Dawson points out in his much-referred-to book, The Government of Canada, is central to the basic principle of our parliamentary democracy. In my humble submission this principle of ministerial responsibility, and therefore the very essence of our parliamentary democracy, has been undermined in this connection.

Like other members—and I think of my friend the member for Bellwoods (Mr. McClellan)—I have complained to you, Mr. Speaker, on at least two occasions in recent months about the leaks around here. I can think of some involving the Minister of Health (Mr. Grossman), about which a number of complaints have been registered. Some of us, quite frankly, have harboured suspicions about how some of this material is getting into the public press.

I think of how many honourable members across the way chortled not too many days ago when the Minister of Health, in what I thought was a subterranean tactic to say the least, engaged the House in some debate about what the member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Kerrio) had been discussing in matters related to health policy. Talk about a breach of parliamentary honour. It seems to me we have been seeing too much of it around this place. We all know that the leaks have been a matter of ongoing concern.

In this case, I will conclude by saying that the Treasurer had an obligation to come to this House at the earliest opportunity, which was last evening some time between eight and 10:30 p.m.—in fact, the House sat until about 11:30 p.m.—to announce to this place what had happened and what his intentions were.

I heard a minister of the crown talking on a Toronto radio station about a police investigation and related matters. Those are very important issues, as I know the Solicitor General (Mr. G. W. Taylor) would agree. The Treasurer had an obligation, as an honourable member and as a minister of the crown, to come to this place and to announce his intentions and give some kind of initial explanation.

That he did not do so abrogated our parliamentary privileges. By allowing this alleged budget spill to carry across the pages of the daily press and much of the electronic media in this province has undermined the basic principle of ministerial responsibility.

I think the Treasurer has, as my colleague the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk has indicated, a first-order obligation in the tradition of the great Darcy McKeough to resign, at least to stand down until the air is cleared, and then of course to reconsider his position.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I simply want to draw to your attention two or three matters which perhaps you will take into consideration when considering this particular serious matter. I am referring at this time to the events other than the fact that the Treasurer did not see fit to make his first statement about this matter in the assembly, which I will comment on briefly in a moment or so.

When you are giving consideration to this question and, indeed, when the government is considering what it will do with respect to the future problems that need to be resolved because of what has transpired in connection with the appointment of a committee of this assembly to look into a number of matters, I would like to draw your attention to the matter which affected the brother of our colleague the member for Rainy River (Mr. T. P. Reid) when the sixth report of the standing committee on privileges and elections of the House of Commons in 1975 had to say, and I quote from that report—not all of the report, of course:

“Your committee reasserts the principle that the reputation of every member of the House of Commons must continue to be protected, because a reflection upon a member is a reflection upon the House itself. At the same time, your committee is conscious of the balance which must be struck between the principle that Parliament should be protected from improper obstruction of its functions and the principle of freedom of speech of the citizen to criticize the institution or membership of Parliament.”

Then I refer to the statement made by the then Minister of Finance, the Honourable Donald S. Macdonald, in the House of Commons on May 25, 1976, when he stated:

“The tradition of budget secrecy has two grounds. It is intended to deny anyone financial advantage from advance information. And it is intended to ensure that important statements of government economic policy are disclosed first to members of the House of Commons. Both of these reasons are valid and important.”

10:50 a.m.

I would refer to the study done by the parliamentary group on budgetary process in 1977, in which it states the rule would appear to rest on two premises. The first premise is that no one should be able to gain a private advantage by reason of advance information about matters to be dealt with in a budget. The second is that all important statements of government policy ought to be announced first at the House of Commons.

It then goes on to make this comment—I draw this particularly not only to the Speaker's attention but to the government's as it determines what will be done: “In practice, however, there has been very little in the way of critical analysis of the scope of the rule and the context of the role of the budget in modern times. Little has been written about the subject."

Mr. Speaker, I would say to you that the first question which you must decide is whether or not this is a matter of privilege. The consequences of your decision will then determine in large measure what the House must do, what the assembly must do and, indeed, what the government must do. In a funny way, the point of privilege is crucial to the ongoing determination of what course we may follow.

It is clear to me in any event, and I make this submission to the Speaker, that if it is determined that there has been financial advantage to anyone—whatever that term "financial advantage" may mean—I do not think the Treasurer has any alternative under the rigid, arbitrary and harsh rule.

If, however, it is not a matter in which it can be honestly determined there has been a financial advantage, then we come to a different question and that is the extent and degree of the negligence and the carelessness or the lack of proper precautions to protect the assembly, to protect the secrecy of the budget, and whether there was an omission on the minister's part.

I want to make it clear that there is absolutely nothing which would indicate that the minister himself has made any disclosure or that the minister himself has committed any indiscretion, which are part of the historic reasons why on other occasions either members of the cabinet or chancellors have been forced to resign.

Again I want to say to the Speaker, if he makes no decision at all on this issue until he has reflected on it, I wish he would make on behalf of this House the most formal statement he can to stop persons involved outside, who may be witnesses before a committee of this assembly, from making any statements to anyone.

This is why I felt very deeply and badly about the fact that the first comment I heard from the Treasurer was heard over the radio and in the media. I think that in itself is a serious matter.

It has just come to my attention that there is circulated from the Office of the Premier to members of the press gallery a statement saying:

"I have been informed that the chairman of the board of Carswell Co. Ltd. and Carswell Printing has an important statement to communicate to the members of the press regarding the incident reported in the Globe and Mail of this morning. Mr. Mullin, QC, can be reached by phone at his office at First Canadian Place, 39th floor, in the law offices of Fraser and Beatty."

I want someone to get on the phone to Mr. John A. Mullin of the law firm of Fraser and Beatty and, with the greatest respect as a classmate of his, I would tell him to tell the president of that company to keep his mouth shut until the matter is reviewed in this assembly.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, when we are talking about privileges in this House, there may be those in the public or, on occasion, in the press gallery who worry about how we view our opinions of what is going on in this province. But when one sees this news release brought before us over the name of Denis Massicotte it makes one wonder how seriously the government, its staff and supporters take this Legislature. It is very difficult, indeed it is upsetting and it is rude that we should see something like this as another side-door approach to the privileges of this House.

I have no quarrel with Mr. Mullin speaking to whomsoever he may wish. It may well be a convenience for the Premier's office, his staff and others to ensure that as many people are talking about this matter as is possible. It looks to me that instead of coming into this Legislature, perhaps with a statement on behalf of the people who are the printers, then I think—

Hon. Mr. Davis: It's right here. Give him a chance to make it.

Mr. Breithaupt: We will be delighted to hear from him in due course. It is things like this I find very upsetting.

Hon. Mr. Davis: He has been waiting since 10 o'clock.

Mr. Breithaupt: I am delighted to have the Premier's interjection that the Treasurer is prepared to speak to this House and we will give him the opportunity to do so right now.

Mr. Rae: Go ahead.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Come on.

Mr. Wrye: Come on.

Mr. McClellan: Make the statement.

Hon. Mr. Davis: He will be making a ministerial statement.

Mr. Foulds: Why doesn't he make his statement?

Mr. Mancini: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege: If the Treasurer is not going to speak, I would like to make a point of privilege. If the Treasurer wishes to speak, I will certainly give the Treasurer the floor.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest we move to ministerial statements and then we can resume this debate afterwards on consent of the House.

Mr. Mancini: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege: One could almost have felt sorry for the Treasurer until the statement from Mr. Massicotte was brought to our attention.

Unlike the leader of the third party, I do not believe we should first put the Treasurer in jail and then find out if he is guilty or not. That is not the main point in the points of privilege that have been raised today. The main point that has been raised is whether or not the Treasurer inadvertently or purposely abused the privileges of the members of this House. We will find out later under what circumstances the situation took place.

When the Treasurer of Ontario has his credibility smeared, it not only affects him but it affects the whole province. It affects all the business structure of Ontario. Indeed it affects the people on Wall Street who are going to borrow money for the Treasurer on behalf of the people of Ontario.

The $733 million which, as was stated in the Globe and Mail, was to be borrowed for our short cash flow is going to have a serious impact on the people of this province. Unless the Treasurer can give an adequate explanation as to how these matters appeared to take place, all of us are on the losing end of this situation.

Yesterday evening I was truly shocked to see the front page of the Globe and Mail. Never could I have imagined that a leak of this proportion could have taken place under the secrecy that is to be encircled around Treasury documents. When we were able to read about the shocking cuts that were to take place, I truly believe that not only affected the members but all the communities of this province.

Also, yesterday evening we awaited some word from the Treasurer. We were truly disappointed that he saw fit to meet with the press and not to meet with the members of this Legislature. That is a second breach of privilege the Treasurer has brought upon the members of this House.

Mr. Speaker, you will recall that last Tuesday certain questions were put to the Premier. He told us to wait until the budget date. He said he could not give us any further information at that time. If the matters were secret on Tuesday, then they should be secret today, they should be secret tomorrow and they should be secret until the time allotted for the Treasurer to make his statement next Tuesday.

I do not want to go on to repeat what other members have said, but I have to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that if what took place yesterday is not a breach of the privileges of the members of this House, then there is very little that can take place in this chamber that can breach anybody's privileges.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Kitchener-Wilmot (Mr. Sweeney).

Mr. Gordon: Here comes the bishop.

Mr. Bradley: The Premier will not like that comment.

Mr. Sweeney: Mr. Speaker, you have just been advised by some of my colleagues of our great displeasure at the way in which the matter of Carswell Printing Co. has been handled. I would like to read into the record the statement from Carswell Printing Co. The statement is by Mr. John Mullin, chairman of the board of Carswell Printing Co.

"Carswell Printing Co. has maintained the best possible methods of ensuring secrecy in relation to the printing of the provincial budget, which it has done for many years. These security measures are under the supervision of the Ontario Provincial Police and have been approved by them. They include the shredding of all scrap. It appears, however, that a few proofs of pages were placed in garbage which was not shredded but which remained on the printing plant property. These scraps were searched for and removed by a reporter or reporters who quite improperly trespassed and invaded the plant property and searched the garbage, which was still the property of the printing company. Consideration is being given to instituting procedures for theft."

Mr. Speaker, we should fully understand that these security measures are part of the jurisdiction of the Treasurer. As a matter of fact, on Wednesday of this week, when the Treasurer playfully held a photo session with reporters, it was reported that he took painstaking measures to ensure that he did not leak the budget.

It is also known that up until two years ago the security staff of this building was responsible for the security of the budget. At that time the Treasurer decided to make a change, and make the Ontario Provincial Police responsible for it. What I am trying to point out is that the Treasurer clearly understands himself, and has taken measures to ensure, that he is ultimately accountable and responsible for the secrecy of this budget.

The second point is that the Treasurer has clearly indicated by his actions and by his words that the secrecy of the budget is manifestly important to him. As my colleagues have already indicated, he could have chosen not to adopt a secrecy procedure. He did so choose and, therefore, he is responsible for it.

The House leader of the government party has indicated to us that our individual privileges have not been misused. We have to realize that each one of us in this opposition party is responsible, as a member of Her Majesty's loyal opposition, for being a critic of the various ministries of this government. Yet we are advised through this leak—it is not a leak; it is a deluge—that 37 per cent of the budgetary allotment for the Ministry of Industry and Trade is going to be reduced. I suggest, as critic for that ministry, that this does impinge upon my responsibilities as critic and my responsibilities as a member of this Legislature.

That says to the people I am trying to represent in this House that there is going to be reduced growth and development in the area of industry and trade, at the very time when we need increased growth and development. It says there is going to be a reduction in research and development, at the very time we need an increase in research and development. It says there is going to be a reduction in employment opportunities, at the very time we need an increase in employment opportunities. It says there is going to be a reduction in productivity gains, at the very time we need increases in productivity gains.

That is the message that is clearly being sent out to the businessmen, the manufacturers and industry in Ontario. That may not be the intention—I see the Premier shaking his head—that may not be the intention, but between today and next Tuesday that is one of the messages that can clearly go out, and that is an abrogation of my privileges as a member of this House.

It is also clearly indicated, with respect to any possible gain by people outside this House, there are three or four issues that have been brought to our attention through this leak. We see, for example, that corporation tax revenue is supposed to go up by 29 per cent. We know from every single indicator that has been given to us from other sources that the economy of this province is certainly not going to grow by 29 per cent. Some of that 29 per cent would be accounted for by growth. Part of it must be accounted for in some other taxation measure. We do not know what they are, but there is bound to be rampant speculation on Bay Street today and on Monday and Tuesday as to how the government accounts for that 29 per cent, and it is going to affect the markets in this province.

We also know that the Treasurer has boasted over the years that he did not have to go out and borrow money on the public market. He has said they did not do that and they did not want to do it. Yet this report indicates that up to $733 million is going to be borrowed on the public market. Does that not send a signal out there? Does that not indicate something to investors and borrowers and lenders? It most certainly does. It is a significant leak.

We see in this report that the transfer of money from the federal government to the provincial government is going to increase from $1.9 billion to $2.3 billion. At the same time, we see that provincial transfers to municipalities, agencies and boards are going to increase from $5.4 billion to $5.7 billion. Does that not send a message to the business community? Does that not send a message to those who deal with provincial-municipal relations? Darned right it does.

All those people now have information they are going to act on in one way or another. We do not know how they are going to act on it, but the information now is in the public domain and can make a difference to how people make decisions over the next two or three days. That is a leak of substance. That is a leak of importance.

Mr. Speaker, my privileges as an individual member of this House have been invaded and abrogated. My privileges as a critic in Her Majesty's loyal opposition have been abrogated and, therefore, with legitimate right, I stand before you and say that you must so decide.

Mr. McClellan: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: We are prepared to listen to the Treasurer if he would do us the courtesy of making a statement.

Mr. Breagh: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: I want to make a couple of comments. One of the things that I am beginning to find rather aggravating is that the House has now been in session for a rather lengthy period of time. I had anticipated, quite frankly, that the Treasurer would have made a statement to the Legislature this morning.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Let us recognize the rights of the members. The member for Oshawa rose on a point of order.

11:10 a.m.

Mr. Breauch: If I might just continue briefly, I have been sitting here in the Legislature this morning waiting for the Treasurer to account for what happened—what was reported last night and this morning on the radio. There have been probably a dozen opportunities for the Treasurer to take the floor in the course of this debate or before it, or, on a number of occasions now, for the government to ask other members to give way so the Treasurer might make that statement.

Paramount to all the arguments about privilege, secrecy and all that is the simple rule I would recognize as being the first one: the Treasurer has an obligation to explain to us, the members of this Legislature, just what the hell happened.

I do not see much indication that this is going to occur, and on the point of privilege that members are purportedly debating this morning I would think the Speaker would want an explanation from the Treasurer as to what did occur.

So I am going to use a not-often-used part of our standing orders. I am going to give way so that the Treasurer may now rise in his place and explain to us just what did occur.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, there has been great comment about the proper procedure today. I have a statement. I assume that ministerial statements are made under orders of the day. I am prepared to make my statement under orders of the day when the matter of personal privilege has been resolved. I will do it at that time.

Mr. Rae: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: The point of privilege that has been raised by members on this side is a question that can be answered only in the course of the privilege debate by the Treasurer himself. It is a matter the Treasurer has to respond to, and for him to hide behind a ministerial statement and refuse to deal with this in the course of this discussion with respect to the privilege, in itself demonstrates a contempt for the proceedings of this House.

Mr. Speaker: I think we are getting a little ahead of ourselves. The point of privilege was raised, and he was—

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is my decision to make, to find out whether a point of privilege has been made or breached.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Will the honourable member please resume his seat?

Mr. Riddell: Mr. Speaker, I have two or three points I want to make to the point of privilege.

First of all, I am bothered by the contempt that the Conservatives show for this House and this issue. I have been watching them drift in and out, and there was a point when there were fewer than 40 members in the House on the Conservative side. This is a major issue, and those benches should be filled to capacity when we are discussing an issue of this kind.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Will the honourable member just confine his remarks to the point of privilege?

Mr. Riddell: As the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk indicated, we have been elected to this Legislature to react, to respond and to represent nine million citizens in this province. Not only that, but I think it is our duty to dispel any suspicions that the people outside these chambers may have about the parliamentary process and the way in which members are supposed to be guided by parliamentary tradition. I want to deal with that in the last of my comments.

I represent a certain group of people known as farmers, as many other members do in this Legislature, and they have been visiting my office in droves, asking what they may expect in the budget, because it will certainly have an effect on what their plans are going to be. In other words, they have been asking me whether we might expect some kind of financial assistance, either long-term credit or a reinforced Ontario farm adjustment assistance program. They have been making arrangements with their bankers whereby the banks would take a mortgage for a year, let us say, hoping something will be announced in the budget so they can then transfer that mortgage to a long-term financial credit.

Based on the information we received in the throne speech, and based on information I received from the Deputy Minister of Agriculture and Food, I have been telling the farmers there is some glimmer of hope that the farmers might well expect something from this government. Then we see from this budget leak that there has been a 13 per cent cut in the agriculture budget.

When the comments have been made, the Premier has been saying, "It has been printed in the estimates year after year after year." What a preposterous statement that is. When we did the Ministry of Agriculture and Food estimates last time, there was no mention of a 13 per cent reduction in the agriculture budget. With the agriculture budget now being 1.1 per cent of the total provincial budget, where can one cut any more if the farm industry is to be saved? That is what they are worried about and that is what I am worrying about.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: You are doing the farmers a disservice with your games.

Mr. Riddell: What is going to happen is that when the farmers now go into lending institutions to get loans, the lending institutions are going to say—

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: You are a disgrace.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Will the honourable member resume his seat, please? Let us listen to the member for Huron-Middlesex.

Mr. Riddell: There is great confusion in the farming industry as a result of the leak in this budget, because at this time, when the farmers are going in to arrange operating loans to plant their crops, the lending institutions now are going to say based on this budget: "The government obviously is not committed to your cause because of the 13 per cent reduction. Why should we be committed?" The farmers are going to be in more trouble as a result of that leak. With that in mind and with what I have been telling the farmers, I figure my privileges have been breached.

Last, I mention about dispelling suspicions. I have been receiving calls since last night from people who are a little suspicious of what has gone on. We all know that it would take at least a day, so I am told, to prepare the wide spread that was in the Globe and Mail to have it come out in the Globe and Mail last night.

Questions are being asked of me. I hope the person to whom I am going to direct this will get up and dispel any suspicions. What they are saying is, "Is there any connection between the budget leak of yesterday and the decision of the Premier only hours before that he was not going to contest the leadership?"

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Will the honourable member resume his seat, please?

Mr. Riddell: Will the Premier get up in his place and tell us he did not know the budget was in foreign hands before he made that decision. Will he do that?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The honourable member will resume his seat.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I do not think I heard the honourable member. So we can all hear it, would he please state what he said in the last part of his question? I do not think I heard it. I hope I did not hear it. I cannot think of one of his colleagues who would tolerate what I think I heard.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The member was departing from the point of privilege. I am of the opinion that the presentations are becoming somewhat repetitive. I think we have had a fair representation of opinion and submissions. I wonder if I could get a consensus or a feeling—

Mr. Nixon: Not without hearing from the Treasurer.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege. I want to speak to the other matter of privilege in a moment to try to help to sort it out a little bit.

On a matter of personal privilege, I believe the member for Huron-Middlesex (Mr. Riddell) either asked a question or phrased a statement coming from his own fertile imagination that may show on Hansard—and I will look for it. In fairness to every single member in the House, including members of his own party, if I heard him correctly and I hope I did not, this is an opportunity for him either to restate it, not saying he has been asked this by others but recognizing it is a statement made by him, or withdraw it.

Mr. Riddell: Mr. Speaker, first of all, let me say it was suspicions that were raised with me. But if the Premier wants to take the debate and move it to the part I mentioned, then I will withdraw the latter part of my remarks.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It was a cheap shot.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, on the point of privilege: We certainly see it as being in your hands to direct that the Treasurer respond to the points that have been raised, to bring this discussion of the point of privilege to an end.

If I can come back to the main point of why we are here, it is because there has been an unprecedented budget leak. The Treasurer failed to stand up at the opening of the session this morning to explain what had happened, and he should now make that explanation as part of the point of privilege. I therefore give way to the Treasurer so he may speak.

Mr. Speaker: I will hear one more speaker and then we will get on to the routine proceedings.

Mr. Van Horne: Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that I am the last in our party who was to speak anyway, and I will be brief.

An hon. member: No, you are not.

Mr. Van Horne: I am not? Sorry about that.

At any rate, the point made by the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk in the very beginning was that he simply wanted to have the right to do what he is elected to do, and that is to speak in this chamber. Mr. Speaker, you have granted him that right and I think it applies equally to all of us. If there are others, I am sure you will be so kind as to listen to them too.

My point is very simple and very brief. I point out that we are taking this matter of privilege very seriously because it affects the credibility of the whole parliamentary process and, in turn, the credibility of its members.

If we look back at the throne speech we find a couple of statements in there that I think are related to what I am saying now. We read first that the government will introduce measures to contribute to an enduring economic recovery that will create the jobs necessary to allow Ontarians to lead productive lives and that it will strengthen the management of the province's affairs. Certainly the budget is part of that.

It goes on to say that emphasis will be placed on strengthening the province's long-term economic potential. My colleagues have indicated the seriousness of this particular happening on the monetary matters of this province and the international money market, and certainly for people within the community who have to go to banks for loans. I am referring, of course, to members of the agricultural community.

Finally, if I can paraphrase what the Treasurer said this morning when I listened to him on one of the radio stations, he said essentially that the issue is not who goofed or how the information got out; the issue is whether in fact information did get out, and if it did, the Treasurer or the minister has to accept responsibility. He made a point of repeating that. I do not think there is any question that the information got out. What we want to hear is him accepting the responsibility for it getting out.

Mr. Speaker: I indicated when I recognized the member for London North (Mr. Van Horne) that he would be the last speaker to be heard. I would like to think I could have the co-operation of the House to get ahead with the routine proceedings.

Mr. Nixon: You are certainly going to get lots of co-operation from the Premier and the Treasurer on that one.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Renfrew North, briefly.

Mr. Conway: Yes, Mr. Speaker, very briefly. It concerns me a great deal that this morning there have been two versions of a statement released by Mr. John Mullin, chairman of the board, Carswell Printing Co., referred to by the member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick).

The Liberal Party research individual picked up what I will call exhibit 1 at the offices of Fraser and Beatty. There is a second version, which I will call exhibit 2 and which was circulated in the Queen's Park press gallery. These are not the same scripts. It is the same language, clearly. The layout and the typing is different. I am suspicious about the difference.

The office of my friend the Premier was associated with exhibit 2. Perhaps he will speak to that. This is of great concern to those who have had this kind of experience. The Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Timbrell), who in an earlier incarnation was Minister of Health, will recall doctored documents. I want to submit exhibits 1 and 2 of the Mullin statement and ask you to consider them, and the Premier may wish to clear the air. We want to be sure the Carswell Printing Co. is speaking for itself in all respects and is not acting in some adjunct capacity for anyone else.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, to try to confine the issues somewhat, I will speak very briefly to the last point raised by the honourable member.

I have not seen exhibits 1 or 2—I have seen the notice given—because our office has been inundated by requests from the press and others with respect to this matter. I am quite prepared to accept either version of Mr. Mullin's statement. There is no authorship in the Premier's office or anywhere else; I do not think we should let that obscure our discussions. I am not familiar with either of the two statements. The member says there may be some difference—

Mr. T. P. Reid: You shouldn't be involved in his statement at all.

Hon. Mr. Davis: He asked that this be transmitted, I gather. I do not see any harm or any problem with that. I just do not want that to become part of the issue.

Mr. T. P. Reid: That is not the function of the Premier's office. Will you send out mine?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Listen, we are here, it is a Friday morning, and people communicate. With great respect, the members opposite do it on their stationery day after day. There is nothing improper in that.

Mr. Conway: Did you get your office to type one of these copies?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I do not have the foggiest idea.

Mr. Conway: Can the Premier find out?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Sure. But I do not think it is relevant, with respect.

Mr. Speaker: I think we should now proceed—

Mr. McGuigan: I would like to challenge your ruling, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: It is not a ruling. I am acting at the request of the House; I am in your hands. I just made the observation that I felt the representations were becoming repetitive.

The member for Kent-Elgin.

Mr. McGuigan: Mr. Speaker, I direct my remarks only to you. My privileges have been abused in this situation, because yesterday, today and all this weekend I have appointments to meet with farmers and businessmen.

One of the farmers has been presented a letter from his bank saying that under the Ontario farm adjustment assistance program the bank will go along with him this year provided he signs a statement saying he will voluntarily liquidate next year. This man has seed ready to go into the ground this very day. He is looking to me for advice as to whether he should chuck the whole thing, put an end to it now, or go ahead and plant those crops.

How can I, as a conscientious person, offer that man advice when we have a report that there is such and such a thing in the budget, that we are sending out a signal to bankers and financial people and all involved that we are downgrading the agricultural industry? Is that in the budget or is it not? At this moment I do not know, and I do not know how I can respond to those people.

Interjection.

Mr. McGuigan: The Treasurer has been invited many times.

I have people who are involved in the new employment expansion and development program. One man has put about eight years into a project; it is at the very crucial stage as to whether or not it goes forward. If it goes forward, a great many people will be employed; if it does not go forward this man will lose his property, his goods, his house and his furniture, and he could very well be out on the road. What sort of advice can I give that man this weekend when I do not know what signals are being sent by this government?

11:30 a.m.

On Sunday I am going to a celebration in Dresden, to the opening of a museum that is celebrating 100 years since the death of Josiah Henson.

Mr. Gordon: You'll fit right in, you're just about that age.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Isn't the Premier ashamed of that remark by his colleague?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The member for Rainy River will please resume his seat.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, on a point of personal privilege.

Mr. Speaker: No, there is one on the floor and I am listening to it.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I will deal with it as soon as—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. McGuigan: Mr. Speaker, I make no apologies for my age. The Lord willing, I will be 60 years old this November.

Mr. Speaker: Now to the point of privilege, please.

Mr. McGuigan: Those 60 years have taught me a little bit about humility, about honour and about tradition, and that is what we are really talking about here in this whole debate.

I am going to be speaking on Sunday at this celebration of 100 years since the death of Josiah Henson. One of the things that comes to mind is that 150 to 200 years ago there were people who said slavery was a necessary evil: it was evil, but you had to have it. But there were other people who said there was a higher morality, that the British system meant more than the economic system. The people of morality prevailed and we did away with slavery.

Where is morality today in this situation? I would not feel so bad about the Treasurer had he come in here last night and laid it on the table. Had he resigned and had the Premier rejected the resignation, I would not feel so bad about it. But we were cut off in this Legislature. We have a flood of press releases. We have all of these uncertainties that abridge my privileges as a back-bench member who on this weekend has a lot of people to deal with.

I am very sad and I am very sorry about the events that have happened. I just feel that those traditions and those high principles are being voided, and I am sorry for that.

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Speaker, under standing order 19(b) I move that the Treasurer do now speak.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The member for Rainy River rose first.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I would not ordinarily do this, but I sat here yesterday afternoon and was lectured by the Premier himself in self-righteous tones that I have not even heard outdone by the New Democratic Party about name-calling and personal references.

In the last half hour in this House we have heard, from the Conservative back benches, one of my colleagues referred to as "the bishop," and I believe it was the member for Sudbury (Mr. Gordon) referring to my friend in derogatory terms with regard to his age.

Now I would presume, Mr. Speaker—

Interjections.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I'm not being self-righteous.

Mr. Speaker: Never mind the interjections, please.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Perhaps we do not have a standard here, as I had presumed. The Premier was addressing himself to it yesterday, and lectured us ad nauseam, so I presume that he will do the honourable thing, stand in his place and repudiate those two remarks on behalf of the Conservative caucus.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Sudbury, please. Order.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, on the matter of personal privilege—

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: I will recognize the Premier because he is going to respond directly. The member for Sudbury shakes his head.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, in the heat of the debate I have to say that my remark was unparliamentary and I certainly withdraw it and apologize to the member.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, on the matter of personal privilege raised by the member for Rainy River—

Interjection.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Okay, the point of order. I would like to reply to the point of order.

The member for Sudbury has already indicated that he withdraws his remark. I would only say to the member for Kitchener-Wilmot

(Mr. Sweeney), and I do not say this facetiously, I was at the traditional Easter gathering of the Catholic bishops of Ontario and the trustees' association some many years ago and I was introduced as Bishop Davis. There was great applause and I was very flattered. I have never considered that as being a derogatory term, and I am sure his colleague will not.

If the member is going to get up and ask me to discipline or say something to members of my caucus, I am prepared to do that—

Mr. T. P. Reid: You lectured us all afternoon yesterday.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Now listen, that's fine.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Sure, you can be as pious as you want. Maybe you should be a bishop. I've never seen one as pious as you are.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Speaker, if you had not heard me previously, I move under standing order 19(b) that—

Mr. Speaker: I have indeed heard you, and I was going to deal with that.

Mr. Foulds: —the Treasurer, the member for Muskoka, do now speak.

Mr. Speaker: I must point out that that covers the rules of debate and we are not really having a debate. We are dealing with a point of privilege that was raised by the Leader of the Opposition. We have been confining our remarks to that point of privilege, so really it does not fall within the parameters of the standing orders to accept that motion.

Mr. Nixon: On that point, Mr. Speaker, if I may: There is a motion before the House; you are about to rule it out of order, perhaps, but I would like to speak on it just before you do.

Mr. Speaker: Which motion?

Mr. Nixon: The motion that the Treasurer be now heard. You have not ruled it out of order, but you are getting fairly close to it.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk.

Mr. Nixon: I must say I agree to some extent with what the honourable member put forward. It is incredible that the Treasurer has not risen in his place to defend himself in this important point of privilege. He has said he is prepared to speak in ministerial statements, which come up later.

Mr. Speaker, perhaps you are supposed to draw the information you require for your important decision from something that is said after this debate. The Treasurer probably presumes that because he is a minister he has some special privilege in this connection; but it seems to me that he is badly advised by his seatmates to the left and right when he does not rise in his place as an honourable member and explain this situation.

It may very well be satisfactory to his colleagues and to the Speaker, but how can the Speaker make a legitimate decision without hearing the Treasurer's defence?

I have every sympathy with the purpose of the motion before us. You can lead a horse to water, but you cannot make it drink. The House can vote to hear the Treasurer, but if he will not speak there is nothing we can do but urge him to do the proper thing, and that is speak on this point of privilege.

Mr. Rotenberg: Mr. Speaker, on the point raised by the member for Port Arthur (Mr. Foulds), it says, "A motion may be made by any member who has risen." I would submit the Treasurer has not risen and therefore the motion is out of order.

11:40 a.m.

Mr. Speaker: If I may deal with the motion that was made by the member for Port Arthur—

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Speaker, may I speak to it?

Mr. Speaker: But you already have.

Mr. Foulds: No, I haven't. I just made the motion. You never allowed me to speak to my own motion.

Mr. Speaker: I thought you were on your feet twice.

Mr. Foulds: I just want to say I find it absolutely incredible that we have this very important matter before us. The Treasurer has indicated by various means, as has the Premier, that he has a statement to make, and that statement has to do with the most important matter that is before this Legislature in this province, and it has not been made. Whether the procedure is through a point of privilege, through a ministerial statement, or through rule 19(b), I plead with the Treasurer and I plead with the House, to allow the Treasurer to speak.

Mr. Speaker: This is a matter of procedure, and to deal with the motion which was made by the member for Port Arthur I would have to rule, as I think he well knows, that the motion is indeed out of order. That, first of all, covers rules of debate, and second is only applied when two or more members rise to speak at the same time. I rule the motion, however well intentioned, out of order.

We are dealing with a point of privilege which you have asked me to take into consideration. I will do that and will give it my most serious consideration. I would like to thank all those honorable members who have taken the time to make me aware of their views, and now if we can get on with routine proceedings we will have statements from the ministry.

STATEMENT BY THE MINISTRY

BUDGETARY PROCESS

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I wish to give a report to this House—

Mr. Rae: Mr. Speaker, I just want to observe to the Treasurer that I do not have a copy of the statement, which is the normal courtesy.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I wish to give a report to this House on the incidents which have occurred in the last 24 hours with respect to certain aspects of the production of the 1983 Ontario budget. I will begin by sharing with the members the sequence of events that took place yesterday afternoon.

First, members of my Treasury staff were alerted Thursday afternoon to apparent attempts to breach security at the premises of Carswell Printing Co., where I had planned to have the budget printed. As a result of this, a request was made to the Ontario Provincial Police, who are responsible for part of the security of the budget, to investigate this matter.

Yesterday, I met in my office with Robert Stephens and Rosemary Speirs, two reporters from the Globe and Mail. This meeting took place at their request. At that time, they showed me documents purported to be parts of my budget. I have not received from the Globe and Mail copies of these documents.

As the members of this House know, I cannot comment on any of the specifics of my budget. If I were to do so, I would be breaching budget secrecy. However, I can say that the documents that were shown to me yesterday did not appear to be from final drafts of my budget, nor could they have been since final decisions have not yet been made.

Interjections.

Hon. F. S. Miller: That happens to be true.

The actual drafting of a budget begins long before the final decisions are made. As every member of this House knows, the preparation of a budget is a very complex process and involves the compilation and analysis of complicated financial information. To expedite production, I send preliminary material to the printers very early in the process, in fact well before decisions have been finalized, and make revisions to the proofs as required.

From the first day of this process the OPP is responsible for security at the Frost Building, where the budget goes through its drafts, and at Carswell Printing Co., which has the contract to print the budget. This security arrangement is a long-standing one. Until this occasion, that process has worked well. In addition to special OPP security at the Carswell plant, the tender for the printer includes this clause, which I quote:

The printer is required to, "Guarantee absolute security and secrecy of any and all parts of this job while in his possession, e.g. manuscript, galley proofs and page proofs, printed sheets and folded sheets. Any spoiled parts must be shredded immediately."

Let us review what has happened here. Draft documents which the reporters allege may have formed part of an earlier draft of my budget have apparently been picked out of the garbage at the commercial printing establishment by a Globe and Mail employee. There is no suggestion that any material related to the budget came from me or any member of my staff.

As of today, final decisions have not been made on the 1983 budget, nor have final drafts been printed. I have now directed that the budget preparation process be revised and that the entire production of the budget, including reproduction, be transferred to the Treasury building where it will be under the strict control of my staff. I have asked my staff to report to me by Monday on whether or not logistical changes will require me to delay the presentation of my budget. I will inform the House of my decision on Monday.

In addition, I would like to put on the record the statement that was issued by Mr. John Mullin:

"Carswell Printing Co. has maintained the best possible methods of ensuring secrecy in relation to the printing of the provincial budget, which it has done for many years. These security measures are under the supervision of the Ontario Provincial Police and have been approved by them. They include the shredding of all scrap. It appears, however, that a few proofs of pages were placed in garbage which was not shredded but which remained on the printing plant property. These scraps were searched for and removed by a reporter or reporters who quite improperly trespassed and invaded the plant property and searched the garbage which was still the property of the printing company. Consideration is being given to instituting proceedings for theft."

ORAL QUESTIONS

BUDGET CHANGES

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Treasurer. In the Globe and Mail of today he is quoted as saying that he had finished the budget. Yesterday he apparently said he was still doing some rewriting of the text but was making no changes in the figures. He purportedly said that three days ago. Is that quote correct or not?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, at about 11:30 yesterday morning I was talking to at least one reporter on this matter. I said to him I had the second draft I had seen of the text of the budget as opposed to budget papers. Those budget papers this year, as I may have explained, are being bound separately simply to have flexibility. That was decided six months ago—no, three months ago.

At that point I was making a number of structural changes to the phraseology and as a matter of fact following that, at the request of one minister who was privy to a program, I made a program change. That was at the specific request of one minister who wished me to remove something. That was done.

Mr. Peterson: Just so I understand, because there is a lot of confusion over the sequence of the details here, is the Treasurer saying it is incorrect that three days ago he had finished his budget? He is making changes. Is that what the minister is saying to the House, or is it his intention to change the figures further?

Hon. F. S. Miller: For example, I had no idea the program which I had included and which I thought had been approved by a minister, when passed by him yesterday was not approved by him. That made a change which I did not expect to make. If the honourable member says three days ago, I would say that on Monday morning I was still working on figures and made a number of changes because I had some legal requirements with the government of Canada for certain notices, and those changes were coming fairly late in the day. I had left open the possibility of change but it is factually correct to say I had not planned any more dollar and cent changes.

Mr. Rae: Mr. Speaker, does the fact that the Treasurer has decided to change the method of production and reproduction of the budget, and transfer it to the Treasury offices themselves, indicate that the previous measures taken were inadequate or that there was a problem with them? Does he not feel a sense of personal responsibility for the deficiencies in security which appear to have taken place?

Hon. Mr. Miller: Mr. Speaker, if any papers are available anywhere through any means obviously the system of security broke down. I would think that answers the question the member raised. Am I responsible? For all of the lecturing that has gone on this morning, some of it serious, some of it a bit pious, I would suggest to the member I have never ever taken my responsibility lightly, nor assumed that I, as Treasurer, was not responsible.

Mr. Peterson: Do we have the Treasurer's assurance or is the Treasurer making any further changes to his budget? In addition to that, is there any additional material missing that was not quoted in the press? Has he made inquiries to that extent, and is, in fact, what was printed in the Globe and Mail correct?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I would have to go through the Globe and Mail in great detail to make sure if it were correct or not. Because I was given a set of pages which looked very much like many other pages—I do not have them all memorized—I was trying to decide whether they were part of the budget document, whether they were part of the budget papers or whether they were part of the estimates being printed by the Management Board of Cabinet.

Several of those possibilities appeared to be open when I saw the first documents yesterday. Therefore, I cannot categorically say everything is correct or that it is not correct, nor do I wish at this point to speculate, because if I tell the honourable members what is right or wrong at this point I have committed a breach of confidence in the budget.

Mr. Peterson: Having been able to solve the logistical problems of transferring the printing back to the Treasury department—assuming he can do that—is it the Treasurer's intention to go ahead on Tuesday?

Hon. F. S. Miller: It is my current intention to go ahead on Tuesday and the reasoning is this: I believe I have taken the minimum possible time between Mr. Lalonde's budget and the mechanics of having mine adjusted to match his. I believe the economy of this province deserves a budget as soon as possible. I would not like to see the budget process delayed and I would like to say I intend to deliver that budget as Treasurer.

Mr. Peterson: I assume the Treasurer admits to saying—because I heard the tape—"I thought that the rules were such that one had to quit after that sort of thing." That was his response to the Lalonde indiscretion. Is the Treasurer telling us now in this House that he does not believe his indiscretion, or the mistakes made in his ministry, were similar and that he has absolutely no responsibility?

Is he telling us he does not have any obligation to honour his own advice to the federal finance minister? Does he not feel he has a responsibility to resign, given his responsibility for the security of the documents as well as their contents?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I am going to be giving that continuing thought. I believe what I said in a very brief press conference last night was that I would deliver the budget before considering any alternatives to resignation or staying on in office. I intend to do that.

I suggest there is a great deal of difference between what appears at this point to have been something that was less than legal in a mechanism for obtaining information and the direct holding of a current budget in the hand of a minister in front of a camera. I suggest there is a big difference.

Mr. Rae: Mr. Speaker, in the second paragraph on page 2 of the Treasurer's statement he says he is not going to comment on any of the specifics of the budget. However, he wants to tell us the drafts that were there did not appear to be from final drafts of his budget, nor could they have been since final decisions have not yet been made. Is the Treasurer telling us he intends to make further changes now as a result of the information having been disclosed?

Hon. F. S. Miller: No, Mr. Speaker, not on the basis of what the member alleges to be the disclosure of information.

This year, I deliberately left the printing process with roughly a 24-hour time span between printing and delivery so that I could make changes right up to that point, based upon economic need or other tax matters.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, in view of all this, does the Treasurer not think it is time he changed the whole budgetary process? Should he not make it a more open situation and accept some of the very valid and positive remarks of the Leader of the Opposition and even myself on the whole matter of producing the budget and putting it forward? Does he not feel a lot of these things could be avoided if we brought the budgetary process in Ontario into the 1980s?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, my honourable friend and certain members of his party are very good parliamentarians. I have learned to respect them. I would think they should understand there is a difference between the British system and the American system which he appears to want us to emulate.

In the American system, there is a committee that does peruse and adjust budgets. In the British system, a government is held responsible for a budget provided by a finance minister. I have to take that basic responsibility and I share that with very few colleagues. It is then brought forward to this House and a government is either defeated or upheld on the basis of the budget. It is not a shared responsibility in the British system.

Mr. Rae: There is a serious question here which has to be dealt with. I think it is a question of what is a budget and what is a budget leak.

According to what the Treasurer is telling us, the budget is entirely a movable feast and can be different on Wednesday from what it was on Tuesday and different on Tuesday from what it was on Monday and so on through the weekend, back and forth. If that is so, there can never be any such thing as a leak of budgetary information, according to what the Treasurer is telling us. It would always be possible for him and his ministry to change the budget once certain information has been revealed.

In that respect, is it or is it not the intention of the government to raise Ontario health insurance plan premiums by five per cent? Is that a feature of the budget that is set in stone? We are entitled to an answer to that question. Is that or is that not a feature of the budget?

Hon. F. S. Miller: The member will discover that on Tuesday.

Mr. Rae: What we will discover on Tuesday is whether or not the Treasurer and the cabinet, after meeting about this matter, have decided to change their minds once the information has been made public. That is what we are going to find out on Tuesday and that is a very different thing.

Mr. Speaker: Question, please.

Mr. Rae: I would like to ask the Treasurer to answer directly: Did he or did he not tell members of the press earlier this week that the budget was finished? Did he or did he not say he had finished his budget?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Yes, I did. I also tell the member that since that time I had to change it because of forces that existed before I even knew of this leak. Therefore, I had to change it after thinking it was complete.

Mr. Conway: Mr. Speaker, the Treasurer himself has admitted in the public press that there are documents awash in the city of Toronto that, to quote him, "could ruin his life." He has admitted here this morning that he has not yet had an opportunity to complete the inventory of lost or missing material. We can understand how difficult that might be.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It is impossible.

Mr. Conway: The Premier says it is impossible.

My question to the Treasurer is, how can he plan to go forward in three days' time to introduce a budget in this House that may have been breached in ways that the Treasurer this morning and in the intervening hours may not be able to satisfy himself about? How is that going to be possible? How is he going to know when he stands in his place here on Tuesday that some of this information has not disseminated beyond the immediate confines of Queen's Park?

Hon. F. S. Miller: The point I was trying to make, Mr. Speaker, was that once I read my budget you will know whether there was or was not a leak and you can hold me accountable.

Mr. Rae: With respect, the record will show the Treasurer has told us there was a leak. I would say to him the only person who knows as of today whether there has been a leak is the Treasurer, and what was a leak on Friday may well prove not to be a leak on Tuesday if the government decides to change the budget.

Does the Treasurer not feel that the whole budgetary process has been flawed and that the credibility of the budget has been seriously undermined as a result of what has happened? Does he not think he now has an obligation to start again? I suggest he should step down from his position and let someone else start the process over again until we determine by means of a parliamentary committee precisely what has happened with respect to this extraordinary leak.

Hon. F. S. Miller: The police are investigating what happened. I would like to know what the police find. I think that is important. Once they have had a chance to complete an investigation, I suspect we will learn in this House what the results of that investigation are. Until that happens I do not want to speculate.

As to the rest of it, I believe, and I hope the member believes, it is important right now to have a budget brought forward. It is in the interests of the unemployed about whom he talks quite a bit. It is in the interest of the economy. I believe I have many measures not hinted at anywhere that are of use to the people in this province who need help.

BUDGETARY PROCESS

Mr. Rae: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Treasurer can tell us, since he has admitted there has been a leak, whether he has any idea if there are any more. Does he know whether there is any other information floating around? Is he going to wake up tomorrow morning to discover that more information has been leaked?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, that is a one-sided alternative. I do not know what I do not know.

Mr. Rae: I am not sure the Treasurer knows what he knows, and that is the problem. He certainly is not telling us what he knows, and that is another problem.

I ask the Treasurer in all seriousness whether he does not feel the credibility of this budgetary process has been undermined. Does he not feel that the publication of this information with respect to the five per cent Ontario hospital insurance plan premium increase, with respect to the cutbacks in expenditure on the Ministry of Industry and Trade and the Ministry of Agriculture and Food, the prepublication of that kind of information in itself, taints the entire budgetary process?

Does he not feel it is important that we start again with a fresh Treasurer and with a fresh approach rather than proceed in a manner that is going to leave so many questions unanswered, because he is the only one who is in a position to answer them?

Hon. F. S. Miller: First of all, the member asks about the process. I suggest that perhaps I have lost just a little confidence in the collection of news and what in fact is a legitimate way to go about collecting news. He talks about the budget process having been depreciated. I suggest to him that when somebody comes to me and says, "I was testing the security of your system," that is not what I consider the normal technique of collecting news. I have no idea what will be found. If one deliberately sets out either to break the law or to find ways and means of obtaining otherwise well-guarded information, I do not think that is the normal technique that has been used by what I think are very fine people in the press gallery.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, is it now fair to say the Treasurer's position is that he has rejected the time-honoured tradition and responsibility that the Treasurer is responsible not only for the contents but also for the security of the budget document? Is it now his position that he is not responsible for the security of those documents? Is that what he is telling this House?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, what I said was that the members will not know what my budget is until I deliver it. They will then have an opportunity to assess whether they believe there were genuine leaks. I have never tried to say I am not responsible for the process. I am not sure about, and I have not had legal advice on, the extension of that responsibility to purloined information.

Mr. Peterson: It is a moral question. You don't have any moral counsellors over there.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, on a matter of privilege: If that gentleman thinks I find this easy or that I have somehow lost my moral competence in this, I suggest he does not know how I have felt for the past 12 hours.

Mr. Rae: I simply say the Treasurer is the only person in this House who knows as of today whether there has been a leak. That is why the question becomes one of personal honour. The Treasurer today is the only person in a position to know whether there has been a leak; that puts a particular onus on him to make a decision.

Mr. Speaker: Question, please.

Mr. Rae: If the Treasurer is not prepared to make a decision on resignation today, which I regret, is he at least prepared to see that as of today this entire matter is referred to the standing committee on procedural affairs?

Hon. F. S. Miller: No, Mr. Speaker. I simply suggest this: I have a responsibility and a duty to bring forward a budget. I see that the highest needs of the province will be served by doing that. I have not in any way tried to say I will not be considering whatever responsibilities I may have once the member sees the document. I want the member to see that document. I want it to be in effect so we can at least start the actions that are contained in it.

BUDGET SECURITY

Mr. Conway: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Treasurer. God only knows what else is missing. Surely that is the point. That is the real concern. We do not know what is missing and we are going to get a budget that may be compromised because of that ignorance.

Mr. Speaker: Question, please.

Mr. Conway: My question to the Treasurer deals with the second paragraph of his statement: "I will begin by sharing with the members the sequence of events that took place yesterday afternoon. First, members of my Treasury staff were alerted Thursday afternoon of apparent attempts to breach security at the premises of Carswell Printing Co. where I had planned to have the budget printed."

At exactly what time and by whom were his Treasury officials notified? Can he now share with the members of this House the specifics of what that breach of security was alleged to have been?

Hon. F. S. Miller: No, Mr. Speaker. I suggest the Solicitor General (Mr. G. W. Taylor) has pointed out to me that his own investigations are more likely to succeed if I or others do not speculate on, or give information about, the information in his hands.

Mr. Conway: As he knows and I am sure understands, that really makes the job of the official opposition and all members who are inquiring into this situation very difficult.

Mr. Speaker: Question, please.

Mr. Conway: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Don't you want to get at the truth?

Mr. Conway: The Premier says, "Don't you want to get at the truth?"

Mr. Speaker: Never mind the interjections.

Mr. Conway: Yes, we do; and of course the wall of sub judice has been put before us many times before.

Hon. Mr. Davis: We haven't mentioned that. 12:10 p.m.

Mr. Conway: Given the Treasurer's rather unique and personal view of the essential and central convention of ministerial responsibility, can he explain to me and to this House why, after having been told some time late yesterday afternoon that this storm was about to break, he did not come to this House last evening at eight o'clock or some time thereafter to give members of this assembly an indication of what was taking place and what kind of initiative he was undertaking with the Solicitor General to protect this most sacred of government processes and documents?

Why did the Treasurer not retire from Napoleon's restaurant last evening just long enough to share at least that much with the members of this assembly gathered in evening session, as I think he ought to have?

Hon. F. S. Miller: The question as to whether anything at all should have been said last night was discussed. I had been told by the Globe and Mail at approximately 6:15 p.m. that it would publish information last night. I had no reason not to believe that was so. By eight o'clock, I was aware of certain information in the Globe and Mail.

At that point I felt it was just as wise to let the rest of the press gallery know that was happening and that I would have the information for a statement this morning once I had a chance to look through some of the material. If the honourable member went through what was very short advice to that group of approximately four or five reporters, he would discover I simply told them a story was being printed that night and I would be checking its authenticity and checking the documents purported to be from my budget.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I was certain I heard the Treasurer on the Metro Morning interview this morning indicate that the Ontario Provincial Police was responsible for the security measures surrounding the budget, and I notice in his statement to the House he has now said the OPP is responsible for part of the security. Will he tell the House who is responsible for the security and what agencies of government share that responsibility?

Hon. F. S. Miller: It is not an agency of government, Mr. Speaker. In fact, it is in my statement, which I read to members, that the printer has responsibilities; that is, he shares part of the responsibility.

BUDGET PRINTING CONTRACT

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, on page 3 of the Treasurer's statement he says: "The printer is required to 'guarantee absolute security and secrecy of any or all parts of this job while in his possession, e.g. manuscript, galley proofs and page proofs, printed sheets and folded sheets. Any spoiled parts must be shredded immediately."

That is a contract the Treasurer signed with the printer. It was a part of the tender put out by his ministry. If that is what he expects of the printer, whose responsibility is it to make sure the contract is fully and totally carried out?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I think the contract is signed by the Ministry of Government Services as the major manager of that type of purchase and it is done on behalf of Treasury. Any time a contract is tendered, there are performance requirements. It does not matter whether one is building a building or printing a book. If there is a breakdown in the performance from one point of view or another, usually there are some penalty clauses or other actions one can take. There has appeared to be a breakdown in that clause. I do not know what actions will be taken. I will be awaiting legal advice on that matter.

Mr. Cooke: I am sure the Treasurer approves the specifications for his contracts on matters of budgetary tendering. Is the Treasurer saying to us that it is not his responsibility to make sure this contract is fulfilled? Is he saying the security breakdown does not come back to him, or is he now saying it is the responsibility of the Minister of Government Services (Mr. Wiseman) or perhaps the Solicitor General? Where does the responsibility lie in this parliament?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Obviously the police are involved. I assume the police report first to their minister and secondly to me. I am held accountable, as are ministers of the crown on the collegial basis for our actions. In no way am I trying to put that on anybody else. I think the honourable member is trying to make it look as if I am; I am not.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, was the minister personally briefed on the security aspects of farming the job out to an outside printer? If he is not now satisfied, for obvious reasons, how can he so conveniently move it back into the Treasury building, where it probably should have been in the first instance?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, this is my fifth budget. In terms of being briefed on security arrangements, since I believe the same printer has been used each time, I was briefed earlier and I was rebriefed after this incident for refreshment.

There are lots of things that can be done in-house at greater cost. We had no reason in the first 10 years to have any reason to believe the security measures were not adequate. We found the efficiency and cost of the outside firm to be to our advantage and therefore we used it. Now that security is probably seen to be more important than cost, we are bringing it back in-house with some difficulty.

BUDGET CHANGES

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, it has been said by two or three members that the Treasurer is the only one who knows whether a valid leak has occurred. He is reported in the Globe and Mail yesterday as having assured that the figures were final, without any equivocation. He has now gone back on that and has said one specific program had been changed because of an oversight in one of the ministries.

Can he tell this House whether the figures we have all read in the Globe and Mail are part of the budget as it was established in his mind before the leak, if it was a leak? If he has assured himself of that, is it his intention that those figures will be changed?

Hon. Mr. Miller: No, I cannot, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nixon: This is the catch 22 we face. There is only one person who knows whether there was a leak. It is really completely invalid to say one has to see what is in the budget to know whether a leak has occurred. The minister is personally responsible for this and he knows the course of action that is necessary. For him to say that if he comments on that in any way, he simply reveals the contents of the budget ahead of time is the worst kind of sophistry I have ever heard.

The minister has stated clearly that it has nothing whatsoever to do with how the information becomes public. When a leak occurs, he has only one course of action. Does he not see that in his own mind, if a leak has occurred, his resignation must be put in the hands of the Premier?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I am aware of the rules.

OHIP PREMIUMS

Mr. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Treasurer. Is it not a fact that his government raises more money through the Ontario health insurance plan premium than it does through corporation taxes and that it is a major source of revenue for this government? Can he tell us again, because we still do not understand, whether the five per cent increase in the OHIP premium, allegedly a leak from his budget in today's Globe and Mail, is a leak from his budget?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I said I will not comment on that.

Mr. McClellan: We went through this same episode three weeks ago in Ottawa and it cost the taxpayers of Canada $200 million to save Marc Lalonde's neck. Can I have some assurance from the Treasurer that the people of this province are not going to have to pay through the nose in the form of even higher OHIP premiums as a result of what has happened with his budget?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I cannot make a comment on it. I would like to point out to the honourable member that OHIP premiums do not even have to be in the budget. They are subject to regulatory change.

Mr. O'Neil: Mr. Speaker, from his discussion of the leaks and from his discussions with the reporters from the Globe and Mail, can the Treasurer tell us whether they have additional information that will be printed, or was that the total amount they got from the garbage bag?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I have answered that question previously. I do not know.

ASSISTANCE TO FARMERS

Mr. Riddell: Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Agriculture and Food. Is the minister aware that some of the lending institutions are telling some of the farmers they will not honour the guaranteed line of credit portion of the Ontario farm adjustment assistance program because the Ministry of Agriculture and Food itself is going to guarantee only a certain portion?

With the announcement in the budget leak that there will be a 13 per cent reduction in the agriculture budget, is the minister not concerned that the lending institutions now are going to take a very firm stand and say to the farmers, "It is obvious that the government has very little commitment to the agriculture industry, so why should we risk giving you a new line of credit?"

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I remind the honourable member that in the recess between the extended fall sitting of the Legislature and the resumption of the House I met with representatives of the major chartered banks to discuss the question of credit to the agriculture industry, specifically to the part of the industry that concerns the member in his question, the farmers.

The net result of those many meetings was a clear conclusion, stated by them to me, that they see agriculture as a continuing priority, an industry in which they want to continue to be involved and in which they see a growth in activity in 1983—that is to say, they would foresee extending more credit to agriculture in 1983 than in 1982.

In addition, I think it is fair to say, not only from my private meetings with the banks but also from statements attributed to them in their appearances recently before a parliamentary committee of the House of Commons and from statements of the bankers' association, that they see the farm adjustment assistance program in this province as an example of how governments, the lending community—which is broader, of course, than just the banks; as the member knows, it involves credit unions and trust companies as well—and the agricultural community can work together.

To go to the opening part of the member's question, if he has specific cases about which he is concerned, the door, as he knows, is always open. He frequently sends me over notes about individual cases, and they are always tracked down.

We pride ourselves in the ministry that, as much as or perhaps more than any other ministry, we do deal very fairly with individual cases. One of the member's colleagues, the member for Grey (Mr. McKessock), gave me a case just yesterday, as a matter of fact, which we will begin to look into today and, I hope, be able to resolve.

Mr. McGuigan: Mr. Speaker, the minister just said the parties can work together, yet I mentioned earlier a case where the bank has said, "We will go on with the bank's recommendation and the OFAAP recommendation only if you sign this agreement to go into voluntary liquidation a year from now." How is the minister dealing with such cases? I know of one case that has been brought to his attention.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: On an individual basis, Mr. Speaker. There are well over 80,000 farmers out there. To date, we have about 3,700, I guess, who have been or are involved in the farm adjustment assistance program. No two cases are exactly the same; we have to deal with them on an individual basis.

If the honourable member has not already drawn that individual's case to my attention or to the attention of my deputy minister or members of my staff, I wish he would do so because, as I have said, the offer is totally open to all members of this House—indeed, to anybody concerned about an individual farmer's financial situation—to track down on an individual basis all of the facts and, where possible, to assist in achieving a resolution.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that loans to farmers will have been put on hold as of last night, and, oh yes, in view of the urgency and the need for farmers in even the next three or four days to have assurances of those loans, has the minister been in touch or will he be in touch with the banks to express any displeasure about putting those loans on hold because of the budget leak?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, with respect, the honourable member is really building something of a straw man. He knows that the farm adjustment assistance program has been extended through 1983. He knows, surely, although I cannot recall his drawing any individual cases to my attention, that we are in touch on a daily basis with the lending institutions—I use that broader term because it is more than just a bank; there are a number of trust companies and credit unions which are also part of OFAAP.

I have absolutely no reason whatsoever to believe, nor should the member—he is raising a spectre which will unnecessarily concern some people—that the information quoted in today's press will in any way, shape or form, influence any lender's decision.

Mr. Swart: The Minister of Agriculture and Food is out of touch with regard to the loan situation relative to farmers and the jeopardy they are in.

Mr. Speaker, I have a new question to the Treasurer on the same subject. My understanding of his position on the budget leak is that he will not confirm the accuracy or inaccuracy or the degree thereof of the budget provision, as reported by the Globe and Mail. I think that is an accurate interpretation of what he said.

Irrespective of the accuracy, does the Treasurer not think that a 13 per cent decrease in assistance to agriculture would be a major economic mistake and would demonstrate an unconscionable degree of heartlessness towards the plight of the farmers?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, my friend the member jumps to conclusions. I would suggest he should see the details before he makes any assessments of what is happening in the budget.

Mr. Swart: Now that the situation is changed from when the leaked budget was in preparation, now that there will be no race among the ministers for the Premier's chair and now that there is no need for the Treasurer to undercut any of his colleagues, including the Minister of Agriculture and Food, will the Treasurer give this House the assurance that the final budget which will come before us here on Tuesday will, far from containing reductions, contain substantial increases for agriculture?

Hon. F. S. Miller: The member will know on Tuesday.

Mr. Conway: Mr. Speaker, just so that we are clear: The Treasurer intends to proceed with the budget on Tuesday afternoon at four o'clock, even though he by then may not have satisfied himself that he has fully contained the leak. Is that a correct understanding?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, they are speculating on a leak. I am making no more comments on it.

Mr. Speaker: The Solicitor General has the answer to a previously asked question.

DEATHS AT HOSPITAL FOR SICK CHILDREN

Hon. G. W. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, as the honourable members will recall, on April 28 I advised them of an investigation into the death of a child at the cardiac ward of the Hospital for Sick Children. The investigation by the Metropolitan Toronto Police began on April 24 after consultation with Dr. Bennett, the chief coroner. Elevated levels of digoxin were found.

A team of scientists at the Centre of Forensic Sciences has conducted further tests. The investigating officers have met with Dr. Bennett and his staff, Dr. Hastreiter and Dr. Kaufman, experts in the field of paediatrics and digoxin, and with crown counsel and the Deputy Solicitor General.

I have now received a report of the results of the meetings from Dr. Bennett and my deputy, Mr. McLeod, and can advise members that, after receiving both medical and legal advice, the police are satisfied the case should not be treated as a homicide. Accordingly, the events surrounding this death will be the subject of an inquest, which has been set for Tuesday, May 24, 1983.

I can also advise the members that Dr. James Young, the regional coroner for Metropolitan Toronto, will be conducting the inquest.

12:30 p.m.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, can the minister assure this House that there will be no limitations placed on the coroner's inquest? Can he tell us if relevant portions of the report of the Atlanta Centers for Disease Control, which do not point the finger at individuals but deal with the whole issue of digoxin, will be tabled so that the coroner and the people involved can have a look at all the information relevant to the toxic and lethal levels of digoxin?

Hon. G. W. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, when a coroner conducts an investigation there is a statutory duty upon that coroner to seek out the information he or she feels is necessary to continue the investigation. I am sure the honourable member would not want me to direct the coroner as to what information he is to look at and what he is not to look at. It is an investigative hearing conducted by the coroner as a hearing officer.

The experienced regional coroner from Metropolitan Toronto, Dr. James Young, will make the determination of what he needs to investigate that death. As I said, I am sure the member would not want me putting in anything that would probably be described at that point as political interference on this very important hearing matter before the coroner.

BUDGET CHANGES

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Speaker, the Treasurer admitted this morning that there has been a leak of material to the public. He has admitted that substantial material has become public. He has admitted that material is related to the budgetary process. Can he tell us if the rewriting that is taking place at this moment and that will take place throughout the weekend in the Treasury offices will have absolutely nothing to do with the incident of this material becoming public last night and with the material that has been made public and released to the public?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, the member is on a flight of fancy. He can speculate as much as he wishes. I will make no commitments.

Mr. Foulds: In the material that has been made public, it has been indicated that there is a cut in the Ministry of Industry and Trade expenditure of 37 per cent. Can the minister confirm whether that has been contemplated at any time in the budgetary process? Can he confirm whether that is the thrust of his budgetary policy? How can he justify that in terms of the job creation that is so necessary in the province at this time?

Hon. F. S. Miller: As I said to the member for Welland-Thorold (Mr. Swart), do not jump to conclusions until you see the budget.

Mr. Foulds: You will be rewriting history, Frank. You are pulling a Lalonde.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Wrye: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Treasurer a question that has been asked in a slightly different way. Can he inform us what assurances, after he became aware of the leak—

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Wrye: Can the Treasurer inform us what assurances he sought from the reporters or from the newspaper involved, after he became aware of what he described as a leak in this House this morning, as to what other aspects of the budget the newspaper or the reporters may have, what documents they may still have in their possession?

What assurance has he sought to make sure they have no additional material so that no aspects of the budget he is to present on Tuesday, which may be favourable to insider knowledge, could result in financial gain? Is he satisfied, and has he sought assurances, that the Globe and Mail has no other leaked documents?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, that is the third time the question has been asked. I do not know.

CUTBACKS IN EXTENSION PROGRAMS

Mr. G. I. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Agriculture and Food. In view of the leaky budget that came out last night and the cutback of 13 per cent that has been estimated in the report, I have received several letters from various women's institutes and other groups expressing concern about cutbacks in extension programs such as 4-H—

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. G. I. Miller: —short courses and home economics adult courses—

Interjections.

Ms. Copps: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Thank you. Order.

Mr. G. I. Miller: —currently provided by the Ministry of Agriculture and Food. Is the minister planning on making cutbacks in these programs under the new rural organization and services branch of his ministry?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I did not catch the question.

Mr. G. I. Miller: I will run the question by him one more time. I have received many letters from various women's institutes and other groups expressing concern about cutbacks in extension programs such as 4-H short courses, services provided to the rural community and adult home economics courses currently provided by his ministry. Are there going to be cutbacks in those services to the rural areas of Ontario through his ministry?

Mr. Riddell: It took you three months to appoint an agricultural representative in Middlesex county.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Is the member displeased with the decision?

Mr. Riddell: No, I am pleased with it.

Mr. Speaker: Never mind the interjections please.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The member is happy we took the time to make sure we found the right individual.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Haldimand-Norfolk has been recognized.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I will not deal with that. I will deal with that on Monday night when I am in Huron-Middlesex.

The ministry is making no plans to cut such services. In the reorganization of the ministry and the creation of the rural organization services branch, it has been our intention all along not only to maintain the services to the rural community, but within the bounds of our budget and our staffing to try if anything to be of more service to the rural community.

In the next couple of days the member should receive a memorandum I have sent to all members of the House outlining the distribution of staff in both the agricultural representatives branch and the rural organizational services branch. The members will see, when they get that memorandum, that we are maintaining, not cutting, services to the rural community.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Can the minister assure us there will be no cutback in staff at the local offices such as the ag rep offices at Cayuga and Norfolk and in other areas around Ontario? Can he assure us there will be no cutback in the staff and that service will be provided?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I do not have the memorandum here and I cannot recall each individual office. There have already been some redistributions depending on the work load. Some counties are more demanding, have a heavier work load for certain services, and as always there will be some redistribution of staff in that regard. To answer the question, we are not planning to cut services to the rural communities.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, if the leak proves to be true and there is going to be a 13 per cent cutback in his overall budget, in which departments of his ministry will he make the cuts?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to discuss any aspect of my ministry both after the budget next week and when we start estimates on June 1, rather than dealing in hypotheses based on press speculation.

FUNDING FOR MINISTERIAL PROGRAMS

Mr. Mackenzie: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Industry and Trade. Now that the minister is aware he may be facing a 37 per cent cut in his ministry, can he tell us what programs he would cut to accommodate such a reduction in his funding?

Hon. Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, anyone with any understanding of the ministry and of the budgetary process would realize there is probably a distortion within the system from the point of view of purchases made by the ministry that were attributed to the ministry last year, which this House passed and that would relate to statutory decisions made by this House.

I have nothing further to relate to that. I cannot tell the member what is in the budget. I do not know that. None of the ministers is aware of the details of the budget. However, by a simple cursory look at the estimates of the ministry and of the infusions of a statutory grant during the last year, one would come to the conclusion immediately that the member is totally off base in the question he is now posing.

Mr. Mackenzie: With the desperate need for jobs in Ontario today, would the minister not agree that any savings he is talking about would be more than offset by the need for job creation programs and assistance to industry that is going to create jobs from his ministry? Can he assure us there will not be any cuts and that additional funds will be available for job creation in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Walker: The budget will be what it is and the estimates will be what they are. I suggest the member should go back and take a look at what has been passed by this House and by him specifically in recent years. He will finally come to the conclusion about how any figures might be arrived at. The member is not doing much on his research. He had better take a look at it. He is digging in a little further than he should on it.

Mr. Sweeney: Mr. Speaker, the minister has indicated he has no idea what is in the budget for his ministry. Yet the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) indicated 10 or 15 minutes ago that some minister came to him and wanted a program change, so obviously he must have some idea.

The information is now out there that somehow, some way, 37 per cent is going to be cut out of the minister's budget. I think the minister would have to agree that could be interpreted, correctly or not, as a cut in research and development, a cut in productivity gains or a cut in employment opportunities.

We still have three or four days and there are people out there who could be employed, who could be making market decisions, who could be making investment decisions. Can the minister assure us those are not the places where his share of the budget is going to be cut? Can he make that claim?

Hon. Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, I think the member is digging himself in deeper and deeper. What he had better do is go back and have a look at his figures from last year. One look at them and he will know the answer to his question. Both these members have to do better research.

HYDRO CONTRACTS

Mr. Kerrio: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy regarding another obvious bit of mismanagement on the part of Ontario Hydro. I am referring specifically to the 15-year contracts with Petrosar that amount to roughly $1 billion and which have already cost Ontario consumers some $60 million for not taking oil.

Can the minister tell us why there has been no allocation in Ontario Hydro's submission to the Ontario Energy Board relating to this cost? Is he aware that if the $105-million lawsuit by Petrosar under the contract is successful there could be an increase in Ontario Hydro rates of up to 12 per cent rather than 9.7 per cent? The minister might also share with the House what it might cost to cancel these atrocious contracts with Petrosar for oil we do not need.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I just have one or two observations in response to the question from my learned friend.

I suppose it is always comfortable to be able to second-guess decisions that were taken some years ago by people who were charged with the responsibility to ensure there was a security of supply for the fuels that would be needed so that the people of this province would have an uninterrupted source of electricity.

Whatever judgement may be brought to bear on the wisdom of those earlier decisions, the honourable member will also know that this contract is the subject of litigation. Thus it would be improper for me to speculate with respect to the outcome of that until such time as the litigation has been dealt with.

Mr. Kerrio: The minister should be able to recall us questioning Hydro on uranium contracts and other important contracts relating to supply of the basic fuels for Ontario Hydro. I certainly do not go along with his comments on the future guarantee of oil. He knows very well our sister provinces out west have an abundance of natural gas and much of this oil did not have to be bargained for so far in advance. We know now it was an incredibly bad deal.

Would the minister consider tabling the contract and also consider reconstituting the select committee, so that this committee of the Legislature could do some of the very worthwhile things that were done during a minority government, when it seemed the government was more willing to be answerable to the people of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Perhaps the member will have an opportunity to look over his question in Hansard and will perhaps then be able to appreciate the chronology.

I am sure that at the time of the negotiations with respect to the oil supply, the adequacy of relying on natural gas was very much in question. The member will know the history with respect to those developments. I am not that far back, perhaps, in the energy history of this province.

However, I repeat what I said, this matter is now being litigated and I think it would be wise to await the outcome of that before offering any further comments in response to the member's question.

BUDGET PRINTING CONTRACT

Mr. Philip: Mr. Speaker, will the Treasurer ask the Minister of Government Services (Mr. Wiseman) to table the printing contract with Carswell Printing? Will he reveal what penalties exist for breach of the contract, particularly breach of the security provisions of that contract?

Mr. Foulds: Doug, that's you; Minister of Government Services.

Hon. Mr. Wiseman: No, it was to the Treasurer. Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Would you ask the Minister of Government Services to investigate the contract to see what provisions were made—for security?

Mr. Philip: I will repeat the question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: All right.

Mr. Philip: Will the Treasurer ask the Minister of Government Services to table the contract with Carswell Printing? Will he reveal what penalties exist, if any, for breach of that contract, particularly the security provisions of that contract?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I will consult with him to see if that is in order.

Mr. Philip: Can the Treasurer tell us whether or not there are penalties for breach of the contract? Can he tell us whether there are any documents other than the contract, such as ministerial guidelines or memoranda of understanding, with that company? Most important, will the documents be tabled in this House?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I answered the last part first. I do not know the answer to the penalties. I assume there are always some ways and means of recovering costs if a contract is not properly completed.

Mr. Ruston: Mr. Speaker, what steps did the Treasurer take when he heard on Wednesday that there was some problem with the security at the printing office?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, it was Thursday when I learned about it. I do not want to make any comments. I do that on the advice of the Solicitor General (Mr. G. W. Taylor).

BUDGET ADVICE

Mr. Conway: Mr. Speaker, I have a final question to the leader of the government, because the leader of the government must surely know from his long experience in the assembly that what we have witnessed here in the last 18 hours is unprecedented in the long and distinguished parliamentary traditions of the Ontario Legislature.

Does the leader of the government not share with all honourable members a sense of deep concern about the impact not only of this leak but also of the rather exceptional reaction to it by his Minister of Treasury and Economics?

What specific advice will the leader of the government be tendering to the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) over the next 72 hours, as he tries to prepare a budget for delivery here at 4 p.m. on the afternoon of Tuesday next, in the event that the Treasurer cannot isolate and contain the leaks, which he himself has indicated this morning he has no control over at this time?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, because the time has run out, I will be tendering just one word of advice to the Treasurer and that advice will very simply be this: I have confidence in him, I have respect for his integrity, I think he is a great minister of the crown, and I will tell him that so he can mull it over in the next 72 hours.

ALL-ONTARIO PITCH-IN DAY

Mr. G. I. Miller: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege: The All-Ontario Pitch-In Day 1983 campaign begins on May 9 and runs to May 15. I wonder if the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Norton) is going to make any comments in regard to supporting this campaign, and are the Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson), the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Pope) and the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow) going to be involved in it?

Mr. Speaker: The time for oral questions has expired.

12:50 p.m.

KENTUCKY DERBY

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, before the introduction of bills and other matters, I would like to draw the attention of the House to an event that will take place tomorrow featuring a very distinguished Ontario product.

I am sure the members of the House will want to join with me in extending to Mr. Dave Foster, the owner, Mr. David Cross, the trainer and Mr. Eddie Delahoussaye, the jockey, the thought that the hopes of all Canada are with them on—

Mr. R. F. Johnston: I thought that looked like a racing form in your pocket.

Hon. Mr. Drea: If members want to make derogatory remarks about an industry that produces 40,000 jobs in this province, let them go ahead, Mr. Speaker.

The very fact that a breeding industry and a thoroughbred racing industry such as we have in this province, which not only provide jobs but are so important in the preservation of agricultural land, can produce such a distinguished colt as Sunny's Halo is indicative of the tremendous endeavours of the people in this sector of the agricultural community of this province.

While the horse is being wildly heralded as a Canadian product, it should be underlined that he is a product of Ontario breeding, an industry that has been massively supported by this government, an industry that now is achieving worldwide recognition and providing more jobs, more opportunity and more export sales.

I am sure all members will want to join with me and the government in extending our congratulations, our best wishes, because this particular horse has had a most distinguished winter season. Even if it does not fare as well as it should tomorrow afternoon about six o'clock, the people of Ontario are very proud.

WITHDRAWAL OF MOTION

Mr. Speaker: Before proceeding with the orders of the day, I have been advised by the New Democratic Party House leader that the motion which was going to be submitted by the member for York South (Mr. Rae) has been withdrawn for today and is to be resubmitted for consideration Monday next.

MEMBERS' PRIVILEGES

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order. You may recall the circumstances of the House last evening when you were called from your office to take the chair and hear the report of the committee of the whole from its chairman.

After you received the report and had it approved by the House, I attempted to get your ear, as the first opportunity when a matter that I considered of importance could be brought to your attention. For reasons not known to me, you refused even to recognize the fact an honourable member was on the floor trying to get your attention and simply kept repeating that the House was adjourned.

Perhaps you could explain to the House the sequence of events that led up to that. I would just like to say to you, sir, that if you had some strong feeling that nothing of that nature could be raised because of the hour it was quite within your powers to say so.

My own feeling is that in a matter at least one member considered of importance, and I believe was important, it might well have been possible for you to hear the submission. I regret very much it was not possible to do that and at the time I felt the conduct of your duties did not live up to the standard that, frankly, I have come to expect from you.

It is not for me to criticize, but I felt I had to put that to you and hear your response.

Mr. Speaker: Thank you very much. There was not any mystery and it was a matter of discussion when it became quite obvious that time was going to exceed the normal limit for adjournment.

Mr. Nixon: And had.

Mr. Speaker: And had indeed, yes. I would refer the member to standing order 3(a) and 3(b). The hours of adjournment are set in the standing orders. I do not have any discretion to change those. The only way they can change is by the passage of a government motion for that purpose, but such government motion shall not pass if 20 members choose to oppose it.

It is a matter which is dictated to the Speaker by the standing orders, over which I have no discretion.

Mr. Nixon: If you will permit me, Mr. Speaker, I have just one brief, further comment. In view of the importance of the job you hold, there have been occasions, which may come forward again, when your own judgement in these matters might prevail over a rigid reading of the standing orders, whatever the advice you may receive. I feel quite strongly that you, as a member of the House as well as the Speaker, should know in this instance that I felt my own privileges were not properly safeguarded, and should know the strength of my feeling in that regard.

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate having the member's point of view, but I must point out to all honourable members that I have to have regard for the standing orders no matter who they are applied to, and deal with them in an evenhanded way.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, we will not take the time to go into committee of the whole House and then out, which would be for only a few minutes.

The House adjourned at 12:57 p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

Monday, May 9, 1983

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

QUESTIONS TO MINISTRY OF EDUCATION

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege: I wonder if you might inquire of the Premier (Mr. Davis) whether under standing order 27(h) he has instructed the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson), in her continuing absence because of her health, to answer on her behalf.

Mr. Speaker: I think it is really not my responsibility to pass along questions to other members. I would suggest that perhaps the appropriate time to raise this would be when the Premier or the Deputy Premier (Mr. Welch) arrives.

COMMISSION ON ELECTION CONTRIBUTIONS AND EXPENSES

Mr. Speaker: I beg to inform the House I have today laid upon the table the eighth annual report of the Commission on Election Contributions and Expenses for the year 1982.

MEMBERS' PRIVILEGES

Mr. Speaker: At this point I wish to rule on the question of privilege that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Peterson) raised on Friday last. The question is of considerable importance and I have carefully reviewed the arguments presented by a number of honourable members as well as the cases specifically cited and the parliamentary law texts.

The privileges of the House are stated in general terms in the 19th edition of Erskine May's Parliamentary Practice at page 67 as follows:

"Parliamentary privilege is the sum of the peculiar rights enjoyed by each House collectively as a constituent part of the High Court of Parliament, and by members of each House individually, without which they could not discharge their functions, and which exceed those possessed by other bodies or individuals."

To be considered a question of privilege, a matter must pertain to a right or immunity which the ordinary citizen does not enjoy. These special rights and immunities allow the Legislature to meet and carry out its proper constitutional role, members to discharge their responsibilities to their constituents and persons involved in the parliamentary process to carry out their duties and responsibilities without obstruction or fear of prosecution.

The principal privileges of the House or of its members are cited in the Australian parliamentary text, House of Representatives Practice, at page 645, and include the right of free speech in Parliament, the right of the House as a body to freedom of access to the Lieutenant Governor, immunity of members from arrest, detention or molestation for civil causes during defined periods, immunity of members from the obligation to serve on juries, immunity of witnesses summoned to attend before the House or one of its committees from being questioned or impeached for evidence given before the House or a committee, the power to order the arrest and imprisonment of persons guilty of contempt or breach of privilege, and the power to expel members.

The Leader of the Opposition and the member for York South (Mr. Rae), as well as a number of other members, stressed the importance of ensuring the secrecy of the provisions contained in the budget until it is presented in the House, the responsibility of the Treasurer and Minister of Economics (Mr. F. S. Miller) to take all the necessary steps to preserve the confidentiality of the budget, and the right of the House to call the minister to account for any breaches of budget secrecy.

The budget by its very nature must be kept secret until it is presented by the Treasurer in the House. Such a practice is, of course, necessary to prevent financial speculation and the loss of revenue to the government treasury. These reasons were enumerated by honourable members on Friday last. However, I have been unable to find any precedent which states that the matter of budget secrecy is one which may be treated as a question of privilege. The Leader of the Opposition made reference to two cases in the United Kingdom concerning budget disclosure. In neither of these cases was the matter treated as a breach of the privileges of the House, nor were the cases sent to the committee on privileges for inquiry.

The 1936 case, involving Mr. J. H. Thomas, concerned a disclosure by Mr. Thomas, of certain budget secrets, when he was colonial secretary. The matter was investigated by an extra-parliamentary tribunal of inquiry and the secretary was found to have, without authority, disclosed contents of the budget. Mr. Thomas resigned on his own initiative from the government and from the House. The 1947 case, involving Hugh Dalton, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, concerned the disclosure to a reporter of budget information. The matter was raised by way of a notice of motion standing in the name of several private members. The motion called for the appointment of a select committee to inquire into the circumstances of disclosure. Mr. Dalton resigned on his own initiative the position of Chancellor of the Exchequer before the select committee was struck to consider the matter.

Budget secrecy is a political convention, as is the practice that the Treasurer presents his budget in the House before discussing it in any other public forum. It has nothing to do with parliamentary privilege. My decision is supported by the decisions of a number of Speakers in several jurisdictions, including Speaker Sauvé on November 18, 1981, and most recently on April 19, 1983, and Speaker Smith of the Legislative Assembly of British Columbia on April 1, 1976.

I would also direct the attention of honourable members to the comments of Joseph Maingot in his text, Parliamentary Privilege in Canada, where he states: "Parliamentary privilege is concerned with the special rights of members, not in their capacity as ministers or as party leaders, whips or parliamentary secretaries, but strictly in their capacity as members in their parliamentary work. Therefore, allegations of misjudgement, or mismanagement, or maladministration on the part of the minister in the performance of his ministerial duties do not come within the purview of parliamentary privilege. And neither does an allegation that a minister permitted a budget leak constitute a matter of privilege."

In finding that a prima facie case of privilege does not exist in this case, I am making a procedural decision the effect of which will not prevent the further discussion by the House of the matter. The effect is to refuse precedence to this matter as a question of privilege but not to prevent the presentation of this matter under different circumstances on another occasion.

2:10 p.m.

The disclosure of information relating to the budget has to do with the conduct of a minister of the crown in the performance of his ministerial duties. Allegations that the Treasurer failed to ensure the secrecy of the budget and thereby permitted a budget leak may only be raised by a substantive motion of want of confidence in, or censure of, the minister. The purpose of such a motion is to question or bring to account a minister's responsibility to the House.

In support of such procedure for making direct accusations against the holders of certain offices, including ministers, Speaker Michener stated on June 19, 1959, "Simple justice requires that no honourable member should have to submit to investigation of his conduct by the House or a committee until he has been charged with an offence." Such a charge is raised by way of a substantive motion.

Finally, the member for Renfrew North (Mr. Conway), joined by the member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick) and the member for Essex South (Mr. Mancini), claimed it was a breach of parliamentary privilege for the minister to have spoken to the press about the alleged disclosure of information relating to the budget before making a statement first to the House. As I stated in my ruling of February 1, 1983, "Although it is a courtesy to the assembly for a minister to release information in the assembly before releasing it to the press or to the public, it is not a breach of the privileges or rules of the assembly if this does not happen."

VISITORS

Mr. Speaker: I would like to call the attention of all honourable members to the presence in the Speaker's gallery of a delegation of Boy Scouts representing the 75th anniversary of scouting. These boys have spent the day at Queen's Park and will, on behalf of the Boy Scouts Provincial Council of Ontario, present a plaque that will be displayed in this building.

I am certain all members join with me in welcoming our guests and in recognizing the outstanding contribution made by Boy Scouts over these past 75 years.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

KENTUCKY DERBY

Mr. T. P. Reid: We won.

Mr. Breithaupt: What looks good in the fifth?

Hon. Mr. Drea: He won. If the members had listened to me—

Mr. T. P. Reid: You have to be good at something, Frank.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, before coming to the statement that was supposed to be delivered on Friday but unfortunately could not be because of other events in this House, it is my distinct honour this afternoon to convey the official congratulations of the government of Ontario and the people of Ontario to Sunny's Halo for that most distinguished and most magnificent mile and a quarter on Saturday afternoon.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I think the particular win by this most distinguished and most courageous horse should be put into the economic perspective of this province. First of all, it was a very distinctive win by virtue of the fact that Sunny's Halo, like so many great products of Ontario, has had to overcome great adversity in order to triumph. It is a matter of record that last year that horse was running on a wrenched ankle and bucked shins. Very few horses ever come back from there.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Just like this government.

Hon. Mr. Davis: And just like Sunny's Halo, we will win again.

Mr. T. P. Reid: He won by a nose. You might win by another part of the anatomy.

Hon. Mr. Drea: The racing and the breeding industry in this province is a very significant part of agriculture. I think it should be brought to the attention of the House that in the last three years the racing stars of this province have brought the breeding and racing industry of Ontario into worldwide prominence. First, there was Glorious Song, an Eclipse winner, probably the greatest mare who has run in our time. Second, there was Deputy Minister last year, who unfortunately because of an accident has never reached his full potential, and now we have Sunny's Halo.

This will mean, in the fall, vastly increased sales and export dollars, because never before has the sire of this particular horse had an outstanding colt. It will mean new farms started up. It will mean better wages for a large number of people who depend on the racing industry and, indeed, for those who would risk not only their time but also their personal funds, as Mr. Foster has. He bred that horse, he stayed with that horse, he maintained that horse and he is fully entitled now to recognize the fruition of a particular dream as well as the great honour and distinction he has brought to this province.

It is also a matter of record that it has been one of the outstanding accomplishments of this government that we have invested for so many years in the breeding and racing industry of this province. Indeed, without government support, government initiative and government backing it is a well-known fact that the industry would not be in the position where we now stand in the forefront of the world.

Once again, I speak on behalf of all the people of this province who were thrilled, in the greatest individual sports spectacle of the year, to see an Ontario horse come well ahead, winning against all the odds and showing what not only Canadian initiative but Ontario talent can produce.

DAY NURSERIES ACT REVISIONS

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, if I may come to the statement that was to be delivered on Friday last, I would like to advise the House of revised standards for the Day Nurseries Act of Ontario which will become effective January 1, 1984.

These standards are based on a consultation paper prepared by my ministry following a review of current literature on child development and preliminary consultation with authorities in the day nurseries field.

The paper was distributed province-wide in February 1980 to more than 5,000 child care experts and workers, parents and other groups and individuals interested in day nursery services. Staff from my ministry discussed the proposals contained in the consultation paper with more than 1,000 individuals at meetings in various communities across Ontario and we reviewed 101 written submissions on these proposals.

Most of the changes simply clarify the intent of existing regulations, some of which are imprecise and open to misinterpretation. Other changes bring the program into line with current knowledge of child development and existing practices in most of the province's day nurseries. Overall we believe we have streamlined and simplified the regulations. At the same time we have improved the quality of care for children in day nurseries and in supervised family day care.

Although the new standards will become effective January 1, 1984, existing operators of day nurseries will have until the date of their annual licence renewal next year to comply with them.

The following are the highlights:

Beginning next year, all agencies supervising private home day care must be licensed. There are now 5,000 spaces in these family day care settings in Ontario, of which 4,000 are subsidized by my ministry. These agencies employ home visitors to assess family homes for day care and to provide training and support to the care givers. The new regulations stipulate that the maximum number of homes that each of these staff members can supervise is 25.

This supervised family day care is the fastest-growing area of child care today and will no doubt be the largest area of expansion in the future.

As far as day nurseries are concerned, the new regulations will require at least one of the program staff members working with each group of children in a day nursery to have a diploma in early childhood education or the equivalent. The staff in most urban day care centres already have these qualifications. Staff working at centres where they are not met will be given time to upgrade themselves.

A group of children in a day nursery may be comprised of 10 infants, 15 toddlers, 16 preschoolers, 25 five-year-olds or 30 school age children. Only one group of children will be allowed in a room at one time except in the case of preschoolers where up to 24 children aged 30 months to five years will be permitted.

The toddler category, which now includes children from 18 months to 24 months of age, will be expanded to include children up to 30 months of age. This is in keeping with the results of widely accepted research which show that children need intensive adult support during this period to build good language skills as a foundation for learning.

Recent studies have found that both staff-child ratios and group size affect the quality of day care for children under the age of three years. The current staff-to-child ratio for children in the toddler category in Ontario day nurseries is one care giver for every five children. It will remain the same for the extended toddler group, allowing children to benefit from a higher staffing ratio for six more months.

With respect to the other age groups in day nurseries, our revised regulations will set the minimum staff-to-child ratio for children in the preschool category—30 months to five years—at one to eight. It now ranges from one to five in small day care centres to one to nine in large centres. In keeping with current practices, the ratio for five-year-olds will be set at one to 12, and the ratio for children aged six to nine will be set at one to 15.

As I have just indicated, the ratio for toddlers—age 18 months to 30 months of age—will be one to five. There will be no change in the staff-to-child ratio for infants up to 18 months of age. It will remain at one to three.

The revisions to the staffing ratios will create a uniform high-quality minimum standard for all centres. By allowing for the redistribution of staff, they will also provide more support for the age groups that need it. The changes are not expected to increase costs substantially and, in fact, the additional cost to my ministry for all of Ontario will be only $60,000 a year. Day care centres with fewer than 45 children will require no increase in staff, and most of the larger centres already employ more staff than required by the existing regulations.

As of December 31, 1982, there were 81,768 children enrolled in 1,877 licensed day nurseries in Ontario. Our annual budget for child care subsidies for parents who qualify is $80 million. In addition to our regular expenditure on day care, the Ministry of Community and Social Services is also providing funds for special child care programs in Ontario. In co-operation with nine municipalities across the province, we have launched a series of employment support initiatives.

For the duration of these pilot projects we will subsidize the cost of child care for more than 3,000 children of sole-support parents on social assistance who are looking for jobs or are in retraining programs. Those parents will be able to choose from a comprehensive range of child care services the form of care most suited to their needs and the needs of their children. Depending on the type of care they choose, my ministry will pay between 80 and 100 per cent of the cost.

These programs are under way in Peterborough, Metropolitan Toronto, Thunder Bay, Ottawa, Waterloo, Windsor, Peel region and the counties of Dufferin and Lanark. The employment support initiatives projects will also provide pre-employment counselling and cover the cost of other employment related expenses such as transportation for sole-support parents.

I will be giving the House an update on the entire general welfare assistance-Family Benefits Act integration program and the employment support initiatives projects in the near future. Both the revisions to the day nurseries standards and the additional child care subsidies we are offering parents on social assistance underline the special responsibility this government has accepted for children and our commitment to provide them with the finest services available.

BUDGET

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, as I told the House on Friday, the decision we decided to make about the printing of my budget could disrupt our original timetable. I am now pleased to report that a great deal of work over the weekend has put us back on schedule and I intend to present my budget to the House tomorrow afternoon. I plan to begin the presentation after all the Canadian stock exchanges have closed, or at approximately 4:30 p.m. Toronto time.

We were able to return to our schedule and begin printing early today through the extraordinary efforts of a great many public servants who have been involved in this project. I have already told the members of my staff in the Ministry of Treasury and Economics how grateful I am for their loyalty and for their dedication and of my admiration for their skills and commitment.

I would also like publicly to express our appreciation to the staff of the translation bureau and the printing services branch of the Ministry of Government Services for the efforts which they are making in very abnormal circumstances. I have spoken to their minister about this and I have asked him to pass on to them my thanks and admiration.

Finally, sir, I must use this opportunity to thank my colleagues in this House, my friends in Muskoka and the hundreds of others throughout Ontario for the support and the understanding they have shown to me in so many ways over the past four or five days. I am very grateful to them.

ORAL QUESTIONS

BUDGETARY PROCESS

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Treasurer. Given the recent events, given the events that I am sure the Treasurer will recall with respect to the passing of his last budget a year or so ago when he was called to a committee to explain that budget after the fact, given some of the very serious difficulties Mr.

MacEachen had in presenting his budget, which did not conform with some of the realities of the world at that time, and the problems Mr. Lalonde has had recently and about which the Treasurer has commented, and given the fact that, as I am sure he and his Premier (Mr. Davis) have admitted, it is probably the single most important document this Legislature deals with in the course of a year, and mindful of the words of Gladstone when he said budgets are not merely affairs of arithmetic but in thousands of ways go to the root of prosperity of individuals, the relations of classes and the strengths of kingdoms, will the Treasurer not agree with me now that the time has come for a very serious review of the way in which we draft and prepare our budget?

Will the Treasurer not agree that his government should be thinking of ways to update the budgetary process and bring it into the 20th century?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, the suggestion my friend makes cannot be taken as if the budget were standing free and alone within the system of government we function in. One would have to look at the entire system of government. Should a party with a majority form the government? We believe it should. If that is sustained, should that party retain the responsibility for bringing in budgets which are generally acceptable to the public and upon which that government is judged at voting time? We believe it should.

I do not believe the Leader of the Opposition can get to the point he is going to try to get to: i.e., letting his party share in all the benefits of writing a budget whilst accepting none of the responsibility for being on this side of the House.

Mr. Peterson: With great respect, that is not my point. It is not the point of the Canadian Tax Foundation or anyone else who has looked at this very serious issue. Certainly one of the things the Treasurer could do would be to present his taxing options to a standing committee of this House, for example. Ultimately the final selection would be the prerogative of the Treasurer, shrouded in secrecy at that particular time, but at least it would open up this process and avoid, with great respect, some of the difficulties he had in the last budget and that Mr. MacEachen had in his two budgets.

Does the Treasurer not think, given the topicality of this situation at the present time and some of the difficulties that have arisen, that this entire matter of budget reform—and if he wants to include reform of the entire Legislature, that is his prerogative—should be referred at least to the standing committee on procedural affairs of this House so we can develop budgets that will better serve the people of this province? Surely that is a reasonable request.

2:30 p.m.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I believe the people have been well served by the system we have in this province, in this country and, in fact, in all those nations that use the parliamentary system of government. I believe the system works very well.

There are times when Treasurers or finance ministers go the route he discusses with good cause. For example, last year I asked the Ontario Economic Council to study whether or not Ontario should stay within the federal-provincial income tax collection agreement. I also put a paper out on the Ontario health insurance plan. Those are for structural changes in the tax system. We do listen when structural change is occurring; we do talk a lot.

On the other hand, one of my options in any budget period is the imposition of three or four per cent more sales tax on a particular item, such as an automobile; or the removal of sales tax from an automobile. If I were to suggest that to him, what would he think that does to a market while we are making up our mind in some committee? If he thinks it does not have a dramatic, immediate effect upon buyers' points of view he is wrong.

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, I think there is at least one part of the system that could be changed. When the budget is tabled in the Legislature, rather than having to go through the silly process we went through last year of getting the Treasurer to refer one bill to committee, does he not think it would make sense to have a committee of this Legislature examine that budget in detail?

Whether it is called the budget committee or the finance committee, it would be a group to which we could have the budget referred in total, where expert witnesses could be called and we would have the participation of members of this Legislature. Does he not think that would be better than going through what is rather an insular process now, where he could have the experts come in and talk to him? Now he presents the budget and that is the end of it; there is very little opportunity for other members of the Legislature to really benefit and learn from the system, or to participate in debating it.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, the same tack is being taken by the member for Windsor-Riverside; that is, that somehow the philosophy of the budget should be up for grabs in a committee. I do not say that is not right in some forms of government or in some types of organization of government; I simply say that in our form of government one cannot change one part of the jigsaw puzzle without looking at all the other responsibilities.

What we do, as he knows, is we refer bills specifically for reviewing the wording of the bills. That is really all that is there unless one wishes to defeat it. In a majority government such as we have the chance of that defeat is not likely; therefore, we generally concentrate our attempts to discuss a bill on the phraseology. I have no problem, as he knows, with better wording of a bill. That is properly the function of both the opposition and our side. He knows the principles of this government require us to stand or fall upon the policy of the bill.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I have always had great admiration for the Treasurer and the fact that he is one of the few who are willing to accept individual responsibility for their actions. But does he not believe something worthwhile came out of the process last year when the retail sales tax bill went to the committee and members of the public, along with members of this House, were able to present their concerns to the Treasurer?

He rightly said: "It is my responsibility and I will stand or hang with it." But he had that opportunity to hear what impact his budgetary measures were actually having on the people of the province. He also had the chance to change those instances which may have adversely affected a lot of people, which the Treasurer and his experts were not aware of. Surely the time spent in that kind of process is well worth while, both for a good budget we all want to see and for the impact it is going to have on the people of the province and the accountability we all owe them.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, my understanding was that it was referred to the committee under the rules of the House and was the choice of the opposition parties under those same rules. They make a decision each time as to whether they want a bill debated in that forum. They have that power, as I understand it. I am not an expert on House rules, but I do not recall being the one who volunteered that measure.

TRUST COMPANIES

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations concerning the trust companies affair.

In a letter from Mr. Jack Biddell to the minister, dated February 28, 1983, which became public last week, Mr. Biddell wrote: "I came to the conclusion that in this affair we were probably witnessing a 'scam' which, even though it might not prove to be illegal, simply could not be allowed to continue and to escalate."

It is clear from the letter that there was much consultation between Mr. Biddell and the minister. Can the minister indicate, either according to Mr. Biddell or from his own knowledge, how long this apparent scam had been going on within these companies?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, if I may clarify the availability of the Biddell letter, the letter was voluntarily tabled by a counsel last week in the courts and subsequently was the subject of a press release by one of the parties. That clarifies how that letter became public.

The letter revealed that Mr. Biddell, acting as special adviser to the government, had reviewed the information available and had come to the firm opinion that on the one transaction alone, the Cadillac-Fairview transaction, the companies involved had seriously eroded their borrowing bases or had eliminated them completely so that they no longer had the right to take deposits.

Second, as my friend the member for Kitchener has pointed out, he indicated that although there was no positive proof of any illegal activity at that stage, it was his opinion from 40 years of working in this field that in all probability there was a scam. That is what the honourable member is talking about. He then went on to concur with the recommendation that he had put to me with respect to actions the government might take.

Mr. Biddell has been under cross-examination before a special examiner for the past four weeks on the very issues the member is talking about. The exact extent of the information that was available to him is a subject of that transcript and will be available at the appropriate time.

Mr. Breithaupt: Since Mr. Biddell indicated in his letter that the registrar of loan and trust corporations and his staff were one source of his information, does the minister know to what extent the annual examination reports of the registrar's investigators assisted Mr. Biddell in arriving at his conclusion to advise cabinet to seize these companies on January 7?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: As I have said, Mr. Biddell has been under cross-examination for four weeks about the various information and sources that led him to the conclusions he has reached, and whatever his sources were will be information that will be available in those transcripts.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, it is clear that the questionable loans made by Crown Trust were made in a very short period of time shortly after the company was acquired by Mr. Rosenberg. However, it is also clear that questionable loans appear to have been made by Seaway Trust over a lengthy period of time, during which time its capital was increasing, its assets were increasing at an extraordinary rate compared to the rest of the industry and during which time the cabinet itself was mandating the increase in its borrowing base because of the approvals that were given to Seaway Trust.

Can the minister now explain how it is that this government itself could have been so unaware of the kinds of things that were going on in Seaway Trust that they actually approved officially of the kinds of activities they were getting into?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, the issue of the equity participation of Seaway Trust, for example, that the honourable member referred to is a matter we have discussed here before. Clearly, an increase in the amount of capital that individuals have in a business is to the benefit and assurance of the public. I certainly hope the member is not suggesting that this should not have been done in our endeavours to strengthen that company's equity base.

As to the role of the regulators during the course of those few months, I have indicated on many occasions in this House that there is an internal review going on and that there is a Morrison report coming out at the end of this month. I would hope the objectivity of this House would demand that all of this information be seen and put in the proper perspective. If that is not what the member wants, let him say so.

Mr. Martel: Don't be so petulant. You sound like a little boy.

Mr. Swart: Sensitive, aren't you?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

2:40 p.m.

Mr. Breithaupt: I have a final supplementary, not entirely following that last line of comment.

Mr. Speaker: Question, please.

Mr. Breithaupt: Since the minister advised these series of activities on the part of the government were as a result of information and opinion Mr. Biddell gave him, can he indicate, on the basis of any conversations he has had with the registrar, what indication the registrar gave him as to how long this state of affairs had existed in the companies? I ask that because presumably, in the cross-examination of Mr. Biddell about that, that particular information may not be otherwise be available.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I have responded to this question on other occasions and I can only repeat the answer I gave to the previous member. As the member for Kitchener is well aware, there are a number of judicial actions under way at the present time and this subject matter is part of it.

VISITOR

Mr. Speaker: Just before proceeding, I am advised we have a distinguished visitor in the gallery in the person of the Solicitor General of Canada, the Honourable Robert Kaplan. I ask you to join me in welcoming him.

BUDGET INCENTIVES

Mr. Rae: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Premier. It is with regard to some statements he made over the weekend concerning the provincial economy.

In discussing the contents of the budget on Saturday, the Premier said the focus of the budget would be to provide incentives for private industry to create jobs. The Premier said, "We intend to introduce policies and programs that will encourage the creation of jobs in the private sector."

I wonder if the Premier is aware that six Secretaries of Labor in the United States, serving both Democratic and Republican Presidents, have together written a letter to President Reagan saying the approach of focusing only on the private sector is inadequate and will not deal with the immediate crisis in terms of unemployment.

If I may just quote from their letter, which was in yesterday's New York Times, they said: "We agree that the private sector under ideal circumstances should generate such jobs and participate in retraining programs, but this will take time. Until then, government has an obligation to provide relief."

I would like to ask the Premier, does he not recognize that there are hundreds of thousands of people out there who cannot wait for jobs simply to trickle down and who are looking to this government for direct job creation and direct leadership? Can he give us the assurance that he will heed the advice of these gentlemen, who are not particularly of our political persuasion in this party, and recognize that there is a crisis which government has to deal with?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am always delighted when the leader of the New Democratic Party goes south of the border to seek his economic and political advice. I only wish he would accept it on some other issues. I find it intriguing that the leader of a party totally committed to economic nationalism, cultural nationalism, no more branch plants and, "We do not like the Americans," gets up here and recites to me the view of six former Secretaries of Labor in the United States government. Here is another conversion on the road to Damascus.

I can only say to the honourable member, being as knowledgeable as he is about the differences in the economies of the United States and Canada, where we have always had some greater measure of balance in terms of the public and private sectors, that I would think he really would not seek out the opinions of our American neighbours in relation to the Ontario economy because he, his predecessor and the member for Sudbury East (Mr. Martel) have spent their total careers belabouring me as to why we should accept no economic advice or help from our American friends.

Mr. Rae: I am trying to find language and arguments the Premier will understand. When he had Phil Crane, Alexander Haig and these dinosaurs entertaining members of the Conservative Party in the city of Toronto over the last month, I thought it might be appropriate, given the abjectly colonial nature of the mentality on that side of the House to try to devise some arguments that would make some sense to them.

Mr. Speaker: Question, please.

Mr. Rae: I would simply like to ask the Premier, again, a direct question. Does he really think the hundreds of thousands of unemployed people in this province can afford to wait for all the job creation measures to come trickling down from the private sector? Does he not recognize that the government of this province has a very real obligation, a contract with the people of this province to provide jobs when the private sector is clearly not providing the jobs that need to be provided for the citizens of this province?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am delighted the member reads my speeches so carefully. I wish he had been there to listen to me on Saturday, along with the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Peterson). I gave some friendly advice on how to handle certain political issues of the day. Friday would have been a much happier day if the member had accepted that advice in advance; but that is getting into another area. I only say to the member that if he would read page 8 of my remarks—

Mr. Bradley: You would never have got away with it in Ottawa.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That is why I am here.

Mr. Speaker: Never mind the interjections, please.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I understand—

Mr. Speaker: Will the Premier please address himself to the question? Order.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I will resist the temptation to say to the member for St. Catharines (Mr. Bradley) that his lips move before his brains, but I will get back to the—

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Look on page 8.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Conway: Let's not be personal now.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I wasn't, I was just stating a fact—

Mr. Conway: We wouldn't want the Tory women to be upset, would we?

Mr. Speaker: Will the Premier please address himself to the question? And will the member for Renfrew North (Mr. Conway) please contain himself?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I gave the honourable member some advice on that matter the other day.

If the member will read the first two lines of the second paragraph on page 8, they will answer his question.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, the subtle socialist reminds me more of a punch-drunk fighter who comes out and keeps forgetting to watch the right hand of the Premier on these kinds of issues. We will not go into that, but it is unfortunate that the leader of the New Democratic Party has put it in the context he has, because it is a real problem.

Can we be assured that in regard to those people between the ages of 16 and 24 who are facing poor prospects regardless of the Premier's optimism, there will be matters related entirely and directly to them in this budget to ensure there will not be mere words from the Premier about his optimism but programs to make sure that for the next decade at least there will be jobs created in the private or public sector?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I can take it into the next decade—

Mr. Laughren: That's going for the jugular, you really got him there.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I didn't give him a slow curve ball.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I wonder whether I am at a baseball game or something. I will hit a lob, a curve, whatever the member throws.

Mr. Kerrio: You're a switch-hitter.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Speak for yourself.

Mr. T. P. Reid: You're still talking about baseball.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I say to the member for Rainy River (Mr. T. P. Reid) that we are perhaps talking to somewhat different issues. I expressed the view the other day, and I really believe it, that over the longer period of time for the people we categorize today as being young—in my humble opinion, anybody of 52 is young, but I know the age group the member is referring to—there will be without question job opportunities.

As a government, what we are concerned about is the shorter period of time, and I think it will be a relatively short period of time. I can only say to the member that this government does recognize the unemployment difficulties of young people, and I will not comment upon what the budget will contain tomorrow.

Mr. Rae: The truth will be found tomorrow.

Given the speed with which he has dismissed the suggestions that we in our party have made, practical suggestions with respect to job creation in social services, in the environmental sector, in the resource field, in the automobile industry and right through the entire Ontario economy, does the Premier not recognize the very special obligation the government of Ontario has with respect to the need to retrain workers who are being affected by the destruction of jobs in many of our basic industries?

Can the Premier give us a commitment that particular measures will be taken with respect to retraining so we do not have a situation where literally thousands of people are told at age 45, 50 or 55 that they are out the door, that there is nothing there for them and there is nothing anybody can do? Does the Premier not recognize that the government and the public sector have a special obligation to those people?

2:50 p.m.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Now that the discussion has reached this level and we are not quoting experts from south of the border, I think the leader of the New Democratic Party and I might come somewhat closer in terms of our point of view. If he is asking me whether, in my view, retraining amongst various age groups in this province is part of any long-term economic strategy, the answer to that, simply, is "yes."

If he is asking me whether I agree with some of the rather grandiose proposals in the document that two of his colleagues tabled, particularly one relative to the auto industry where part of the solution is to create a crown corporation to get into the auto field, it is not just a matter of theology or philosophy with me: I do not feel any useful purpose will be served in terms of employment opportunities by creating "an Ontario automobile company," by whatever name.

I know it has particular attraction to the member's party but, with respect, I do not see that as a solution. I think the member should sit down and talk quietly to Mr. White and some others, and I know this may provoke them to say publicly, "Yes, it's a great idea," but the fellows I know in the auto business really are not excited about having yet another company, a crown corporation, involved in the production of automobiles.

MASSEY-FERGUSON

Mr. Rae: The Premier will change his tune soon when the task force report comes down.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Industry and Trade. As one of the trustees for the people of Ontario at Massey-Ferguson, since we now are holders of preferred shares, how does he feel about the fact that the chairman and chief executive officer of Massey-Ferguson received in 1982 an increase in salary of about $160,000, from $395,000 to $554,000, in exactly the same year that Massey was losing $510 million on sales of $2.54 billion?

Hon. Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, that is something the Massey-Ferguson people have to resolve themselves. The corporation has a number of shareholders, and the shareholders have to pass judgement on it as indeed do the board of directors. All I note is a company that was in pretty bad shape just a few years ago seems to be suggesting that this year it might be reaching a break-even point. That is a rather interesting comment. There will have been a rather impressive turnaround in that period of time if that comes about.

I do not think some of the people in Brantford feel quite as disappointed as the honourable member might in terms of the success they seem to be having. Perhaps the member should be congratulating them on the success they are achieving, rather than being somewhat derogatory about some of the other aspects of their operation.

Mr. Rae: So much for the restraint program and so much for a single standard of social justice in Ontario. I am asking the minister directly, as somebody who represents the shareholders in Massey-Ferguson on behalf of the people of Ontario, how he feels about the fact that this is an increase of 40 per cent in compensation in one year, taking this gentleman to well over half a million dollars a year. Does the minister really think that kind of compensation is appropriate when thousands of workers at Massey-Ferguson are losing their jobs, let alone being asked to take a cut in pay?

Hon. Mr. Walker: As a participant, along with the federal government, and as a shareholder of the operation by a law passed by this Legislature and voted on by members of the member's party and those of the Liberal Party, I can tell him the fact that the shares have doubled in the last few weeks is rather impressive from one point of view: the kind of management of this world-wide operation that has substantial employment in Ontario. I keep saying the member should be somewhat more impressed by what they are accomplishing, rather than going around spreading dirt all over the top of them.

Mr. Sweeney: Mr. Speaker, as a shareholder, and given that we have what other members of the minister's party have sometimes referred to as a "window on the industry," exactly what kind of influence can the minister exert on this company on behalf of the government shares, or does he?

Hon. Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, we have the rights and obligations of preferred shareholders, which we are.

Mr. Rae: I am sure that puts fear in the hearts of all those who are operating this company.

I would like to ask the minister, as a matter of policy, instead of our having to go to the United States for this kind of information with respect to compensation of executive officers in companies operating in Ontario, is he prepared to change our securities and companies laws to require full publication of information with respect to corporate compensation in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Walker: Those acts do not fall within this ministry.

ONTARIO VETERINARY COLLEGE

Mr. Worton: Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Timbrell), I would like to ask a question of the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development.

The provincial secretary is aware of the announcement on the weekend that the Ontario Veterinary College has had its accreditation reduced by the American Veterinary Medical Association because of a lack of proper facilities and well-trained instructors. The minister will realize this reduction in accreditation means the college has been put on probation and risks losing its accreditation entirely if it cannot improve its facilities.

This matter has been the subject of discussions and questions asked by the Agriculture and Food critic of the Liberal Party, and back in 1981 the minister assured this House that we would have the best veterinary college in North America and that he planned to keep it that way. In view of those statements, and in the light of what is happening now, what can he tell us?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, let me first clarify that I was not aware of the item in the paper until about half an hour before I entered the House.

Let me take the honourable member back over the period of years. The Minister of Colleges and Universities (Miss Stephenson) has met with the Minister of Agriculture and Food on several occasions to keep the type of credibility we have at the University of Guelph for veterinarians.

As I understand the statement that was made over the weekend, we have no problems for the next five years; we will keep our credibility and we will keep our accreditation. During that period, the Minister of Colleges and Universities and the Minister of Agriculture and Food will be working towards bringing that university and the veterinary school up to a standard that is equal to any place in the world.

Mr. J. A. Reed: That is nonsense.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Worton: In the light of that statement, there seems to be a difference of opinion. I have not read the Toronto news, but from what I have read in the local paper there seems to be a difference of opinion from what the minister says.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Worton: The minister is aware that the veterinary college in Saskatoon has full accreditation and is in the process of expansion, and that the Ontario Veterinary College still needs another $2 million in operating funds and $9 million as the province's share of the cost of the expansion of the clinic facilities.

I think we can all agree that it has come to a sorry pass when we have a university with such a historic background as that of the OVC and the Ontario Agricultural College and we are putting it in jeopardy. I think we have to get serious about this and do something. Does the minister not agree?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I recognize the concern of the member. Let me take it a step or two farther.

On Thursday of last week I met the president of the University of Guelph on the east steps here. He is Dr. Forster, as the members know very well.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I was also at the funeral of the late William Amos, the clerk of McGillivray township, earlier last Thursday. The head of the veterinary college was one of my colleagues as an honorary pallbearer on that occasion. Again we had an opportunity to speak about this. Let me just assure the honourable member on behalf of this government that that college will be operating over the next five years under its president and that five years from now it will be one of the best veterinary colleges again in North America.

3 p.m.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, surely the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development must feel it is a sad day in this province when the former agricultural college at Guelph, one that has been known throughout the world, is being reduced to its present status. Would he not think this has come about because of the small amount of its budget that his government puts into agriculture?

Specifically, now that this has come to light, has he made any representation to the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) so that the government will not reduce the amount being put into agriculture this year by another 13 per cent?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, ordinarily this honourable member does his research and follows through on most of the questions he asks, but it is a sad day when a member who carries this status blames the Minister of Agriculture and Food and does not understand that this university is funded strictly by the ministries of Education and Colleges and Universities. The Minister of Agriculture and Food is there only in an advisory capacity.

STELCO EMISSIONS

Mr. Mackenzie: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Labour. Is the minister aware there is a serious dispute over who is covered at Stelco under the new coke oven emission standards? Is he also aware that some 40 workers in the coal-handling and the byproducts plant—in the coal-handling plant in some cases the bunkers are right over the coke ovens, and in the byproducts plant only 50 to 60 feet away from the ovens—have been excluded from the regulations because of the ambiguous nature of subsection 3(1) of the regulations?

Hon. Mr. Ramsay: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am aware.

Mr. Mackenzie: Can the minister tell us why, on April 21, Ian Carruthers and Vern Tidey of the industrial and occupational health branches supported the company, interpreting the regulations in the company's favour, which is certainly totally opposed to the way we interpret the lead regulations, where everybody exposed to them in the plant is covered? Is he prepared to take another look at the situation?

Hon. Mr. Ramsay: I do not think it is a case of looking into it for the first time. The ministry has been actively engaged in seeking a resolution, and I am sure there will be one in the very near term.

ROLE OF CIVIL SERVANT

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. The minister will recall that I wrote to him on April 21 expressing my objections to the alleged impropriety on the part of Milton Farrow, the assistant deputy minister of community planning, and Allan Masson, the chief hearing officer of the Niagara Escarpment Development Control Hearing Office.

The behaviour in question relates to the development of Mariner's Cove in the town of Oakville. The assistant deputy minister's brother, George Farrow, had previously been denied permission to build 14 town houses in Mariner's Cove. However, town council reversed its decision last month after interference on the part of ministry staff.

Has the minister started to investigate the events surrounding the approval of George Farrow's development? If so, what progress has he made? If not, why not; and when does he intend to do so?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, first may I say to the honourable member that it has not been my practice to answer to press releases, and that is exactly how I interpret what the member sent out to the press. It was an open letter to the minister. It is not my practice, nor do I intend to make it my practice.

I want to refer to the situation in specific terms, and I want to make it very clear that Mr. Farrow happens to be an assistant deputy minister who is of outstanding quality. There is not a member in this House—whether it be you, Mr. Speaker, members on the opposite side of the House or members on this side of the House—who has not approached Mr. Farrow in a very personal way to seek his advice and guidance to help out his constituents.

Although one of the constituents in Oakville happens to be Mr. Farrow's brother, I would think he has the same privilege of asking that brother for some advice as to how he processes an application through the mill. The final analysis—let us put it very clearly—is the decision of a municipal council to take the vote and stand on it one way or the other in relationship to whatever the application might refer to.

Indeed, I recognize that Mr. Farrow's brother had submitted an application a year or so ago that had not won the approval of the council. He resubmitted his application, which is not out of the ordinary in this province; there are many who resubmit applications under different terminology to seek further advice and approval if they can get it from the council. He did so, and the council in this particular case supported his application. I see no reason to review the situation any further.

Mr. Epp: Need I remind the minister that George Farrow's comment to Oakville council on April 18 was, and I quote—and this is on tape so there is no question about it: "You know who my brother is. He is not the one who answered the letter but he can sure make it move when we want an answer." That was George Farrow's comment to Oakville council.

George Farrow also quoted statements made by one of his brother's subordinates, namely the manager of the ministry's community planning review branch, John Livey. According to the developer, Livey stated that the project was consistent with Oakville's official plan and spoke favourably of his boss's brother's development proposal.

As for Mr. Masson, it is completely inappropriate for any hearing officer, whether associated with the Ontario Municipal Board, the Niagara Escarpment Development Control Board or the land titles branch of the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations, to appear before a town council in an unofficial capacity to help the assistant deputy minister's brother get his development proposal approved.

Does the minister condone this sort of behaviour; and what message is conveyed to other senior officials, given the minister's refusal to clear the air with respect to this suggestion of a flagrant abuse of power? Finally, if the minister is not prepared to deal with the improper actions of his staff, will he at least take the appropriate steps to prevent the damage to Mariner's Cove that their interference is about to cause?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: First let us review exactly what did take place. The member wants to say what Mr. Farrow's brother replied in the Oakville council, which is correct; but one should ask oneself, what was the question which was asked. The question was asked by the councillor who opposed the plan as to who Mr. Farrow might know in the ministry.

Everyone in that council was very well aware that Mr. Farrow was the brother of an assistant deputy minister in the Ministry of Municipal Affairs and Housing in the province. So he repeated very clearly and distinctly that his brother was Milt Farrow, which all in that council happened to know. That is what is on the record.

One should take into account what the question happened to be before the response. I have looked at the situation and had some discussions with people in my ministry relating to it. Mr. Farrow did seek some advice and guidance from the ministry, as any other taxpayer would be entitled to do so. The assistant deputy minister Mr. Farrow did not himself get into the discussion with his brother, but did refer him to others within the ministry who could give him the advice or guidance that he would seek, to which any other taxpayer in this province would be entitled. I see nothing out of line in relationship to this action.

Mr. Breagh: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister a simple question. Does he not think it is wrong for a developer to appear before a council and clearly to imply that he knows people in places of power who will expedite this project? Is that not wrong, morally and otherwise? What has the minister done to correct the situation?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, in direct answer to that question, I suppose if the member who asked the question happened to have a brother, and he was making an application, would he deny that he was his brother? Would he deny it? That is the very situation that we are confronted with. Indeed, I would hope he would not deny his brother.

Both are very fine individuals in this province and serve their community extremely well. Mr. Farrow in the ministry has—

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the minister please address the person who asked the question?
3:10 p.m.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I hope we are not in a situation here of trying to reduce in any way the effectiveness of one Mr. Milt Farrow to this government and the people of this province. I believe the actions that were taken were appropriate. When the gentleman was asked who he happened to know in the Ministry of Municipal Affairs and Housing, he answered straightforwardly and clearly that his brother Milton Farrow happened to be an assistant deputy minister.

I see nothing wrong with that. Indeed, I would not expect the architect, Mr. Farrow, to deny that his brother works for the ministry. He is proud of what his brother has been able to do in this province, and indeed we should be happy for his service to this government.

UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Treasurer. He will be aware the unemployment statistics announced Friday showed Ontario, contrary to the nationwide trend, had an increase in unemployment from 519,000 people to 532,000, or 11.7 per cent. He will also be aware the statistics on closures and layoffs in the province show a dramatic increase for January and February, an increase of 31 per cent over all.

Is the Treasurer now prepared to admit the recovery he so often talks about is not a real recovery? It is not a recovery that will see the people of Ontario going back to work. Is he now willing to accept that the public sector has a major role to play in order to create jobs in this province?

Whether it be through municipal capital works, through the construction of nonprofit nursing homes, through the forestry sector or in housing, will he not admit the public sector has a major role to play to create those jobs? This would be in the short run, but at the same time does it not have a role to play in constructing things that will be of long-lasting benefit to all the people of Ontario?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I guess Friday morning I was not spending as much time looking at the unemployment and employment figures as I normally would have when they came out. I have them in front of me. The actual figures in Ontario in that month showed an increase in employment of 13,000 jobs and a decrease in unemployment of 18,000. The member will go down to the seasonally adjusted base, I am sure, because they suit him better. The fact remains that 13,000 more people were at work and 18,000 fewer people actually were not employed at that point.

When it comes to the question of how one creates jobs, I will never bridge the gap that exists between my colleague and me. However, unlike him I do not feel there is only one way to solve the problem. I hope when he sees my budget tomorrow he will be satisfied we have taken the multi-pronged approach to a problem.

Mr. Mackenzie: Mr. Speaker, will the Treasurer take a look at the actions of some of the plants in the Hamilton area that have shut down? They are one of the reasons for the increase in permanent closures between February 1982 and February 1983 and there has been, to say the least, less than good corporate responsibility—whether it was Flavorite Poultry or Consolidated-Bathurst or Allen Industries. At least would he take a look at some justification procedures before closures take place in Ontario that do affect large numbers of workers?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I am not going to get into the issue of corporate responsibility again. That is a matter that one may evidence some bias about from time to time. The lists I get that show me the number of recalls, which the honourable member tends to forget about, show a net improvement. He only wants to talk about the negatives in life. I suggest to him that on balance the recovery we have been talking about is under way. If he is really interested in the people he purports to serve, he should evidence some of that confidence on their behalf too.

Mr. Wrye: Mr. Speaker, I will accept the Treasurer's argument for the moment that there may have been some mild numerical improvement, very modest none the less. He will know the areas that are resisting that movement are those that have been hit with structural unemployment. In some cities, such as my own and places such as Chatham and Sudbury, this is now into the third year and beyond. Can the Treasurer give us a commitment that his budget tomorrow will contain measures that will not only help alleviate unemployment across the province in general but will, for the first time, have this government targeting specifically toward those communities with long-term unemployment?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, again, the member will have to wait until tomorrow. He knows the Premier (Mr. Davis) has been quoted in the newspapers as saying there are measures in the budget to stimulate employment. I am reasonably sure if I showed them all to the member at this point, if I described them all carefully and patiently to him, he would still tell me they were not good enough or soon enough or effective enough.

UNEMPLOYMENT IN TOURISM INDUSTRY

Mr. Eakins: Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Treasurer. Given that the revenues of our provincial tourism sector for the latest fiscal year are much lower than his expectations, and given the importance of this sector in terms of employment—541,000 Ontarians and provincial tax dollars totalling more than $1 billion—is it fair to ask the Treasurer at this time if he has given consideration to some of the recommendations presented to him by groups, such as Tourism Ontario, in their attempt to improve the state of our tourism industry? They recommend methods such as the adjustment of provincial sales tax on prepared meals, accommodation and beverage alcohol in licensed establishments to a straight five per cent.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, the member knows I cannot answer that question. Of course I give careful consideration each year. I might suggest that particular industry thinks this Treasurer has been its supporter.

Mr. Eakins: How about the restaurants?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Their business is up 20 per cent in a year.

It so happens that when he talks about the catastrophic year I do not know if it was. Was Haliburton in trouble last year? Was the tourist business worse than in the previous year? Muskoka was not; Muskoka had the best summer season it ever had.

Mr. Kerrio: Mr. Speaker, would the minister not consider the problem of most jurisdictions that are close to the border, of having those people who visit us stay here? I wonder if the minister would take it under advisement to encourage people to stay, by talking to people such as some we have in Niagara who do as much advertising as, sometimes more than, the ministry itself?

Could the minister not do something that would help the balance of trade, because a good deal of that money certainly helps that balance? Is he going to do something that would encourage those people who come to stay when they visit us?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I guess my attitude is that that is the part that interests me most. The member is right on the border. They can get over to his city and back in minutes. Perhaps the fact is that the member sends them back, I do not know. It seems to me when they get to Muskoka, they stay.

Mr. Kerrio: They can't get away.

Hon. F. S. Miller: That is right. They usually do not have enough money to get home.

Besides that fact, they do have very localized American problems. He is close to one of the American cities that has also suffered heavily from unemployment.

After 23 or 24 years in the summer tourist business, we see a great difference in the advance bookings from the United States from year to year, depending upon the overall level of employment, particularly from the Buffalo area, which is still close to our best area for central Ontario. I am told that has been a weak area this year, that the bookings from Buffalo are down this year for the coming season. I can also tell the member, my colleagues in the business in Muskoka report bookings from other parts of Canada are up. I hope that is true.

FOREIGN STUDENT FEES

Mr. Allen: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Colleges and Universities. May I take the opportunity to welcome her back to the House. We all trust she is well recovered and ready for battle in her usual style. The questions have been piling up in her absence.

Mr. Minister—

Hon. Miss Stephenson: That's not the way to start.

Interjections.

Mr. Allen: I will not make any remarks on that slip.

The minister is aware of the growing uneasiness in Ontario universities among students, professors and administrators, on the subject of visa student fees. Given the extent to which Canadian, and Ontario universities in particular, have been enriched by university systems overseas in the past, and given that two recent studies, one British and one Canadian, on the effects of differential visa student fees have concluded there is no overall benefit in their application and much that is adverse, will the minister commit her ministry to a complete review of provincial policy towards foreign student fees, it is hoped with a view to their complete abolition?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, first, I would like to thank the members of the House. It is nice to know I was missed. I did not believe I was except by my favourite combatants, the members for St. Catharines (Mr. Bradley) and Oakwood (Mr. Grande).

None the less, I am delighted to be able to respond to the question of the member for Hamilton West and to state clearly that the matter of the differential visa student fee for graduate students has been under review for the past several months. We are awaiting further input from the Ontario Graduate Association, input which was promised us several months ago but has not yet arrived. I am sure it will arrive in due course.

The specific concerns related to those graduate students found a good deal of sympathy within the ministry. We determined it would be well to delay any further implementation of the program announced in February 1982, in both its phases; and for all the universities, all the students and all the faculty in Ontario to understand clearly and to transmit to students who were enrolling from offshore, that that part of the program for graduate students would be put in abeyance until that monitoring was completed.

We are equally as concerned as the member about the contribution foreign students make to our students' educational experience. We have always been concerned about the contribution foreign universities have made to the development of intellectual capital in Ontario. We have not forgotten that and we have made every effort to ensure our responsibilities in terms of foreign students, specifically in areas where the students were from developing countries, were totally met by this government and the people of Ontario and Canada. We shall continue to do that.

To suggest we will immediately change the project which was announced on February 18, 1982, would be foolhardy. To suggest we will be watching it carefully would be a very wise decision to make.

Mr. Allen: In the light of the fact foreign student registrations in the first year of university programs dropped last fall by something like 4,200 students, from 7,000 to 2,800, and in that some $5,000 is spent by each student—

Hon. Miss Stephenson: What?

Mr. Allen: Sorry. Did I give a wrong figure? It is a drop in first-year programs from 7,000 to 2,700, a drop of 4,300.

Given that figure, and given that each student brings approximately $5,000 to the local economy where he comes to reside, meaning in that simple statistic we have suffered a loss of about $20 million in one year, would it not be wise for the minister to hold current student fees at their present level rather than increasing them at all next year, in order to continue to attract foreign students and their input into local economies pending the completion of the departmental review?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: The figures the honourable member uses are ones I have not heard before in terms of a total number of reductions. They are figures he must have acquired from some source to which I am not privy. The figures I have seen would demonstrate there has been a small but significant reduction in first-year enrolment of students in Ontario universities, and that is a matter which we will continue to monitor.

The position has been taken. It was announced in February 1982. I remind the member that is now 16 months ago. It was announced sufficiently clearly so everyone would be fully aware of the fact the two-phase program was to be in place. It will be in place. I believe some of the institutions are making some changes in their own circumstances, since I gather they have announced that they failed to notify their applying students of the circumstances.

BORG-WARNER

Mr. Wrye: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour concerning the Employment Standards Act as it pertains to Borg-Warner, a manufacturing plant in Oakville. I am sure the minister is aware that this plant used to manufacture car radiators for Chrysler and that in July 1981 the employer effectively laid off more than 50 of the employees, advising them their services were no longer needed. The company then dismantled and sold most of its machinery required in the production of the radiators and so it has no capability at present of producing those radiators.

The employees, therefore, are certain—and I am sure the minister's employment standards people are aware—there has been a permanent discontinuance of all or part of the business of the employer in accordance with the act. The employer alleges that because it is prepared, at any time, to bid on a potential car radiator contract, there has been no permanent discontinuance. Since July 1981, approaching two years, the employees have been waiting for their severance entitlement. The ministry has been aware of this case now for over one year and refuses to make a ruling on whether the seemingly irrevocable closing-off of this company from the production of car radiators adds up to a permanent discontinuance.

Why is his ministry reluctant to arrive at the obvious conclusion that there has been a permanent discontinuance? How long must the employees wait? Does the minister not think it is time we looked at the phrasing of the term "permanent discontinuance" as it applies to the act?

Hon. Mr. Ramsay: Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the circumstances that have been described by my friend opposite. I must admit I am not immediately up to date on the present circumstances, but will make myself so and will report back to him either by letter or in this House.

MOTION

COMMITTEE SUBSTITUTIONS

Hon. Mr. Wells moved that the following substitutions be made: on the standing committee on general government, Mr. Cooke for Mr.

Charlton; on the standing committee on members' services, Mr. Charlton for Mr. Cassidy; on the standing committee on procedural affairs, Mr. Cassidy for Mr. Charlton; on the select committee on the Ombudsman, Mr. Philip for Mr. Cooke.

Motion agreed to.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

STAR OF PROGRESS SPIRITUAL CHURCH ACT

Ms. Fish moved, seconded by Mr. Cousens, first reading of Bill Pr23, An Act to revive the Star of Progress Spiritual Church.

Motion agreed to.

LABOUR RELATIONS AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Haggerty moved, seconded by Mr. Epp, first reading of Bill 31, An Act to amend the Labour Relations Act.

Motion agreed to.

3:30 p.m.

Mr. Haggerty: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the bill is to provide a mechanism whereby the Lieutenant Governor in Council can order a 60-day suspension of the strike or lockout and order a return to work where the strike or lockout constitutes an immediate and serious danger to life, health and safety or seriously disrupts the economy of the province or of any area of the province.

The bill provides that the Minister of Labour must appoint a conciliation officer where an order suspending a strike or lockout has been made, and may subsequently appoint a conciliation board where the efforts of the conciliation officer to effect a collective agreement are unsuccessful.

If conciliation efforts are unsuccessful, the strike or lockout may be resumed without a further strike vote. An order made under the bill would be enforceable as an order of the Supreme Court.

RESPONSE TO WRITTEN QUESTIONS

Mr. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I would like to bring to the attention of the government House leader (Mr. Wells) the numerous violations of standing order 81(d) with respect to replying to written questions in Orders and Notices within 14 days. This having been brought to his attention, I trust it will be remedied, tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the government House leader will take note.

MOTION TO SET ASIDE ORDINARY BUSINESS

Mr. Rae moved, seconded by Mr. Foulds, that pursuant to standing order 34(a), the ordinary business of the House be set aside to debate a matter of urgent public importance, namely the unprecedented publication of apparent budget information several days before the official release date of the budget, the absence of a complete explanation as to how such a fundamental breakdown of security could have occurred and the ministerial responsibility and accountability of the Treasurer for such publication; and that this entire matter be referred to the standing committee on procedural affairs.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to advise the honourable members before we start any discussion that the motion has been received in time, and I will listen to the honourable member for up to five minutes as to why he thinks the ordinary business of the House should be set aside.

Mr. Rae: Mr. Speaker, I do not think there can be any question that the events that came to our attention on Thursday evening and Thursday night, which we had a chance to discuss in the Legislature on Friday, are matters of urgent public importance. There can be no question that what took place—that is to say, the publication in the Globe and Mail of information that allegedly pertains to the budget that will be announced tomorrow by the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller)—amounts to an urgent situation. I think it is important for us not to overreact, but I think it is also important for us to put it in the context of a number of issues that have come to be accepted as basic traditions in this Legislature.

I do not want to enter into a debate again today on the question of the responsibility or otherwise of the Treasurer for what has taken place. The Treasurer has made his decision to go ahead with the budget tomorrow. I think we have to wait until tomorrow to see precisely what is contained in the budget and to see what steps then need to be taken.

Quite apart from this and quite apart from the discussions we had on Friday in this House with respect to the responsibility of the Treasurer, I do think there are matters here that are quite different from the question of privilege that you considered on Friday.

I respect the ruling you made this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, and I think the matter we are asking to debate today is significantly different from the one we discussed on Friday. The discussion on Friday, as I am sure you will realize and remember, focused principally on the question of what the Treasurer knew, how he knew it and what he felt his responsibility was for the events as they took place. The substance of the motion I am putting before you is that this matter is of sufficient importance that it should be referred to the standing committee on procedural affairs.

We have operated on certain basic assumptions in this assembly, as have other legislatures that follow in the British parliamentary tradition, and I would say there are two key elements in that tradition with respect to the publication of budget information. The first is that budget information has to be kept secret and a leak or a release of that information prior to the publication of a budget in itself is cause for very real concern.

The second principle which has informed my understanding of the Constitution of Ontario and of our country, and which I think has informed the understanding of most people of the meaning of the parliamentary tradition, is that a minister is responsible and accountable to the Legislature not only for his own conduct or misconduct but also for the conduct or misconduct of his ministry.

With respect to budget secrecy, the arguments which we put forward on Friday were basically arguments, if you like, of strict liability. They were arguments which said that, however it may have been caused, a Treasurer was ultimately responsible for the release of budgetary information and that in the light of that practice of strict liability he had an obligation to offer his resignation once that information had been made public.

I do not pretend to have any monopoly on the answers to these questions. We were operating, and indeed are operating, on the assumption that certain rules have been in place and are there to be respected and that we are living in a society where majorities cannot simply change the rules willy-nilly in order to suit their understanding of the laws and traditions of our country and of our province.

That is why I would ask you, sir, in considering this motion, to consider that we are asking that it be referred to the standing committee on procedural affairs and that the standing committee itself would be bound to do two things, as we understand it: to examine what is going on, what are the facts of the situation; and also to deal with the question of ministerial responsibility and accountability for the breach that may or may not have occurred.

We are entitled to an answer to those two questions. They can be answered only by a reasoned and considered approach by a standing committee of this Legislature which includes representatives of all three parties. Rules cannot be changed by the will of the majority, but have to be changed by the will of all the members of this Legislature.

Mr. Conway: Mr. Speaker, I rise on behalf of my colleagues to support the intent of the resolution standing in the name of the member for York South. I do so, having before me your ruling of earlier this afternoon, where in three pages you indicate to us that you do not imagine this to be a matter of privilege.

I have, of course, little or no choice but to accept that decision and I do so. However, accepting the ruling that this is not a matter of privilege, let me say that like, among others, the editorial board of the St. Catharines Standard of May 6, 1983, like the editorial writer of that newspaper, I see the matter to be none the less a matter of honour and principle.

It is, of course, a very important and serious matter for this Legislative Assembly, made more serious and more important because no less an honorable member than the Treasurer has set the standard for public morality vis-à-vis the handling of these matters. It has been referred to, on a number of occasions, that the Treasurer of Ontario has in recent days set the standard for public morality in this kind of situation.

I found it interesting that the Treasurer earlier today decided to lecture this House on some of the important questions to which this resolution directs our attention. In his response today, the Treasurer, responding to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Peterson), who was asking for a lifting up of the budgetary process, drew our attention to some of the cornerstones of British parliamentary democracy. He drew our attention to the principle of responsible government, that time-honoured tradition which sees an executive council discharging executive functions and ultimately being responsible to a Legislative Assembly.

3:40 p.m.

That, of course, is the principal cornerstone of our parliamentary democracy. But the essential component of that British parliamentary tradition, as MacGregor Dawson and others have pointed out, is that turning on ministerial responsibility. It is a rigid and sometimes a harsh doctrine. It is a doctrine that is often relied upon by this government when it seeks to put off such reformist principles as freedom of information.

How many times have we in this assembly heard from ministers of the crown that they cannot open up the operations of government because that would dilute and compromise that principle known as ministerial responsibility? It has not been lost on me how, in this situation, so many in the current executive council are so willing and anxious to talk around the principle of ministerial responsibility.

However unfair, however harsh and however rigid is that doctrine, certainly my interpretation of the duty of the Treasurer is clear in this matter. Perhaps we will not be able to adjudicate finally until tomorrow afternoon at four o'clock, but my colleagues and I think it important that this Legislature deal with this matter in the standing committee on procedural affairs, as the resolution of the member for York South suggests.

We are struck by the role of the press in all of this. I wonder, thinking aloud, about the exact circumstances surrounding the leak at the Carswell Printing Co. Did a reporter randomly, on the first visit in the trash alley of the Carswell establishment in Don Mills, happen upon some not too well shredded galley proofs? Or was it a matter of an inside tip?

One can just imagine the volume of garbage a printing house generates. My office is not far from the Progressive Conservative Party and the Liberal Party printshop downstairs. What goes out of there daily is, to say the least, voluminous. I really wonder whether what happened at Don Mills last week was a random visitation or was there an inside tipoff.

This is a question this Legislature might look into. Perhaps it should constitute part of the inquiry of the Solicitor General (Mr. G. W. Taylor). These are questions which direct our attention to the fundamentals of the way in which we do our business here. I certainly hope the Legislature this afternoon could give individual members an opportunity to ventilate their views on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, we in the government have no objection to proceeding with this debate this afternoon. We feel that much of what could have been carried on in this debate was entered into by this House by the question of privilege raised on Friday. We had a fairly wide-ranging debate on this matter then, but we would be most happy to hear all members' opinions on this motion. Therefore we would have no objection if you will, Mr. Speaker, that this emergency debate proceed.

Mr. Speaker: To address myself to the honourable government House leader, it is not my responsibility to rule that the debate will or will not proceed. My responsibility is either to find the motion in order or not in order. I do so find that the motion is in order. I put the question to the House: Shall the debate proceed?

Motion agreed to.

BUDGET SECURITY

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, this is the first opportunity I have had to speak with those silly clocks working to figure out whether I have done 10 minutes or not. I am glad to have the opportunity to participate in the debate. I am not sure I will take the full 10 minutes but I do want to raise a few of my views on this matter.

This whole matter of a budget leak gets down to one of the most basic aspects of the parliamentary system, and that is the aspect of ministerial responsibility. We understand the sketchy details that have now been released about the budget leak, as to how it happened, but there are still some very relevant questions in terms of what would have happened if someone else had gained access to this information, if there is any other information floating around or if the information was any kind of a setup. I assume that is what the Ontario Provincial Police are looking at.

I think a standing committee of the Legislature that would examine this matter should not only look at what happened with this leak and how it came about, but it is time the Legislature examined the role of all members of provincial parliament, all members of this assembly, in the budget process to see how that accountability can be increased and how more members can participate.

I do find some aspects of what has happened in the last few days rather alarming. For example, when the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) first became aware that there had been a leak and that the Globe and Mail did, in fact, have some information that appeared to be part of tomorrow's budget, I think it was incumbent on him to come into the Legislature last Thursday evening to report to all members of the assembly that this had occurred. Why he chose instead to speak with the press, why he decided to go on Metro Morning the next morning before speaking to the members of the Legislature, why he played that kind of a game with such an important violation of an accepted parliamentary procedure, demonstrates a lot of things that have gone wrong in the Ontario Legislature since I have been a member.

I remember last year when we had the budget response the lack of respect the provincial Treasurer, the Premier (Mr. Davis) and the government itself showed for the Legislature. They held this place in contempt when we had perhaps two or three members, back-benchers of the Conservative Party, present for the response of the member for Rainy River (Mr. T. P. Reid) to the budget. That also occurs on throne speech debate responses from the opposition leaders, and it demonstrates very clearly that the government has lost respect for the Legislature and lost respect for the process. The only time they try to rekindle that respect in the process is when it suits them.

In this case, it suits the government to say this is not really a violation of parliamentary procedure and ministerial responsibility, that it is an outdated principle in any case and therefore it need not be respected. I became most upset with this whole incident when I read in today's Globe and Mail and yesterday's Toronto Star comments that the Premier decided to make to the Progressive Conservative women's group.

I want to quote from today's Globe. "In a scathing attack on the Liberals and NDP, Mr. Davis told about 150 members of the Progressive Conservative Association of Women that 'we must not allow ourselves to descend to the kind of total inconsistency and hypocrisy practised by the opposition at Queen's Park.'" He refers to us on this side acting in a hypocritical way when it was that government, whether it be the Premier or in this case the Treasurer, who took off the gloves the night of the federal budget and accused the federal government of violating parliamentary procedure when Mr. Lalonde decided he should not resign. It was the Treasurer who carried that to the extreme when he decided to have his photo session with his budget and mocked Mr. Lalonde even further by putting a comic magazine inside the budget cover.

I suggest anything that comes out of this budget leak, any of the embarrassment that has been placed on this government, has been increased by the Treasurer and his own tactics when it came to the rather stupid leak that occurred in Ottawa just a couple of weeks before. The Treasurer has set the tone for this debate. He has set the tone of the whole debate on the budget leak by how he responded to Mr. Lalonde and the leak that occurred in Ottawa.

That is one of the reasons I have absolutely no sympathy with the provincial Treasurer for what has occurred. The responsibility, the practice and the principle of parliamentary procedures and ministerial responsibility are as relevant today in Tory Ontario as they were 10 years ago, or as they were two weeks ago in Ottawa when Mr. Lalonde showed his budget to Hamilton's channel 11 cameras.

I would suggest that this does, however, give all of us the opportunity to participate in the debate and to take a closer look at the budgetary process in this province. I think it is time that we refer the matter to the procedural affairs committee of the Legislature, as suggested in this resolution, to take a look and see whether the system can be modernized.

I do not think the Treasurer should use this as a way out in this particular situation, but I do think it is something that members should examine to see if a system can be developed in which more members can participate; a system in which the entire budget, after it is tabled and read into the legislative record and responded to by the official critics, can then be debated by a committee of the Legislature with expert testimony.

Perhaps at that point a government would even be willing to accept some changes in the budget if the testimony indicated that it was reasonable to do so. In this way, all members of the Legislature would have the benefit of the experts who reside in our province, on both the business and the labour side as well as individual people, and we would all be able to act in a more responsible way when it came to budgetary matters both in estimates and, more particularly, in tax measures and economic strategy.

I have a couple of other points. One is that last week the government House leader made the point that this budget leak was not particularly relevant because it did not involve a tax measure. I think the government should realize—I know the Treasurer did back in 1979—that the Ontario health insurance plan premiums in this province are in fact tax measures. They raise more revenue than corporate income tax, and that fact was recognized in 1979 by the member for Muskoka in response to questions in this Legislature, in which he referred to it as a tax measure.

I think the principle of ministerial responsibility

ity is the most important aspect of this whole debate. If there is no acceptance of ministerial responsibility, whether it be with the Solicitor General (Mr. G. W. Taylor), the Treasurer or both, then there is something very seriously wrong with the system.

The security measures in this particular case did not work; that is obvious. I think the responsibility for the security measures certainly resides with both the Solicitor General and the Treasurer. This is something that cannot be sidestepped by this government.

We have to get an appropriate response, and I hope if the Treasurer joins the debate this afternoon he will also respond to those of us in the Legislature who feel rather offended. He was not here when I made these comments, so I will repeat them. We feel rather offended on two counts: first, that he did not have the courtesy or the respect for the Legislative Assembly to come in and talk about this matter or report to the Legislature last Thursday evening when he first knew about it; and second, on the whole aspect of his comments about Mr. Lalonde just a couple of weeks before.

Perhaps he can refresh the memories of all members of the Legislature about the comments he made in Leamington the night the federal budget came down: the comments about getting Mr. Lalonde off the hook for $200 million on the budget leak. Those comments were made publicly, and the Treasurer has to accept that if he thinks Mr. Lalonde should resign, as was the case just a couple of weeks ago, then where does he stand on this matter? Where does he define exactly what ministerial responsibility means in this case?

I think a lot of these matters can be explored and defined for the future by a committee of this Legislature. If we can separate ourselves from the leak that occurred last week, I think a committee of the Legislature can look at this whole matter in a fairly nonpartisan way, and I think something good can come out of what was a very embarrassing situation for the government on Thursday last.

Mr. Conway: Mr. Speaker, I would first like to acknowledge with thanks the attendance of the Treasurer at the debate. Unlike the member for Windsor-Riverside (Mr. Cooke), I do have as one member to another a sense of sympathy for the Treasurer. I have not had the privilege of serving on the executive council but I hope there is not a member here, or I hope there are not too many members here, who cannot feel deeply and personally for one of our colleagues who finds himself in this situation. It has to be difficult. It must be an extremely personal and difficult experience the Treasurer has gone through these past 72 hours.

Without malice and without prejudice I say to the Treasurer that, accepting the Speaker's ruling this is not a matter of privilege, it remains a matter of honour and a matter of principle.

However difficult, the Treasurer's duty as a minister of the crown is clear, in my reading of the British parliamentary tradition. When a minister of the crown is unable, for whatever reason, to discharge his extremely important executive responsibilities in conformity with his oath, the details of the circumstances surrounding his incapacity in that respect do not, it seems to me, make much difference in the final analysis. They might in a secondary way help to explain certain things, but the doctrine of ministerial responsibility has been tough and it has been rigid.

When a Treasurer, a Minister of Finance or a Chancellor of the Exchequer, for whatever reason, is not able to protect or guarantee the secrecy of his or her budget, I believe we have a clear case of a minister's responsibility not having been lived up to. I think the time-honoured tradition leads to only one honourable course.

Perhaps like other members, I would not feel as strongly about this as I do if the Treasurer of Ontario had not in recent days himself set the standard for public morality in this regard. The Treasurer, for whatever reason, was quick off the mark days ago in tendering gratuitous advice to the Minister of Finance for Canada as to what his obligation was with respect to the so-called leak that occurred, I believe, on April 17 or 18, a day or two before the Minister of Finance tendered his budget in the House of Commons.

Let me say further I do not share with others the belief that the situations in Ottawa and Toronto are as dissimilar as others would have us believe. I think the Minister of Finance for Canada might have reasonably expected that when the press came to his office for the customary photo opportunity they would have respected the conventions of budget secrecy and would not zoom in and try to get an early glimpse of the budget and, having received it through whatever technological process, then transmit it to the public at large. But they did so.

Of course the Treasurer, having knowledge of that situation, had his photo opportunity. For whatever good reason, and I can imagine a few, he joked with the press by opening a copy of what I remember to be the 1983 budget with Scary Tales inside.

Hon. F. S. Miller: It was not a budget.

Mr. Conway: He shakes his head. He says it was not a 1983 budget. It was not a budget. Well, he opened what looked like a budget to those of us who saw it reported in the press and, of course, showed Scary Tales.

I say to the Treasurer he has responsibilities. He had to believe that, given what occurred in Ottawa, there might be some effort to breach the security which took the budget outside of his immediate control in the Frost Building. The press, in a very particular way, sought to inquire after the health of the Ontario budget and, as we found out last Thursday, was able to piece together galley proofs of same.

In my earlier remarks I said that some of us, and I will speak personally, have to believe, given what the press received in the back alleys of Don Mills when it went looking for the scraps of paper that one would normally find in the garbage collection, that it is almost unreasonable to believe that they were able to go up there and, helter-skelter or at random, find the unshredded galley proofs that provided the basis for their story.

I have some grave suspicions about a tipoff from the inside. If in fact there is reason to believe there was a tipoff, that there was some measure of insider information, I have to think to myself what possible opportunity was there for other interested parties to take advantage of that situation?

Tomorrow, at four o'clock, the Treasurer is going to introduce in this place a budget which in some respects has been leaked. We will not know for sure until that time tomorrow afternoon when the Treasurer rises in his place to read the budgetary policy of this government for 1983-84.

But it bothers me more than a little bit to think that the Treasurer is proceeding with a budget that has been leaked in some measure, that he told us on Friday he could not guarantee he had contained or controlled all of that leaked information, and that tomorrow we are still going to get a budget that has been prepared and delivered under those kinds of conditions. I am worried about the extent to which the secrecy has been provided for and guaranteed.

I want to say something about the role of the press in this respect. I read the Toronto Globe and Mail editorial this morning. I find I am almost incapable of talking reasonably about that. I really wonder what the chief magistrate of this great Upper Canada of ours thinks about the consistency of the national newspaper.

I suppose, if nothing else, it tells us the editorial writers at the Toronto Globe and Mail continue as always to be scrupulously even handed in the way in which they opine in terms of federal and provincial policies.

I would never in this assembly stoop to the use of the word "hypocrisy." I could not bring myself to use the word "hypocrisy" in this place because, of course, as Beauchesne has told us, it is unparliamentary.

I wonder if the chief magistrate for Upper Canada is not trembling in his high seat, in his high chair of judgement over the consistency of our national newspaper. That editorial made it very difficult for some of us to hold down our breakfasts at an early hour this morning.

I want to say, in concluding, I have said to the member for Peterborough (Mr. Turner), who sits as Speaker of this place, that it has concerned a number of us over the past number of months about the frequency of leaks around here.

We saw for example a few months ago, perhaps it was even more recently than that, the situation about the lockup for the release of the Dubin inquiry report. I got a copy of the Toronto Star containing the headline story, apparently chapter and verse of that report which was being guarded in a lockup, as I walked into this place.

Mr. McClellan: The La Scala report.

Mr. Conway: My colleague the member for Bellwoods refers to it as the La Scala report.

I said to the member for Peterborough that I wanted that particular situation investigated because I felt somewhat suspicious about the circumstances surrounding the release of that report. Yes, it is true there are some of us on this side of the House who imagine, in fits of perhaps too partisan enthusiasm, that sometimes government ministers are wont to release, prior to the lockup's conclusion, a report to the press or certain parts of the press.

I wonder if in this respect the Ontario government has not itself been hoist with its own petard. I hope before we conclude this round of discussions the member for Peterborough will report to this House, with the help and the benefit of the Minister of Health (Mr. Gross-man), the particular circumstances of how the so-called La Scala report, the La Scala version of the Dubin inquiry report on the Hospital for Sick Children in Toronto, managed to get into one of the Metropolitan dailies as and when it did.

In conclusion, this is a matter of honour. This is a matter of principle. I suspect no one knows and understands that more keenly than my friend the member for Muskoka (Mr. F. S. Miller). I hope he sets a high and good example in this respect not only for this Legislature but for the people beyond and for those who cherish the British parliamentary tradition.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I would begin by saying that ever since this event began last Thursday evening people have certainly come to know a lot more about the budget process and also about the Treasurer. Several things have come to light and several feelings are held by most people today.

First, the Treasurer, according to long-standing British tradition, has certainly taken all precautions humanly possible for him to take to prevent any of his budget becoming public before he presented it here. The Treasurer has stated that and I have no hesitation in saying it is so. I also have no hesitation in telling this House something of which it is very much aware. The great majority of the people of this province, the commentators, news writers and editorial writers support the Treasurer. No one believes he should resign except perhaps a few people on that side of the House.

We are not debating a motion asking for the resignation of the Treasurer. There is nothing in this motion that suggests the Treasurer should resign. The only calls for his resignation come in the individual speeches made on this motion. I do not think there is anyone in this House who does not believe in the long-standing British parliamentary tradition surrounding the budget. We all believe in that and we all practise that. We would all believe that if those long-standing traditions were broken certainly a minister of finance, a chancellor of the exchequer, or a treasurer should resign.

What does Eugene Forsey say are those long-standing British traditions about the budget? He says—

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Eugene Forsey used to be a very respected member of that party.

Mr. McClellan: He has belonged to all three parties. If there were four parties he would have belonged to all four.

Mr. Conway: You had better be careful. I didn't talk about Erik Nielsen.

Hon. Mr. Wells: He is certainly not one of our party. I do not care what those members argue or call back about Eugene Forsey or what the member for Renfrew North says about him or anyone else. I am sure he would not—

Mr. Conway: I didn't mention Erik Nielsen because I didn't want to be personal.

Hon. Mr. Wells: In the context in which we are talking, a person like Erik Nielsen is not in the same category as Eugene Forsey when it comes to British traditions or a thorough knowledge of the British parliamentary system. Whether members agree with his opinions or not, Eugene Forsey is recognized as one of the eminent Canadian students in this field. I would not differ with that opinion which is held by many people. It is the opinion I myself hold.

Eugene Forsey says the tradition of secrecy is based on the need to prevent people with prior knowledge of what is in the budget from making a financial killing. Then he says in this letter that was printed, "What is out of date about that?"

There is nothing out of date about that principle. That principle sticks, and I think every member of this House believes in it—including myself, the Treasurer and the members of this government.

Mr. Nixon: What letter is the member quoting from?

4:10 p.m.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I am quoting a letter that appeared in one of the newspapers. It was a letter to the editor of the Globe and Mail. It concerned the Lalonde leak. As members will recall, after that leak the federal Minister of Finance suggested that perhaps there should be some change in the whole idea we have about secrecy concerning the budget and perhaps some new procedures.

Eugene Forsey was writing this letter to say: "What's out of date about all this? It's a long-standing principle. No one should make a killing out of budget leaks. Maybe even the federal Minister of Finance is wrong now in starting to use what happened to him as an excuse for saying we should change the whole system."

Interjection.

The Deputy Speaker: I just remind all members that this is not a debate.

Hon. Mr. Wells: What I want to say is that if we take Eugene Forsey's statement of what this principle really is, that the release of tax information allows an individual to make a private gain or a killing, and apply that to this particular situation, it certainly does not apply.

Mr. Conway: We don't know that.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Well, first of all, I want to say that my friend the Treasurer tells me the Globe and Mail has sworn an affidavit that it has no further information than what was published; and certainly no one else has come forward to—

Mr. T. P. Reid: Why didn't the Treasurer tell us that?

Hon. Mr. Wells: It has just now come to light and he has indicated that to me.

The point now is, what is the information that was published in the Globe and Mail? First, the information concerned an increase in the Ontario health insurance plan premiums. Although they may have been considered from time to time as a tax measure, at the present time, in terms of the Inflation Restraint Board and its ruling, OHIP premiums are considered a regulated price and therefore a change in them is not, in the strictest sense of the word, a tax measure.

Besides, let someone tell me who is to gain from knowing whether there is to be an increase in OHIP premiums. It certainly is not the kind of measure that could cause some private gain, such as the disclosure of a sales tax change, a corporation tax change or something of that nature.

Mr. Conway: That is assuming somebody else didn't find another garbage bag with other information.

Hon. Mr. Wells: We are assuming that has not happened; and until that happens—

Mr. Conway: Do you know that for sure?

Hon. Mr. Wells: It is all very well to assume that, but we are talking about the specifics of the incident that has occurred.

The second matter that was disclosed in the Globe and Mail story concerned estimates, and it concerned what has been viewed as the prior release of information about some of the appropriations and money that were going to particular ministries of this government.

My friends across the floor all know that in past years we have tabled the estimates in this House prior to the budget. We have tabled them sometimes three or four weeks prior to the budget.

Mr. Laughren: Here?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Yes. We have tabled them in here. But the point is, they had nothing to do with budget secrecy or the accountability of the Treasurer.

Mr. Conway: Why was the Treasurer so hard on Mr. Lalonde then, because he did not know before?

The Deputy Speaker: I remind the member for Renfrew North that he has had his opportunity. The government House leader may continue.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Let me just say that in the context of what the Globe and Mail picked up from a garbage bag and printed in its newspaper, there was nothing that falls within my concept or the general concept of a tax leak that would account for private gain to an individual and would suggest that a Treasurer or a Chancellor of the Exchequer should resign, such as Hugh Dalton did in the 1947 case. That just does not apply.

I just want to conclude by saying that I and this government see no point in having the standing committee on procedural affairs study this matter, because there is no one on the procedural affairs committee who would have had any experience with the preparation of a budget. That, I think, severely hampers them in their determination. I say that because I sat in on a study group that was talking about how budgets should be prepared. It was calling for more openness. In that group there was one person who had been a former finance minister of this country. He said: "Just a minute, fellows, you don't know anything about it. You all can talk academically about this but unless you have ever prepared a budget you really do not understand the procedures."

Mr. Foulds: That is like saying the select committee cannot look at nuclear reactors because it does not have prior knowledge. Do not be silly.

Hon. Mr. Wells: No, in this case I think we have many more important things for the procedural affairs committee to do, including revising the rules of this House.

Let me just conclude by quoting from the last section of the Globe and Mail editorial which said today: "Frank Miller is an honourable man caught in a great embarrassment not of his making. He should remain in his post as Treasurer and take measures to make his next budget as secure as he thought this one would be."

I have full confidence that out of this the Treasurer will be able to take those steps.

Mr. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to respond to some of the comments of my honourable friend the government House leader, who had the chutzpah to quote Eugene Forsey on the subject of secrecy of the budget in connection with Marc Lalonde, while at the same time sitting beside the very man who, pre-eminently I think in the political field, was calling for Marc Lalonde's head on a platter.

Mr. Conway: You heard that too.

Mr. McClellan: I believe I heard the honourable Treasurer of Ontario demanding the resignation of the Minister of Finance in Ottawa. I believe I saw him mocking Marc Lalonde on television with the funny, comic book cutout.

Mr. Mackenzie: That is the only thing he is embarrassed about.

Mr. McClellan: I think my friend shows a fair degree of nerve and audacity quoting Eugene Forsey in defence of Marc Lalonde's right to stay on as Minister of Finance when his colleague beside him has been so vociferous in the opposite point of view.

As my friend rightly pointed out, we are not debating the question of resignation or no resignation.

Mr. Kolyn: Why don't you quote the senator now?

Mr. McClellan: I do not have the senator's sacred text in front of me, but we are not debating the question of resignation or no resignation.

Mr. Martel: You are the ones who demanded the resignation, not us.

Mr. McClellan: We are debating the question of whether the matter should be referred to a standing committee so that the matter set out in the resolution can be looked at rationally. It does not do anybody's peace of mind any good to make reference to this morning's editorial in the Globe and Mail, talking about chutzpah and audacity, nerve and gall. For a newspaper to precipitate our dear Treasurer into this jackpot in the first place and then, Pontius Pilate-like, wash its hands of all responsibility or complicity verges on farce.

The third point, in response to the government House leader, has to do with the Ontario health insurance plan. For some reason, the government House leader does not seem to understand that OHIP is a tax on the people of this province. I think I set it down but I have a reference in Hansard where the Treasurer himself—page 946 of Hansard, April 12, 1979 —referred to OHIP premium increases as a taxation measure. This particular taxation measure raises $1.4 billion, which is more than the government raises from corporation tax.

The government House leader knows full well that for many companies and many employees and employers OHIP is a de facto payroll tax, that OHIP premiums are covered under collective agreements. The collective agreement clauses stipulate that if OHIP goes up, the employer who is paying the share of OHIP on behalf of the employee will automatically pick up the increase. If there is an increase in OHIP premiums, it has an impact on many companies in this province in exactly the same way that an increase in any other kind of tax does. When companies are working out their pricing policies in relation to their competitors, they will bear this reality in mind, so companies that have advance knowledge of the impending OHIP tax increase of five per cent will begin to fold it into their pricing calculations immediately upon receiving it. So we cannot pretend that it does not have an impact; it does.

I suppose one of the reasons that perhaps the government can get away with the leak of an OHIP premium tax increase as opposed to that of a sales tax increase, a corporation tax increase or a personal income tax increase is that so many citizens are not affected as businesses or corporations; they are simply low-income people for whom the OHIP premium is already an overwhelming burden, or perhaps they are among the many thousands of people who simply cannot afford OHIP premium coverage in this province at all because of the cost.

One of the reasons that a reference to a standing committee would be useful—and it does not have to be the procedural affairs committee; if the government House leader has another committee up his sleeve that is less burdened with—

Mr. Nixon: He has got lots of committees up his sleeve.

Mr. McClellan: Well, the House leader of the Liberal Party has things up two sleeves with respect to the procedural affairs committee—as does my House leader, I regret to say.

If that committee is too busy with the rules changes, perhaps there are other places it could go; but the government will have to come up with a more plausible rationale for not referring it to committee than the fact that it should not be the procedural affairs committee.

There are unanswered questions as to whether the budget leak was theft or whether it was negligence. We have heard from the company, giving its self-exoneration here in the House and in the media outside, and the extent to which the Treasurer has joined in this process of self-exoneration.

But really, the facts of the leak are quite preposterous. There is a contract between the government, the printing company and the Ontario Provincial Police. Security, the prevention of leaks and the preservation of secrecy are the responsibility of the Treasurer. Written into his contract with the printing company is an obligation to enforce and maintain secrecy. The OPP, those vigilant guardians of law and order, is brought into the printing company premises to ensure the terms of the secrecy provisions of the contract are carried out. All material that is not to be used is supposed to be shredded. There are OPP on the premises.

This company has had the contract for over 10 years; presumably it knows what its obligations are. And what happens? Key portions of the budget in the form of galley proofs are carefully—I assume under the vigilant eyes of the OPP and the management of the printing company—deposited in a green garbage bag. Perhaps the material was escorted under armed guard to the receptacle, carefully put in the Glad bag and perhaps tied with a little string. Then, after they made sure the material had been placed in the proper receptacle according to the terms of the contract and the traditions of secrecy in force at the company, they carefully deposited the documents in the back alley of the company—at least, I understand it was the back alley.

Hon. G. W. Taylor: The Globe says “abandoned.”

Mr. McClellan: Oh yes, the Globe and Mail says it was abandoned, but the position of the government, I believe, and of the printing company is that the secrecy provisions of the contract were being fully maintained and there was nothing untoward going on in this place.

I cannot credit the words of the Solicitor General that this material was abandoned in the back alley. I assume this was part of their security regime. I assume that, having placed the galley proofs in the green garbage bag, they then took them under armed escort and carefully deposited the documents on their private property—unfortunately outside rather than inside. But, of course, who can quibble with security arrangements under the watchful visage of the OPP with a 10-year history behind it?

Mr. Conway: And they hadn't been to La Scala.

Mr. McClellan: They had not even been to La Scala, we are told by the member for Renfrew North.

There is obviously also an element of farce in the events surrounding the leak. The question of whether it was theft or negligence is not one that can be easily answered, but neither can it be easily dismissed. It is the responsibility of the Treasurer to maintain secrecy.

His only defence, we believe, is the defence of surreptitious entry and theft in violation of the law. I believe that is his only plausible defence.

I am not at all sure that this is what we are looking at here. I am not at all sure that taking essential government budget documents, placing them in a green garbage bag, throwing them outside for the garbage man to pick up and having somebody then obtain those documents falls under the purview of the Criminal Code. It sure does not fall under the purview of my criminal code. Anybody is welcome to go through my garbage.

Mr. Conway: We have seen confidential medical records left around.

Mr. McClellan: It is not unprecedented. I think there are questions that need to be answered, and a referral to a committee makes perfectly good sense.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I see the Treasurer and the government House leader have left the House briefly; I suppose I can direct my remarks to the chairman of the standing committee on procedural affairs. If the intent of this motion is successful, then the matter will be placed in his hands, or at least in the hands of the procedural affairs committee under his direction.

I am not at all sure that is not a good disposition, but I should point out to you, sir, that there is no motion before the House which will result in a vote of the House. That is one of the reasons why I was quite glad on Friday last, when the matter was more emergent than it is now, that we had a chance to debate it on the basis of a point of privilege rather than in a debate on a matter of urgent public importance, so called, which really does not end up in any substantial disposition.

It is possible that the House, by its agreement, may pass a motion, a resolution of some sort, that would send the matter to the committee. I think that would be quite worth while.

I think you should be aware, Mr. Speaker, if you are not personally so aware already, that the Treasurer in his comments to Broadcast News, at the time of Mr. Lalonde's difficulties with his budget, was quite clear. He did not emphasize the fact that it is only in circumstances where tax information is divulged that the Treasurer is called upon to relinquish his post.

He made it quite clear in his comments, although I thought he was a bit condescending. I forget the exact words, but they were something like, "We, in this special group of ministers of finance and treasurers" Knowing the minister, I am sure he did not mean to be condescending, but he said, "In this special and select group we know the requirement under the understood or written rules of British tradition that if budgetary information is leaked before the presentation of the budget then the Treasurer has no alternative but to resign his post."

I believe he is correct in that, although it is very difficult for anyone to understand, certainly the government House leader and many of the people outside this House who are not closely associated with these traditions. They think, "If somebody does not go out on the stock exchange, the real estate market or the live-stock market, if there is nobody one can point a finger at and say he made a killing because of the release of this information, what damage has been done?"

It is difficult to answer that question other than to quote the Treasurer himself. He said it is a fundamental basis of the responsibility of ministers of finance and treasurers that if this budgetary information is released, inadvertently or deliberately, the Treasurer has no alternative but to resign.

It seems to be very draconian punishment indeed, but he understood the rules; and he undertook, through his staff and his unlimited budget, to see that no danger was pressing in on him that this information would be public.

I am sure it never entered his mind, particularly after the kerfuffle—if there is such a word that Hansard can look after—in Ottawa, that such a thing would ever happen in the well-ordered emanations of the Treasury of Ontario. But it did.

My own feeling is that I somewhat regret the fact that the Treasurer has been faced with this. He has many other problems and we want to get to them. We want to get to the budget as soon as we can.

4:30 p.m.

The government House leader has argued that no information was made public that would have any influence on the stock market or the markets, or even on the possibility of any individual in making a gain or a loss. I made the point before he resumed his seat that in the words of the Treasurer himself that argument is irrelevant—interesting but irrelevant. The Treasurer has said that if budgetary information is prereleased through anybody's fault, the Treasurer must carry the responsibility and offer his resignation.

However, I want to put this for the interest of the government House leader and others: The information was released in the Globe and Mail that the budgetary allocation for the Ministry of Agriculture and Food would be reduced by 13 per cent. It is true that in other years such information has been presented to the House, but only by the Treasurer or the responsible minister presenting it to this House so it was then available to everyone in the province at the same time.

Obviously, when this is in the bulldog edition on page 7 of the Globe and Mail of May 6, it is not available to everyone at the same time. If you can tell me, Mr. Speaker, that this would have no influence on the credit of farmers or the decisions they would be making at planting time, I simply cannot accept it. There is a tendency for most members in this House to say, "Oh, well, that is the farmers and they are always in trouble or say they are anyway." They do not take it seriously. I say it is a serious matter of particular concern to the farmers in my riding, in Quinte and elsewhere who are facing the extreme problems of the farm economy at the present time.

We might even refer to the fact that the leaked information indicates a reduction in the Industry and Trade budget of 38 per cent. Someone has said, by whispering across the House, "That is because we gave a lot of money to Massey-Ferguson last year, and we are not going to do that again."

What about that? White Farm Equipment in Brantford is in an extreme position similar to Massey, and the fact that the government is going to take no action might be the last straw that puts it into receivership this week. There is nothing extreme about that prediction. It has already been made publicly by our local elected democratic socialist member of Parliament, and there is every indication such a thing might occur.

The government House leader is indicating that whatever information has been brought forward is not of any significance. I cannot accept that. It is a little difficult to me to make both sides of the argument as to whether it is relevant as far as gain or loss on the stock market or in business is concerned when, according to the Treasurer himself, if information is released that is factual, he has no alternative under the traditions, parliamentary and otherwise, but to offer his resignation.

That means we are right now in the calm in the eye of the hurricane because tomorrow, when he reads his budget and it becomes apparent that this information was prereleased, I think only the Treasurer knows his course of action. It would seem to me, based on his previous statements, that he would have no alternative but to offer his resignation.

I think the government House leader is right when he says most commentators and even the editorial writers of the Globe and Mail itself feel this does not necessarily call for his resignation. Probably the same argument could have been made about Darcy McKeough when his rubber stamp occurred on an approval for a subdivision in his own area when he did not even know such an approval had been made; but it did not take him more than 10 minutes to decide that under the circumstances he had no alternative but to do what he considered the honourable thing and resign his position.

I have another regret I want to put to you, Mr. Speaker, in the minute or two remaining to me. I really felt that Mr. Speaker's ruling on the question of privilege was extremely well drawn and had all sorts of good precedents for its basis, but I still regret the fact that he made the decision he did.

The operative part, and I quote from his first page is, "To be considered a question of privilege, a matter must pertain to a right which the ordinary citizen does not enjoy." I submit the right is to be the first to hear the government's decision on the basis of budgetary policy. If things were to be done fairly, all the citizens should hear it at the same time. Since that is not possible, then we as their representatives have the right and the privilege to hear this material, representing all parts of the province and all citizens at the same time.

I still submit, and I hope I am not out of order in so doing, that I regret Mr. Speaker and his predecessors in other places have all determined that this is not a matter of privilege. In my view, making it a matter of privilege is the only thing that gives any rationality to the traditions of budget secrecy as they are. If it can be shown that the privileges of the members of this House or of any other House have been transgressed by a treasurer or any other minister in that regard, it should call for an automatic resignation when Mr. Speaker, in this House or elsewhere, comes to the conclusion that such a transgression has occurred.

I therefore feel quite strongly that the test in this whole matter will come tomorrow afternoon; it will not be at the end of this debate, since there is no vote. I do not think there will be a meeting of minds, since I see our expert in horseflesh over there, the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Drea), getting ready to express his views on this matter. I really was hoping he would.

My own definite contention is that this thing will be tested when the budget is read in the House tomorrow. We have the information that was printed in Canada's national newspaper. If we find that information is valid and that a part of the budget did become public, then I would certainly expect, sincerely expect, the Treasurer will offer his resignation. What the Premier does with it at that point, of course, is a matter of his judgement. We, like all members of the House, will look forward to these events with a great deal of interest.

Hon. G. W. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I viewed with amusement this morning's Globe and Mail editorial. I had already completed my breakfast, so it did not cause me the same concern as it did the member for Renfrew North. The sentence in it that I found particularly amusing was, "If anyone should be contemplating resignation, perhaps it should be the man responsible for the OPP—Solicitor General George Taylor."

One is sometimes pleased that his name is used in such a prominent newspaper as the Globe and Mail. However, I did not contemplate resigning. I will not be contemplating such a course, but if I did contemplate offering the Premier my resignation I would probably think of a very interesting way to do it. Perhaps I would place it in a green garbage bag on some private property in Metropolitan Toronto and the first Globe and Mail reporter to find it would receive a bonus. However, I suspect that would not be their contemplation and I will not be doing that.

I noticed with amusement another phrase in there: "two bags of garbage abandoned." Without commenting on the seriousness of the situation, one wonders when garbage becomes abandoned or whether it is abandoned as described in the editorial.

I remember going on a bicycle marathon with another lawyer on a day that happened to be a garbage day. After proceeding for some two hours we began to discuss when title or property passed in garbage. It provided a great deal of amusement for two lawyers going along on a pleasant afternoon discussing when title to two bags of garbage might pass. Not very interesting perhaps; however, one might say there will be great difficulty in this situation as to when the property in green garbage bags passes or might be described as abandoned.

One might contemplate all the situations. When I look at all the boxes around Metropolitan Toronto and other places, I ask myself about the documents labelled "The Globe and Mail" and stored in those boxes. Is that property abandoned? One might describe some of the material in there as garbage; therefore, is it abandoned and do we no longer have to put in a quarter for those documents and 50 cents on the weekend? How it achieves a greater notoriety on the weekend is difficult to imagine.

I also looked with amusement at some of the things in here as to how the Globe and Mail might describe the new process of victims of crime where, if a crime happened to be contemplated, it might even say, "Hang the victim," with the logic it has presented with the editorial of today. However, one might not say it is as hypothetical as what is taking place.

One might even look at the Watergate plumb-ers. The Watergate plumbers would be running the Globe and Mail at present by the logic it has used in some of its editorial positions. I have great difficulty contemplating how they can print the story, whether or not it is accurate, whether or not the details are accurate, whether or not it is what they say it is. That is for somebody else to speculate on and maybe to discover.

Yet one follows that through and says in the next phrase, as the member for Renfrew North says, how can they put in an editorial and say, "Our editorial board is clean, perfect, without being confused by the facts of what we printed in our newspaper of a previous day, whether they are accurate or not"? I might say that when the Globe and Mail perhaps has been caught with its hand in the cookie jar, it looks around for somebody else who might take the blame.

The Treasurer has great public support, and I must not deny that. I think he has that both through the other areas of the media and through the public of Ontario. The Globe and Mail says: "Let's go hang the Solicitor General. He was obviously responsible for security. Let's get somebody—not us for the way we gained our information, whatever way it was gained, and not us for printing that information, however it might have been received and whatever problems it may cause to the Treasurer or to the budgetary process. Let's get somebody else."

They have fine logic on that editorial board. It gives me great pleasure to know I am not alone in this condemnation of that newspaper at this time. One does not lightly attack the media and suggest that in some respects they may even be inaccurate in what they are doing or that one of its editorial boards may not be properly putting forth its material. All the other areas of the media condemn that newspaper, one that labels itself the national newspaper although I regret that it does not print a quarter of its newspaper in French. Still, that is their problem. They do call themselves a national newspaper.

One wonders who might be calling for whose resignation. If one happened to be the owner, the editor and the publisher of that newspaper, one might say to the reporter who used such a process: "Why don't you come in here and hand that resignation to me as a reporter? I don't want anybody on my staff who goes digging through garbage bags like the local wino trying to find some substance to report about. It's not the best reporting tactics."

However, taking the Ontario Provincial Police's responsibility, as it has been labelled, I must say that I think it is a fine force. The security was carried out and, without putting too much responsibility, there was a certain responsibility on the printers. In this day and age when so much has to be put in print, I think there is a trust in printers that they will, first, provide a certain amount of security and, second, perform their task.

One has to recognize there is a possibility that material may not be looked at by other people once it is put in print, once it is going through a printing process. I find the method here very rudimentary. If one wants to challenge that security, and it is the security we are discussing, rummaging through garbage bags surely is most rudimentary. With all the economic forces available today, and the sophistication that is available, one has to wonder about such a rudimentary process as rummaging through green garbage bags.

There are many advanced techniques one has to look at if one wants to break the security. One would do it with far more sophistication than that if one wanted to test the security, because it is not that sophisticated. There has to be a certain amount of trust. Therefore, I find no difficulty in saying that this matter now being investigated by the Ontario Provincial Police would not be served well in any way by being before a committee that could do any better job of investigating it than is currently going on.

Indeed, I think it is far too premature, as the document says here, "in the absence of a complete explanation as to how such a fundamental breakdown in security could have occurred." When this was asked, the Treasurer would not know what and how a complete explanation could be able to be given at that time. It would be impossible. They are demanding a complete explanation long before it is available. There is an ongoing investigation at present.

As to the ministerial responsibility, there is a certain amount of ministerial responsibility in theory and in fact. But in this situation, in fact and in theory, it is not one that this minister, the Treasurer, should be held accountable for in any way. I see no way that he should in any respect offer or even contemplate a resignation, as has been asked throughout this debate. As to the suggestion in the Globe editorial, I have not even contemplated it.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, one can only suggest that there is some poetic justice here. I was sitting last week reading the newspaper, and there was the Treasurer poking fun at none other than Marc Lalonde. He had what we heard him say today was his phoney budget, his comic book. It was really a comic book, but not a real budget. I thought to myself then that one should not be so smug, because one can never tell in this business when it is going to catch up to him.

I was delighted Thursday night when I found out the scoundrel who had caught up to him, not because I am pleased to see him squirm, but because while one can kick somebody else in the head, one has to stand back: when someone is flinging that stuff, some of it always sticks. With the Treasurer, it has stuck, except that he went even further when it occurred. Members of the cabinet have got up to defend him, but no one wants to speak to what the Treasurer said when he was commenting on Marc Lalonde. He said he must resign. Now nary a Tory back-bencher, nor a cabinet front-bencher for that matter, is speaking to that.

The morality, as my friend the member for Renfrew North says, is established by none other than the Treasurer. That morality did not last very long, mind—only until he got caught with his fingers, as the Solicitor General just said, in the cookie jar. The poison he was prepared to mete out just two or three weeks ago is as applicable to him as to someone else.

Mr. Cooke: But the Premier says—

Mr. Martel: I want to get to the Premier; he is next. That fellow who could not get enough votes to get a coronation is back with us. There is not a guy I have known over the years who could slug below the belt better and be more sanctimonious than the Premier and not have anyone from the press even comment.

Listen to his shots today at the member for St. Catharines. I think he said his lip was moving before his brain. That is okay. Nobody ever says that to the Premier, except when the member for Huron-Middlesex (Mr. Riddell)—and I read Hansard very deliberately—made some comment with respect to the funding and the Premier became very indignant about it, very upset, and he said, "Jack Riddell, you will pay for this," or words to that effect.

What did the Premier say when he was speaking to the good Progressive Conservative women? Let me quote: "In a scathing attack on the Liberals and the NDP, Mr. Davis told about 150 members of the Progressive Conservative Association of Women that 'We must not allow ourselves to descend to the kind of total inconsistency and hypocrisy practised by the opposition at Queen's Park.'"

What the hell does he say when his Treasurer says to the federal Minister of Finance, "You have got to resign"? He says, "That is not applicable." And we are the hypocrites?

The Premier should not tell me about hypocrisy and about hitting below the belt, because he is a master at it. No one has caught up with him yet. He does it daily in here. He says, "I do not want to say this about the member, and I will not"; then he goes on to say it, and it is a great joke. For hypocrisy the Premier tops them all, because it was his Treasurer who called for a resignation.

I think the type of thing we saw in the past might be too harsh; I would be the first one to suggest that. That is why our resolution says it should go to a committee, because maybe the penalty is too harsh to suit the crime, if I may use that term as an analogy. It is not a crime in the sense of anything being crooked or perverse.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Cousens): I just draw to the attention of the member for Sudbury East, without breaking his flow, that he is verging on unparliamentary language with the term "hypocrisy." I think he is just close—

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, I am quoting—

The Acting Speaker: I thank the honourable member for remembering that we are in the House and that it requires great care in how he phrases these expressions.

Mr. Martel: Is it okay for the Premier to go outside this building and call everyone else a hypocrite? Does it just work one way?

The Acting Speaker: I would just say to the honourable member that here in the House there are rules that we ask him to abide by.

Mr. Martel: Well, you cannot have it both ways.

The Acting Speaker: In the House there are rules.

Mr. Martel: The Premier cannot leave this place and call members of the opposition hypocritical while we cannot come here and even quote him because we verge on saying something wrong.

Let me get back to my train of thought. You broke it, Mr. Speaker; I appreciate your doing that for me.

I think the price one pays for the crime—and, as I said, I do not mean it in the sense of anything criminal—on the basis of the traditions of years gone by might be a little harsh. One might want to send it to a committee. If a worker is caught doing something wrong, there is usually a penalty. Maybe we could have something such as they have in sports: you can clobber someone on the head and get a 10-game suspension. We might look at something like that, not at something that comes out of the Dark Ages; something that is responsive and makes the person responsible for carrying such a weighty job so that he too can be called to task in some manner that does not destroy him.

We might want to look at it in a committee structure to see whether the past is really relevant, because far too many things in this place are tradition-bound and out of date. That may be why this place can be so useless much of the time. Maybe if we started to put this place in the 20th century we might have a place that had some meaning. All you have to do is take a look around here every day and there is no one here. I suggest that much of the reason is that what we do is—

An hon. member: Irrelevant.

Mr. Martel: And most of the public think it is irrelevant.

I cannot help but feel sorry for my friend the member who used to be the chairman of the standing committee on procedural affairs and who was shuffled aside just recently because he is one of those members who wanted to open up the process—

Mr. Cunningham: Who was that man?

Mr. Nixon: Who was that masked man?

Mr. Martel: The member for Burlington South (Mr. Kerr), who wanted to open up some of the procedures.

Budget speeches and throne speeches are silly around here in a majority parliament because, once they are introduced, that is the end of it; one might as well vote and go home. In fact, democracy in a majority goes out the window for four years by and large, because once something is brought in by government, that is it. All the back-benchers get up when they are told, raise their hands when they are told and sit down and shut up when they are told. That is the democratic process here.

In England, when we were there, it was somewhat different. Back-benchers there realize they have a role. It is not just to be told when to raise their hands; they object, and they object openly. But this is not the case in Ontario or in Ottawa, because one might not get a cabinet post and one might embarrass one's government.

When we were in England the member for York Centre (Mr. Cousens) learned the back-benchers there were somewhat more independent and it made the government more responsible. But that is not the case around here, not even with contradiction. If we get a budget tomorrow, all will be said and done. People can rail away for two or three weeks, but what is the difference? The Treasurer said it today: we will go in and vote and that is it.

The government might open up the process so that people, including the Tory back-benchers, have the feeling they are contributing something. I have talked to most of them, and I suspect they do not really feel they contribute a hell of a lot, but they might want to do something.

The member for Burlington South wanted to do that, so they moved him. But in that whole process of ministerial responsibility there might be an opening-up of the process so that other people could have something to say. The government might not have to accept it, but at least there would be an opportunity before the die is cast to contribute something, and we do not do that in our society.

That was the second reason we wanted this to go to the procedural affairs committee. One reason was to look at the responsibility and the accountability, and the other was the security.

I must say, as I take my place, that this happened five days ago. We are into Monday afternoon at five o'clock and we have not heard anything yet with respect to what the real facts were as to what went on, not even a statement to try to lay some of it to rest. I think that is an indication of what is wrong with this government: the fact that the Treasurer did not come in when it occurred, and we are now down to the crunch and we still have not even got at least a preliminary report. To hell with the facts.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, it is with a great deal of interest that I rise to speak on the motion before us.

I recall that I was on my feet for a little more than eight hours after the budget last year to force the government to send the retail sales tax bill to committee with the proviso that the Tory majority on that committee would not block the opposition attempts to hear testimony from the public. I find it passing strange that those on the opposite side would be adopting the stance that they have in terms of the budgetary process as it now exists.

The Treasurer, in response to a question raised earlier today by myself, said that the opposition can refer any bill to the committee it chooses. That is true, of course, but with the Tory majority—

Mr. Martel: We cannot debate it.

Mr. T. P. Reid: We cannot debate it. With the Tory majority, they can stifle any kind of debate, particularly from outside, by not accepting our proposals to have the public come in and explain what impact the budget is having on their everyday lives.

The intent of this motion—and I would have hoped the government itself would have put such a motion or will put such a motion—is obviously so that we can deal in a more open and knowledgeable way with the budgetary process than we have in the past.

My leader made a speech last year on this subject. I have made comments, my friends on my left have made comments, and the Canadian Tax Foundation has made comments. Everybody is satisfied with the process until something goes wrong. Surely the public at large should have the opportunity to question the minister and his officials, as should the members of the House, who, I should point out to you, Mr. Speaker, did not and would not have had that opportunity after the last budget if I had not gone to some lengths and finally worn the government down and convinced it of the efficacy of my point of view.

The related matter, of course, is whether the Treasurer resigns. I feel that, as with most things around here, this is a bit of a tempest in a teapot. I feel the Treasurer has put himself behind the proverbial eight ball, as my friend the member for Sudbury East (Mr. Martel) just mentioned, with his cute comment about Mr. Lalonde's difficulty and with his comic book inside the budget.

As a matter of fact, as I thought of this on the weekend, one could almost envisage some smart young reporter on his way up sitting in the Globe and Mail newsroom and saying to himself, "Well"—

Mr. Rae: Lois.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Lois? "Clark, I will just see how smart Mr. Miller is, how good his security is and just how cute he will be if we can find something on him."

Mr. Rae: Good idea, Clark.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Clark said to Lois, "That sounds like a good idea," and they immediately rushed out to the garbage bags.

I find the Treasurer is hoist on his own petard in this instance—not that I want to add to the general comments about whether he should resign or not.

I draw to the Speaker's attention section 1(b) of the rules, "In all contingencies not provided for in the standing orders the question shall be decided by the Speaker or Chairman, and in making his ruling, the Speaker or Chairman shall base his decision on the usages and precedents of the Legislature and parliamentary tradition." Just as a short history lesson, that rule was changed at the request of some of us. When I first came to the House we made our decisions based on British parliamentary tradition. We now base it on Ontario legislative tradition first, then the House of Commons, and so on.

We do have the precedent of Mr. McKeough who felt very keenly ministerial responsibility for his actions and those of the people in his ministry. I thought at the time he should not have resigned on that occasion. I am not sure I feel much differently this time, except for that precedent set by Mr. McKeough and the Treasurer's own words. He obviously felt the traditions and usages of this Legislature required that he resign. Be that as it may, the Treasurer obviously is well liked in this chamber. He seems to be a decent, honourable and honest man and it is unfortunate that he of all people should come to this pass. I think it was evident on Friday, particularly, that he was having a great many personal problems with the situation as it arose.

Of course, we will see after tomorrow exactly whether what the Globe and Mail had was the original budget. The member for York South (Mr. Rae) has put it as neatly as it can possibly be put. What has happened, in effect, in this dialogue in the last few days is that the Treasurer decides what a budget is and when it is his budget. Obviously, that can cover a multitude of sins because, presumably, he could change his mind as he walks into this chamber. He could say, "All that printed stuff you have on your desk is really not the budget. It is a bit of a joke, a little more sophisticated than my comic book, but basically here is the budget in my breast pocket."

Somewhat irrelevantly, I thought all the time the Treasurer had at least two budgets: one if the Premier (Mr. Davis) ran for the federal leadership and one if he did not. There may actually even be four budgets: one if the Treasurer was going to run for the provincial leadership and one if he did not. There may be four budgets in those garbage bags.

The other part of this motion that endears it to me personally is that I think it would be most appropriate to have the procedural affairs committee look into this whole matter and call before it those people at the Globe and Mail who, first, sanctioned this kind of thing and, second, allowed its publication. I realize the press is sacrosanct, and it often occurs to me that if politicians have large egos, those in the media make us look like pikers in comparison.

There is a sense I got in my constituency and from others I have spoken to of moral outrage at the actions of the Globe and Mail in this respect. Some of my colleagues and I were also recipients of this kind of journalism a few years ago when we were on a select committee. None of us objected in any way to a reporter from the Globe and Mail going down and looking at the receipts for our hotel rooms and making a big story about the fact that there we were in Florida and it was 40 below in Ontario.

Nobody objected to that—it was part of the game—but what I objected to was that this particular reporter got in a taxi and followed us around. Fortunately, she happened to follow the right taxi because she followed me and I was on a tour of various old and architecturally interesting churches in the Miami area. I just thought it was stooping a little low to be doing that kind of thing. As the Treasurer himself said, "You have to be stooping pretty low when you go through garbage bags."

That particular reporter was—banished is not, I think, a fair word, but shall we say, she was transferred shortly after that for whatever reason. There seems to be some kind of strange morality going on in here in terms of what this particular newspaper sees fit to print and the way it sees fit to get that news. I would think perhaps a dialogue on the morality of the press, which is very fond of lecturing us on our particular morality, would have been a very felicitous outcome of referring this whole matter to the procedural affairs committee.

I would hope that this would go further than this debate today and that the government itself might see fit to refer the matter to the procedural affairs committee.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I must confess that I did not really think this particular debate would go on today. After they read the verdict of the public on what they did on Friday morning, I really thought the two opposition parties might have agreed that perhaps they overreacted a bit on Thursday night, and with some justification, because the reports on Thursday night and part of Friday morning were rather fragmentary. I do not think it was until some time later on Friday that the full picture of what supposedly occurred became evident.

However, they have decided to proceed. I find it very interesting, particularly regarding the New Democrats, that they are saying they do not want to overreact. In fact, their lead speaker today said, "Let us wait for the budget to see". I believe it was the government and the Treasurer that suggested that on Friday morning and were met with hoots of derision from the far left in the opposition.

What also concerns me is that somehow we are now placed in a position where we want to refer this to the standing committee on procedural affairs. For what? There has been a suggestion that the standing committee on procedural affairs can begin to play gumshoe with the media.

Whatever the media have done, whatever their ethics are, whatever they have done in the past or whatever they will do in the future, surely is not the particular concern of the committee on procedural affairs unless they are done in this building. What has been done has been done many miles away from here. We are talking about the procedural affairs committee that will look at the budgetary process. Do we in this House really believe that the committee on procedural affairs is really going to look at the budgetary process or is the proper one to do so? Of course, the answer is no.

5:10 p.m.

It has been suggested that the standing committee on procedural affairs will look at something I happen to believe is long overdue, and that is the relevance of this chamber. Once again, with all due respect to the standing committee on procedural affairs, that is a task beyond its ability.

What are we really here for this afternoon? We are here this afternoon simply as an excuse for all the tumult and all the shouting that occurred Friday morning on the basis of reports so fragmentary that the very motion we are discussing, when it was first typed, used the word "disclosure." That is how fragmentary things were. It had to be pencilled in twice as "publication" and initialled. It is initialled.

Mr. Rae: When was it changed?

Hon. Mr. Drea: It was changed right here.

Mr. Rae: When was it changed?

Hon. Mr. Drea: I said on Friday the results were so fragmentary—

Mr. Rae: When was it changed? You don't know when it was changed. You don't know what you are talking about.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I know what I am talking about. I want to read something to the member.

Mr. Foulds: I bet you got that out of a green garbage bag.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Cousens): Order.

Hon. Mr. Drea: As to the very man who says I do not know what I am talking about, let me read what kangaroo court Rae had to say on Friday. Let me read it. "In my view, the Treasurer should do the honourable thing—

Mr. Martel: Isn't that wrong, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Breagh: You can't use that word in here.

The Acting Speaker: The minister will withdraw the statement where he called another member a kangaroo. That is not parliamentary.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I said "kangaroo court."

The Acting Speaker: That is fine. Remove that as well, please.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I withdraw it but I want to read what Mr. Humanity said: "In my view, the Treasurer should do the honourable thing. He should resign. The matter should then be referred to a committee, and if that committee finds there was the kind of evidence I have suggested might be persuasive, then it is possible for us to look at the Treasurer's position again."

In other words, according to Mr. Humanity, one is guilty until he proves himself innocent. He said it. The member for Wilson Heights (Mr. Rotenberg) was most eloquent in the words he used to describe it.

The suggestion has been made that because of the events in the media the budget has been fundamentally flawed. Let us look at what has happened since Friday morning. If indeed the markets were to be affected, then we need more flaws because on Friday the markets set all-time records. If the farm community wanted to plant over this weekend, and it was because of a flawed budget it did not, I suggest that because of the weather there would not have been very much planting, even going into this afternoon. Certainly, in those terms there was no flaw in the budget.

What we are looking at now, Mr. Speaker, after your own chair has ruled there was no violation of privilege—none whatsoever—and what we are doing is commenting upon whether the Treasurer took the proper security procedures in order that his budget would not be leaked or not go to certain people in terms of their being able to take unfair advantage or make a profit.

The Treasurer has explained it well. He took every reasonable security precaution there was. He is not in the position of some of those who have been mentioned earlier. I want to phrase my words carefully because I do not think Mr. Lalonde should have resigned. I do not think Mr. Lalonde did anything wrong. But in the view of some of those in the past who either made flip remarks or became extremely careless—and Mr. Lalonde is not one of those—in saying that they found themselves in difficulty for revealing a budget, how can one hold a Treasurer or any other minister or any member of this assembly accountable if someone wishes to steal the garbage? That is why the public has already made up its mind.

The public has indeed made up its mind. It is most sympathetic to the Treasurer; it is not very sympathetic to what is going on here this afternoon. I suggest that should be of more concern to the individual members here than what went on or did not go on last week. When one has an assembly being looked at by the public as something that is not very relevant, then I suggest we have started down a course where alienation between the public and the government becomes a very major concern.

Other than the unfortunate remarks that people are guilty and there should be a committee to see whether they are innocent or re-evaluate their position, what has really happened is that the approach of the modern media towards government—and they do not look at the traditions very carefully—has brought them into rather fundamental conflict with what has been expected and anticipated in the past. That is not something that is going to be solved by a committee, by more security or by more debate in this House. It is something that the media and the ministers themselves may have to take into account in their future course of conduct. It is not something that should be handled here or in a thing that has to end at six o'clock without even a vote.

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Speaker, I want to give my sense of what has developed. It is obviously clear, because neither of the opposition parties challenged the Speaker's ruling this afternoon, that there is no question of privilege. We abided by the Speaker's decision on that matter.

I submit to the government that we do not have here a question of what the public opinion dictates the government should do. This is not a question either of privilege or a question of what the public opinion feels government action should be.

What we have here and what is at stake in our very fragile parliamentary traditions—and our parliamentary traditions are getting more and more fragile as we see the Americanization of the Tory government and of this province—is what this government considers to be its concept of what its ministers are responsible for.

What I resent as a private member, what I believe all members of this House resent and what the public should resent is that the government, like the federal Liberal government, has decided to rewrite its standards in the middle of the argument. The government's attitude has changed.

Mr. Rotenberg: That is not true.

Mr. Foulds: If the member for Wilson Heights will just listen to me, I will develop that argument for him. First, as many speakers have indicated, the Treasurer did indicate the federal Minister of Finance should have resigned. Second, when confronted by the reporters on Thursday, the Treasurer indicated the documents could ruin his life. That statement has not been denied by the Treasurer.

I submit this indicated the Treasurer believed that ministerial responsibility was at stake, that the tradition of budget secrecy was at stake. Only the next morning did we begin to get the revision of policy of this government and the shift of responsibility.

First, the responsibility was shifted to the Ontario Provincial Police, in the Treasurer's statement. We had written in by hand "part of" to qualify the OPP's responsibility. I found it, quite frankly, disappointing that the Solicitor General (Mr. G. W. Taylor) did not take the 10 minutes available to him to outline to the House what the OPP's responsibility in the budget secrecy process was. We have had none of that information.

Second, there was some attempt to shift the responsibility to Carswell Printing, because the immediate action that the Treasurer took was to remove the printing of the budget from the responsibility of Carswell Printing to the Treasury building, thereby implying that Carswell Printing had not accepted its responsibility.

Finally, there were the very serious allegations made both by implication and explicitly that the Globe and Mail had stolen materials, that theft and trespass were involved. Those are very serious allegations and not one jot of evidence has been brought before this House or before the public to substantiate those serious allegations. I find that, frankly, very disturbing.

The traditional concept of budget secrecy is enunciated very clearly in a number of instances, which I would like to quote. First of all, the Honourable George Nowlan in the House of Commons debates, June 19, 1963, said:

"I do not think the public generally realize the way in which secrecy has always been a traditional part of making a budget; the absolute necessity of avoiding a leak, consciously or unconsciously, and of assuring the public that the Minister of Finance, like Caesar's wife, is above suspicion." He indicates that this is the prime principle.

"We take the precaution of locking up the press until the Minister of Finance delivers his speech, as today it has an impact on every man and every woman in all walks of life and on all facets of our economy."

In an article on budget secrecy in the Canadian Tax Journal, May 1976, D. J. Sherbaniuk says this, and I quote it because I think it is of some interest:

"The rules of secrecy have several merits and also some disadvantages. Of paramount importance is the necessity to prevent interested parties from profiting by knowledge obtained in advance, and perhaps also to prevent financial speculation and loss of revenue to the exchequer.

"If these evils can be thwarted by withholding information capable of being used for purposes of private gain, there is little reason why the remainder of the budget should not be publicly discussed. Such distinctions have not been made, however, and the veil of secrecy shrouds the entire budget."

I would submit that this government has not made such distinctions until the incident with the Treasurer. Now the total defence of the government rests on the fact that the information that was disclosed could not profit anybody. That is their sole defence at the present moment.

I would submit that what the Treasurer has admitted, what the government has admitted, is that substantial material having to do with the budget has been made public. It is only when caught in that act, whether advertent or inadvertent, that they have resorted to the one defence.

I want to quote Donald S. Macdonald, as Minister of Finance in 1976, from his own budget speech of that year:

"The tradition of budget secrecy has two grounds. It is intended to deny anyone financial advantage from advance information and it is intended to ensure that important statements of government economic policy are disclosed first to the members of the House of Commons. Both of these reasons are valid and important."

I would submit that certainly this second reason has not been abided by in this situation. Those two grounds, if I may say so, were enunciated by our own Speaker this afternoon when he said, "The budget by its very nature must be kept secret until it is presented by the Treasurer in this House. Such a practice is, of course, necessary to prevent financial speculation and the loss of revenue to the government treasury."

We will never know if what was revealed in the budget has resulted in a loss of revenue to the government treasury because the government could be rewriting the budget.

Second, this afternoon the Speaker said, "Budget secrecy is a political convention, as is the practice that the Treasurer presents his budget in the House before discussing it in any other public forum." Certainly we have had our Treasurer and the Premier (Mr. Davis) discussing the budget in a public forum subsequent to Thursday's events—all over the weekend, in fact. I would submit that is a breach of the traditional budgetary secrecy concept.

There is no question public opinion is on the Treasurer's side. However, government by poll is just not good enough in this circumstance. I would have more sympathy for the government and for the Treasurer if this were a government committed to openness—if it were a government committed to freedom of information. But no, this is a government that is committed to neither of those concepts. A number of questions still need to be answered.

Has there been an effort to be open, to be candid? The Treasurer did not make any kind of preliminary statement to the House on Thursday. On Friday morning the Treasurer allowed points of privilege to go on for an hour and a quarter without intervening to indicate to the House publicly that he had a ministerial statement to make.

What is at stake? It would appear the Treasurer has not deliberately leaked the budget. It would appear his officials have not deliberately leaked the budget. But it would appear substantial budget information has become public. That is why our motion calls for the standing committee on procedural affairs to examine the traditional methods surrounding the preparation of the Ontario budget. Second, it asks whether those traditional methods have been properly observed in this case.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Cousens): I thank the honourable member.

Mr. Foulds: I would just like to conclude with this one sentence. The Treasurer indicates to me that he himself considers a serious breach of the traditional parliamentary secrecy surrounding budgets has occurred.

Mr. Riddell: Mr. Speaker, when I arrived at my office this afternoon, there was a message on my desk. I was to make an urgent telephone call to a farmer in southwestern Ontario who has the respect of many people, not only farmers but urban people down there. He has been closely connected in some way with the Ridgeway College of Agricultural Technology; he has done some lecturing; he has been very prevalent in swine breeding; he has been a farmer for a period of time. He informed me today the bank had called his note. Today was his last day.

I do not know whether or not that is coincidental with the budget which was leaked. I hope not. I do not know how widespread that type of thing might be but it was one thing I raised when we had the debate on Friday. The one real concern I had was that with this budget leak the lending institutions probably were going to take a very tough stand on the farmers. They saw the government was withdrawing what little commitment it had to the farming industry.

Mr. Rotenberg: Why don't you blame the frost over the weekend on the budget leak?

The Acting Speaker: Order.

Mr. Riddell: I will not pursue that any further, but I resent some—

Mr. Rotenberg: I have never heard such nonsense in my life.

Mr. McClellan: Sure you have.

The Acting Speaker: Order.

Mr. Riddell: —incidents which took place since we learned of the budget leak. I want to talk a little bit about that.

When, on Thursday, we learned of the report in the Globe and Mail, the Liberal House leader, quite in accordance with the standing orders, moved that the committee rise and report. The chairman, in his wisdom, thought he wanted to think it over for a time and then we all left the chamber. The bells rang for some time. We came back around 11 p.m. and everybody voted in favour of the committee rising and reporting. Then the House leader proceeded to draw to the attention of the Speaker the fact that there had been a budget leak. The Speaker would not even look at him, would not even acknowledge him and of his own volition—but I think he received marching orders from his colleagues—he adjourned the House.

5:30 p.m.

At the adjournment, the member for Mississauga East (Mr. Gregory) put down the greatest—

Hon. Mr. Gregory: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. My friend opposite referred to a decision the Speaker made spurred on by his colleagues. I wonder if he would like to withdraw that remark or whether he is implying something about the Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: I appreciate the government whip's comment. Certainly the Speaker is not beholden to any one party as the member was inclined to say there. Could you withdraw that remark?

Mr. Riddell: The Speaker was not long in making up his mind that he was going to adjourn the House. If he did that of his own volition, then fine, I withdraw it.

Upon the adjournment of the House, the member for Mississauga East put on the greatest outward display of vulgarity I have ever seen in this House, unbecoming to a member who holds two or three portfolios and collects two or three salaries. He not only gave my colleague the upward mobile finger once; he did it about six times. At the adjournment, and after I saw him do that, my teacher's instinct was to go over there and to reprimand him for using that kind of vulgarity in this House. When he saw there were sufficient of his own colleagues mustering around him to give him a defence, he then gave me the finger. Like any fair, judicial parent, I exercised the authority I would have done with my own son.

The next time that happens, I will not only give the member a verbal spanking. I will turn him over my knee. When I am done—

Hon. Mr. Gregory: I suspect the member did not exactly know what he was doing the other night, but I assure him, if he tries it again, it will not be as easy as he thought it was going to be.

The Acting Speaker: I would ask the member to speak to the motion that is before us.

Interjections.

Mr. Riddell: Time is wearing on, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Order.

Mr. Riddell: Then we entered into the various points of privilege on Friday morning. The point I was trying to make at the time was that, as elected members of this Legislature, we are asked to react and respond to and represent nine million people outside of this Legislature to the best of our ability and to dispel any suspicions they might have.

I tried to raise with the Premier (Mr. Davis) the fact that a number of suspicions had been drawn to my attention as to what his involvement might have been with the budget. He got up and launched an attack, which he is quite capable of doing, for whatever reasons I have no idea. All I asked him to do was to say there was absolutely nothing to the suspicions I raised with him, but he did not want to do that. He wanted to launch an attack on me and I am getting a little tired of this.

I ask every member to go back to 1975 and read in Hansard the attack he launched on the House leader of this party after the 1975 election. I ask them to take a look at the attack he made on the former leader of this party. The Premier basks in the glory of wounding his enemies, but when he is the least bit wounded he squeals like a stuck pig.

Mr. Bradley: Oh, no, that's different then.

Mr. Riddell: It is different. When the Premier indicated I would regret what I said, I want the message to be carried to the Premier that I do not threaten easily. I am one who will see he continues to squeal until he feels there is some fairness in this place. If he is prepared to dish it out, he had better be prepared to take it. He is going to have to take it as long as I am a member of this Legislature.

Not only do I think the Treasurer should resign, I am not going to talk too much about the Treasurer, but the man who holds two or three portfolios, the member for Mississauga East who collects two or three salaries, should resign as well for the display of vulgarity he used in this House.

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Speaker, I will not by any means say I am pleased to join this debate. I am not pleased to join it because as I have observed this debate unfold through the last two hours I have been extremely disappointed in the tone and direction it has taken. I suggest it is just shy of a perversion of democracy that it took place. This has been one of the worst wastes of time I have observed in some two years in this House.

If I might make reference to the last speaker's 10 minutes. I believe at the four-minute mark on our new electronic timing device in this place, he finally got on to a subject other than whether he wished to inflict physical damage on the chief government whip. I do not think that six minutes of this House's time was well used by that discussion.

I have listened to some articulate speeches in this House, often by the member for Scarborough West (Mr. R. F. Johnston), about the relevance of this assembly. After the events of last Friday when I went back to my riding for the weekend, I sensed that the debate that took place and the various points of privilege and order in which we indulged at such length did not do anything to remove the feeling from the public's mind that this place is becoming irrelevant.

The average person I spoke to thought it was ridiculous even to suggest the Treasurer should resign over the so-called leak. The people I spoke to also thought that what we were engaged in was just so much parliamentary game-playing and that it had little to do with their everyday lives and their aspirations.

Mr. Martel: Except the Treasurer thought it was okay.

Mr. McClellan: Might open up a job for you.

Mr. Martel: What did he say, Phil?

Mr. McClellan: Come on, you know you need a job.

Mr. Martel: What did the Treasurer say, Phil?

The Acting Speaker: Order.

Mr. Gillies: If the member for Sudbury East (Mr. Martel) does not mind, I listened very attentively to the arguments being developed on his side of the floor and I would appreciate the same courtesy.

When the deputy leader of the New Democratic Party started his speech, he made a quote with which I take some exception. He said what we are engaged in here, and I am paraphrasing, is neither a question of public opinion nor privilege. I suggest it is very much a question of both. If we are concerned about the relevance of this Legislature and the work we do, we have to be concerned about what the people back home are telling us and how they perceive what we are doing. My perception is the people of the province are looking at this current situation in a less than favourable light. If they are even aware this debate is taking place, and I doubt that 90 per cent of them are, I am sure they think it irrelevant.

Mr. Bradley: They never will know without television in the House.

Mr. Gillies: They never will know, I suggest to the member, because the debate is irrelevant and a waste of the time of this assembly.

I can appreciate the sense of embarrassment now being expressed by many of the media outlets in the province over the activities of last Friday. Yet I detect no embarrassment from the members opposite for the way they conducted themselves on Friday morning.

5:40 p.m.

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: Order.

Mr. Gillies: The question is not whether the Treasurer has conducted his duties in the way we would expect him to. As far as I am concerned, the question is whether the tactics exercised by one of the major media of this province were ethical and whether they did the fourth estate any justice at all. The outpouring by various columnists and commentators is considerable.

Interjections.

Mr. Gillies: Let me quote to the members.

The Acting Speaker: Order. I ask the honourable members to stop interrupting other speakers.

Mr. Gillies: I would appreciate just a little consideration over there, if the members do not mind.

If one wishes to draw a distinction between what happened to Mr. Lalonde and what happened in this city last week, one has to look no further than the editorial by the newspaper that was most directly involved in this matter, the Globe and Mail. Let me quote from the editorial in today's Globe and Mail:

"Should Mr. Miller resign? No, he should not. To do so would be to exaggerate grossly his responsibility for last week's leak of information. Mr. Miller was right when he called for Mr. Lalonde's resignation, for the federal finance minister was clearly the author of his own misfortune."

That same editorial, in the Globe and Mail of all places, goes on to say: "Mr. Miller's case is different. It was not through his own negligence, nor that of members of his staff, that the security of Ontario's budget was breached." There is a very clear distinction between the two cases.

The Minister of Community and Social Services said in his usual nonprovocative manner a few minutes ago that he is a little surprised this debate is even taking place. I must admit I am too. I would have thought, after Thursday night, the members of Her Majesty's official opposition really thought they were on to something pretty good and said: "Let's embarrass the heck out of the Treasurer. Let's have fun with this." By Friday morning, surely they could see what was coming out.

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: Order.

Mr. Gillies: The public is very well aware that what we saw was intemperate posturing. What we were seeing was no more than political game-playing and, if they pursued it too far, the thing was going to turn bad on them. It has turned bad on them, because the public is not at all on their side of the issue and neither are responsible observers from the media themselves.

Interjection.

The Acting Speaker: I tell the honourable member on my immediate left that further interjections will cause some serious decisions to be taken by the chair.

Mr. Gillies: Actually, I wish the leader of the third party was not interjecting, because I was just about to say that perhaps the only positive thing to come out of this debate might be the contention by certain members of the House, including the leader of the third party, that the budget process itself should be reviewed. Perhaps the budget process itself is a little outmoded. If it has existed in its current form for so long—

Mr. Martel: That is what the resolution says.

Mr. Gillies: Yes, I am well aware of that. I am getting to that. If it has existed as it has and it is now necessary for somebody to get a story, to get a scoop, to go to the lengths they did last week to try to frustrate the process as it exists, then perhaps change is needed. But that will not arise out of this debate, as members opposite are fully aware. That will not arise out of the rather ridiculous and, I suggest, intemperate posturing that was going on last Friday. That will come out of a careful and considered re-evaluation of the process as it exists and any positive suggestions for reform that might come forward.

I was very disappointed, and I say this most sincerely, to see the direction the discussions in this House took on Friday last. I was very disappointed to see members of the opposition rising and baiting the Treasurer to speak when they knew darned well he had a statement in hand and he would be making it when the time for ministerial statements was reached. I thought that was just a bit much.

The Treasurer rose at the earliest opportunity, under the rules of this House, to make his statement. His statement helped to clear the air on his perception of his responsibility, which is unquestioned. And the Treasurer is standing behind his budget and behind the process, and he assumes personal responsibility for what is going on. There is no question there.

Hon. Mr. Gregory: They didn't want to hear his statement.

Mr. Gillies: The chief government whip is quite correct; perhaps what we were seeing on Friday was a situation not where the members of the House really wanted to be informed as to the government's thoughts but where they really wanted to score some points while they thought the going was good.

The Treasurer should not resign. The budget should be brought down tomorrow at four o'clock. It should not be changed, in my opinion, because of what happened last week. The Treasurer has fulfilled his responsibilities, and the next step in his responsibilities is to bring that budget into the House tomorrow so we can see it through to reality by the usual procedures.

This debate is not a good use of the Legislature's time. Nor is it a good use of the public's time and money that we should indulge in this situation where we have a motion too little, too late to talk about a matter that the members of the opposition already appreciate has been adjudicated by the public will.

Mr. Rae: Mr. Speaker, I want to focus my remarks this afternoon on one basic issue, which is that something happened in the last few days that has caused all of us to reflect on the nature of two things: first, the nature of the budgetary process and the importance of budget secrecy, and second, the question of ministerial responsibility and accountability to this Legislature.

Those are the two issues, and after all the smoke has cleared, after all the personalities have been dealt with and stuff has been thrown back and forth across the floor of this Legislature, those are the issues that are still going to be here once this controversy is over.

The purpose of this resolution, which was drafted on Thursday night, is not to focus the attention of the Legislature on the question of whether the minister should resign or on the nature of all sorts of things going back and forth or on what was or was not left in garbage bags or on what is journalistic ethics and what is not; that is not the question. The questions are: What is budget secrecy and why is it important? What is the nature of ministerial responsibility and why is that important?

I have not heard a convincing statement from anybody who has spoken this afternoon for the government side as to why this matter should not be considered by the standing committee on procedural affairs. They are choosing once again to hide behind their majority, just as I have seen Liberal majorities do in Ottawa time and time again: the same technique, the same tactic in an attempt to deny the rights of all the members of the Legislature the opportunity to devise a set of rules that are appropriate for the last quarter of the 20th century.

It may well be that the rules and regulations with respect to budget secrecy, which have been called into question on several occasions not only in this Legislature but also in other Legislatures and, indeed, in the House of Commons in Ottawa, need to be changed.

What is happening is that those rules are being changed. But are they being changed by a process of consideration and by due process? Are they being changed through consideration by the standing committee on procedural affairs or a similar committee in this Legislature? No. They are being changed by the majority.

In Ottawa the Liberals say: "What Marc Lalonde did was not wrong. It is a problem of the Hamilton station that had the zoom lens. Anyway, it is not really a budget leak, because we can change the numbers." So we have got a totally movable feast: the budget on Thursday is not the budget on Friday and it is not the same budget on Monday; and with the snap of Marc Lalonde's fingers we can get a new budget. So you have never got a problem of a budget leak.

I do not think majorities should be able to get away with that kind of thing. I do not care whether it is a Liberal majority, a Conservative majority or, I would say, a New Democratic Party majority. I do not think this is the kind of thing that majorities should be able to do. We do not make rules in this place and we do not build traditions simply on the basis of whatever a majority decides happens to be right; nor, with great respect for the member for Brantford (Mr. Gillies), do we decide it on the basis of what a Globe and Mail editorial happens to be on one day. What in heaven's name kind of standard is that?

5:50 p.m.

We had the Solicitor General getting up, giving a speech and, instead of telling us what his responsibilities are in this regard, making a 10-minute attack on the Globe and Mail newspaper. Then we had the member from Brantford standing up and saying, "The standard we should follow is the standard found in the editorial pages of the Globe and Mail."

Mr. Rotenberg: You quote editorials.

Mr. Rae: That is not the way this place should be run; nor, I say with respect to the member for Wilson Heights, whose voice would charm the gods whenever we hear it, is it up to us to go back to the public, put our finger up in the air, see who blows on it over the weekend, and come back and say: "The new rule with respect to budget secrecy is that it is not a problem if it is left outside in a green garbage bag and a reporter comes along and picks it up. That is not a leak and is not something for which the minister can be held accountable."

I think the question that has to be dealt with by the standing committee on procedural affairs is very simple and basic. It is a question that must indeed be dealt with. There has to be consideration by the committee as to what happened, and there has to be consideration as to the nature of ministerial responsibility when that happens.

There are ample precedents. They have not been mentioned in this House because we have been so preoccupied with the Dalton example with respect to budget secrecy when he, on the way in to read the budget, gave an account of one measure to a reporter who then went off and the edition came out. There was definitely a leak on his part.

Our focus on that has ignored another problem, the question of what is the accountability or the responsibility of a minister in this place when the bureaucratic process breaks down. The theory we have been operating under—I say "we," and I mean it in terms of all the members of the House who are all permanent students of constitutional law and the constitutional life of this place—is that there is a theory almost of strict liability with respect to budget secrecy.

One can say that theory has been observed more in the breach than in the observance. If one looked at the examples of the number of ministers in majority governments who have resigned because of mistakes made by their civil servants, one would find precious few. I often observe, if one looks at majorities, it takes an awful lot to get ministers to resign.

A great deal can happen. Attorneys General can have meetings with wealthy individuals, whose companies are subject to a criminal investigation, and that apparently is not cause for resignation. I must say I find it a rather bizarre notion that anybody in the middle of a criminal investigation can call up the Attorney General and in the space of 24 hours get an appointment. I find that a little strange.

There are a great many of my constituents to whom that same rule would not apply. There are countless situations I can think of where, again, the civil service or the bureaucracy has broken down, where things have been done and where mistakes have been made for which ministers no longer feel responsible.

The Sir Thomas Dugdale example is the British example in 1954 where a minister did feel that. The Darcy McKeough example is an example in this Legislature where a minister did feel he had to take personal responsibility for what appeared to be a mistake that had been allowed to pass by his own civil service.

Why is the principle of accountability and responsibility important? It is important in a democracy because, unless we can hold someone in this assembly accountable, one has government by no one and nobody. One has a democracy that is incapable of holding anybody responsible for things that are done and things that are not done. One has bureaucrats in a democracy who in a sense are responsible to nobody and accountable to nobody.

In the events that occurred, I am not satisfied. I know it may not be the most popular opinion to express in the world, but I simply have to say it. I am not satisfied when we are simply told it is the responsibility of a printing company with which we have a contract.

I am not satisfied, quite frankly, that we are getting the information we need. I am not satisfied with any piece of evidence put before me that I or a member of our party on the standing committee on procedural affairs cannot have an opportunity to cross-examine. Surely we are entitled to do that.

Surely as a committee we are entitled to ask the individuals involved what happened. While it may not be a matter of privilege, and while it apparently is not a matter the minister or the Premier feels is sufficiently important for the minister to resign, it is, in our view, a matter that has to be considered by some group in this Legislature.

If we do not do that, if we simply say, "You guys all overreacted; this is really a tempest in a teapot; the real question is journalistic ethics," we will be missing the basic point: if we throw out the doctrine of ministerial accountability and responsibility in this Legislature, what are we replacing it with?

If government information can leak out and if we are not being allowed to cross-examine as to exactly how it happened, but have to rely on accounts in a newspaper, what kind of democracy do we have? If we are not allowed to reach for those questions, then our democracy will be all the poorer.

That is why I think this motion deserves to carry. I hope the government will see fit to move a vote today. If it does not, I hope it will see fit to have this matter considered by the committee in order that the question of responsibility and accountability of ministers of the crown can be considered at length by this assembly.

Mr. McGuigan: Mr. Speaker, like other speakers, I am not happy to join in this debate. However, I cannot help but observe that it is not right to attempt to put the focus on the newspapers, as one speaker did, as despicable as all of us might see that rummaging in the garbage.

Is this assembly really telling me that it is trying to defend secrets worth millions of dollars—perhaps billions—being set out on the side of the road and that no one has the responsibility for those secrets being out there? Is it telling me they should remain in that garbage bag until it goes to the landfill site where they are picked up by the winds and blown who knows where?

Is that the kind of responsibility this government thinks is a defensible responsibility? To put it out in the garbage and let it blow in the wind? Perhaps it will walk on to a stockbroker's desk and only then will somebody take responsibility for it. But if it gets to the landfill and is buried, if no one happens to notice it, if no one happens to stumble upon it, then there is no responsibility and this government is safe. Is that the argument the government is trying to make?

This afternoon and over the weekend, when I was talking to farmers, I learned that the sheriff will be going to a farmer's house tomorrow morning to seize his goods. He is going to put the man out on the side of the road. He was asking me what I could do. I talked to the banker. I know this is not a one-sided story—it is not all the fault of the banker—and that there have been mistakes made.

One thing this man was asking for was a writedown in some of his debts. When this farm is sold, there will be a writedown in any event. Anybody can forecast that, because in the present market, with farm values going down, there is going to be a loss and there will be a writedown that day. But the bank says: "No, it is against the principles of the bank to operate that way. Our principle is that one must repay that debt, and if one cannot repay it, he is out on the road." That is the high principle they operate by. But the chief banker of Ontario does not work by high principle.

I am not saying he is a crook or anything of that sort. No one is suggesting that. But his place is to maintain the relevancy that people are talking about. I keep hearing day after day that there is no relevancy to this place. The reason there is no relevancy is that the members do not give it the respect to make it relevant. The members do not make it relevant.

It would have been a simple thing for the Treasurer to come in that night and lay his cards on the table for us. We are all fair-minded people. In the heat of things there is the business of going for the jugular, but we are pretty fair-minded people. If he had come here, he would have got fair treatment. Instead of that, we find all sorts of press releases, all sorts of references to editorials and so on. If we are going to make parliament relevant, it is the people here who are going to do it, and they have to face up to the facts of life.

The Acting Speaker: It being six of the clock, this debate is deemed to be concluded under section 34(b) of the standing orders.

The House adjourned at 6 p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

Tuesday, May 10, 1983

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

ORAL QUESTIONS

FREEDOM OF INFORMATION

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Provincial Secretary for Justice with respect to freedom of information. Since that topic was not considered in the speech from the throne for this year, can the minister tell us whether the government will be introducing in the House during this session a bill on freedom of information and protection of individual privacy?

Mr. Roy: Don't get carried away, now. Just drop it on us gently.

Hon. G. W. Taylor: Run out the clock, Norm; you've got an hour.

Hon. Mr. Sterling: Mr. Speaker, I am getting a lot of advice this afternoon, as you can well appreciate.

Mr. Speaker: I can see that.

Hon. Mr. Sterling: Mr. Speaker, the position of the government is no different from the one I indicated about two or three months ago: that the matter is still under consideration and that it was not included either in this year's speech from the throne or in that of 1982. I am still optimistic, however, that we are progressing on the matter—we still consider it of an important nature—and that some of the commitments that have been made in the past will come to fruition.

Mr. Breithaupt: While the minister is progressing conservatively, it would appear that since it has been six years since the Williams commission was appointed and three years since it reported; since we have spent over $3 million in the acquisition of expertise on this subject, which is second to none anywhere in the world, and since we in the opposition have been able, as the minister is aware from my Bill 6, to put together a freedom of information bill generally based upon the principles of the Williams commission, what is he going to provide us with in so far as a resolution of this subject is concerned? How much more expertise is needed? Why can we not be guaranteed that we will have a bill on this subject, at least for discussion purposes, so that the matter can proceed?

Hon. Mr. Sterling: I agree there has been a great deal of study and expertise put into this matter; I agree there is no need for any further expertise. In fact, I have a draft bill that is being considered by the cabinet at this time, but all the matters relating to the various sections have not been resolved among the cabinet ministers. Until that is resolved, the matter cannot be brought forward to the public.

Mr. Stokes: Mr. Speaker, given the pronouncements made in this House on sessional paper 115, I think in October 1981 by the minister's colleague, the member for Cochrane South (Mr. Pope); given the fact that at that time he stated, by way of a letter from the Premier (Mr. Davis) that was distributed to every ministry of the government, that the previous position of the government was to have openness and a frank exchange, not only with members of the Legislature but with members of the press and public generally; and given the fact that we already have had civil servants fired for following those guidelines; when is the minister going to come in with clear and unequivocal legislation that will, in essence, practise the freedom of information that he talks about so proudly behind closed doors?

Hon. Mr. Sterling: Mr. Speaker, I do believe we have a very open government. In fact, we have taken a number of steps in terms of improving the access to information in our government: Each ministry has a library; we have produced a catalogue of the various documents we have in our government; in December 1981 I produced a document outlining all the personal data banks we have in government.

I must also point out that I receive very few queries from the public relating to the lack of provision of information about government programs. I do receive the odd request for information from an individual about another individual. Of course, those particular documents are sometimes kept confidential for the protection of privacy.

CONSTITUTIONAL ACCORD

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Premier (Mr. Davis) I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs who, I think, represents this province on the Constitution. I would have liked to have asked the question of the Premier, but it is in that particular minister's area.

A few days ago, when the Premier was still a candidate for the federal Tory leadership, he made a speech at the Canadian Club. He was talking about relationships between certain provinces and how he would work for the unity of the country. One of the things he said about Quebec was, "I am certainly prepared to advance a position on behalf of the government of Ontario that will take into account some of the genuine concerns that are felt within our sister province."

Will the minister advise us exactly what the Premier was talking about? What new position is the Premier prepared to take or advance on behalf of this province to accommodate the concerns of Quebec on the Constitution?

2:10 p.m.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, as I recall, I answered that question a couple of weeks ago. As a matter of fact, it was asked the same day the Premier made the speech.

I think I indicated at the time that the Premier was expressing the general opinion of this government, which has always been put forward by the members of this government, that we felt first of all very sorry that the province of Quebec—or, more particularly, the government of Quebec—had not accepted the Canada Act, had not signed the Constitution and did not feel it could embrace the new Constitution of Canada.

I also drew attention to the fact that, notwithstanding the fact it does not embrace the Constitution, those sections of the Constitution that cannot be obliterated from that province by the "notwithstanding" clause apply, of course, in Quebec, although we do know it has already used the "notwithstanding" clause in certain legislation, so that the Constitution of Canada would not govern the legislation Quebec used to put the teachers back to work, as I recall.

But the position of this government has always been that we would be willing to sit down and discuss with Quebec those things that would make the Constitution of Canada more acceptable to it. One of the things it has put forward, if the honourable member wants to talk about specifics, is full fiscal compensation for opting out. That is a position that several times we have privately said to them—and I mentioned this in the House the last time when the speech was made—we would be willing to sit down and discuss with them if that was what they wished to do and if it was one of those things that could help build bridges between this province and Quebec.

The Premier may have had some other things in mind. The member will have to ask him about those.

Mr. Roy: I would have thought that when the Premier was advancing a new position dealing with intergovernmental affairs, his minister in charge would have known what the Premier was talking about.

But let me be more specific. On fiscal compensation for opting out, does the minister agree with the position, for instance, of Joe Clark, who feels they should give some compensation at some time; or the position of Brian Mulroney, another federal leadership candidate, who says they should not?

Which position does the minister take on the right of veto for Quebec? Is he on the side of his friend to his left, the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry), who says Quebec should have limited veto rights in the area of culture and language; or does he agree with the gentleman on his right, the Premier, who slapped him down when he brought forward that position? Can he advise us exactly where he is on this issue?

Hon. Mr. Wells: First of all, I am not going to offer any comments on the positions of the various contenders for the leadership of the federal Progressive Conservative Party. They will have to speak for themselves on those issues, just as we will speak for ourselves here.

I have indicated to the honourable member that this province is willing to sit down and talk to the government of Quebec about any of those things it feels would help bring it into the Constitution of Canada. This means accepting the fact that this is a country and that we want all provinces to stay together and so forth, and not accepting the basic premise they have that they might rather want to stress those things that would allow them to separate.

But if there are things that will help them accept the Constitution, we will sit down and discuss those things. One of those things is full fiscal compensation; there may be others. My friend the Attorney General was putting out another suggestion, a suggestion a little different but perhaps, if you studied them, not really very much different from full fiscal compensation.

The real point is that it is not the specifics we are talking about; it is building the bridges and sitting down and talking about some of those things that will not compromise the positions and principles of this government but will help build better relations with Quebec and bring it into the total constitutional fold.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, since the government is now declaring its willingness to be flexible and to find ways by which Quebec might be persuaded to re-enter the question of constitutional negotiations, could the minister comment on Ontario's readiness with respect to French-language rights in Ontario?

Now that the government has formally declared the right to education in French should be a right for any Franco-Ontarian, is the government also prepared, given its flexibility in relation to Quebec, to accept the implications of section 133 and have it apply to Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, we do not have any statement on that principle today. I just draw the member's attention to the fact that, in keeping with the long-standing record of this government, the Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson) has announced new initiatives which go beyond the constitutional guarantee as far as French-language education is concerned.

The Constitution says "where numbers warrant." This government is moving to guarantee everyone who is a francophone in this province the right to choose if he or she wishes to have education in his or her mother tongue.

Mr. Roy: May I just say to the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs that, when he talks about building bridges between Quebec and Ontario, we agree with that. It would be helpful if the people of Quebec knew exactly what position the government had, rather than a position of the Attorney General one day and that of the Premier the next. It would be important to have a unified voice. The minister understands it is important there should not just be specific positions on specific issues.

I think the question asked by my colleague the member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) has a lot of merit. Very troubling statistics have come out involving the assimilation of francophones outside Quebec, and the latest statistics I think indicate some 30,000 were assimilated during the last 10 years. In view of this situation and in view of the initiative he took while we thought the Premier was still a candidate for the federal Tory leadership when he made a statement—

Interjection.

Mr. Roy: Did I wake up the member? I am sorry. I promise not to do it again.

Mr. Rotenberg: Ask your question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Question, please.

Mr. Roy: I woke up more than one there. I am making progress.

Given that troubling statistic and the minister's latest statement about francophone education, does he not think it is time he stepped in on situations such as Mattawa and Iroquois Falls and spoke to his colleague the Minister of Education, to get her going to put that important principle into practice about French-language education for those areas?

Hon. Mr. Wells: I think I just answered the education question. If the member reads the statement, he will see the progress the minister is making in that area—very significant progress which goes beyond the constitutional guarantee.

In regard to section 133, I might ask my friend a question. I recall that about two years ago when we were in the midst of an election campaign the then leader of his party, Stuart Smith, indicated section 133 was not applied to Ontario in the Constitution of Canada because he asked the Prime Minister of Canada not to do that.

DIESEL EMISSIONS

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour concerning the Canadian Salt Co. Ojibway mine near Windsor. Is the minister aware that since 1963 the miners have complained of exhaust fumes, and is he further aware that in 1977 there was a walkout because of excessive fumes and they were promised a program to improve conditions?

In 1977 a test by the Ministry of Labour showed the benzene-soluble portion of the diesel exhaust particulate to be higher than the United States Occupational Safety and Health Administration standard for coke ovens. In January 1978 the union complained to Peter McCrodan because of the excessive smoke and the absenteeism due to that. In February 1978 the ministry said there was no problem except it had concerns about the high levels of nitrogen oxide.

With all these concerns having been expressed by the miners for some 15 or 18 years now, what is the minister prepared to do to ensure we do not have another cinnering plant situation such as Copper Cliff, where 100 people have now died of cancer, or the Elliot Lake situation where literally dozens of men have died from cancer?

Hon. Mr. Ramsay: Mr. Speaker, I am aware of some of the history the honourable member has brought forward. I must admit I am not completely familiar with all the history, and I am not familiar with where the situation stands at the present time. I will be happy to make myself completely familiar with it and follow up. If any further investigation has to be done, I will make sure it is done.

Mr. Martel: Is the minister aware of a survey taken by the union, not very scientific but none the less taken, which indicated mine workers suffered severe headaches, unusual tiredness, coughing, chest pains, and throat and eye irritation, and, of most concern, in which 78 per cent of those who responded stated they were coughing up black sputum? I want to show the minister a filter after eight hours on surface, this is a filter after three hours underground, and this is a filter after five hours underground. I am sure the minister agrees that is intolerable.

If these filters do not give 100 per cent protection from breathing in fumes and taking in particulate matter, and it is obvious they do not, and if the miners cannot wear the Darth Vader type of hood they are being forced to wear, what measures is the minister prepared to take to ensure the ventilation is such that the miners will not be subjected to breathing in this kind of air?

Hon. Mr. Ramsay: I do not want to be provocative because I know the member is very serious about this matter, as well he should be and well I should be too. I am wondering if this is not a matter that arose at the time of his task force, and if it was, why it is only being brought to my attention now. If he had brought it to me three months ago when he was conducting the task force, I could have already been at work on it.

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Speaker, is the minister aware that in 1977 the Environmental Protection Agency announced that preliminary studies showed the diesel exhaust fumes were mutagenic? Is he concerned about that? If that is the case, is he prepared to take action similar to that taken by the National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health in the United States, which has demanded further studies on the effects of diesel emissions in mines?

Hon. Mr. Ramsay: Mr. Speaker, I believe I answered that question in response to the original question. The answer is yes, I am prepared to look into it and take whatever action is appropriate.

LEAD ASSESSMENTS AT WILCO-CANADA

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, to the Minister of Labour again—and I might suggest to the minister that I obtained those while I was in Windsor last Wednesday—I have a question with respect to Wilco-Canada. Is the minister aware that, in regard to the six charges against the workers for failing to wear proper respirators, these workers were wearing respirators but not the required air-stream helmets? In fact there was only one air-stream helmet available for six workers.

Is the minister further aware that two of his inspectors were in the plant on the days the charges were laid—November 24, November 23 and November 29—yet the inspectors failed to mention to the workers that they were wearing improper respirators. They only found out they were wearing improper respirators on the day on which the charges were laid, which was some five months later.

Will the minister attempt to verify those facts and drop the charges against the workers? Will he also explain to the House why the inspectors did not advise the workers they were wearing improper equipment and why the inspectors did not order proper equipment for them on the spot?

Hon. Mr. Ramsay: Mr. Speaker, a similar question, phrased in a different way, was brought forward by the leader of the third party a number of days ago. While I did not make a commitment to him to do so, I made a commitment to myself to look into the matter he was raising. I have been doing that and I am at present in the process of preparing a letter to the leader of the third party giving details of the charges and the reasons for their being laid. I would hope the letter can be delivered tomorrow or the next day.

Mr. Martel: Is the minister aware that as of today there is still inadequate ventilation, no lead control program is in place, workers still have not received training on the alleged assessment and control program, and the control program was posted in only one of five relevant areas?

Is the minister further aware that, effective Friday, his ministry has ordered that respirators be worn in the whole operation and blood level tests be taken weekly? Maybe while the minister is answering, he could tell me why there has been no action up to this time to make that company comply with required ventilation and, through engineering, eliminate the hazardous conditions?

Hon. Mr. Ramsay: I am not going to stand here and defend that company because I am frankly terribly upset with the manner in which it has addressed the matter of occupational health and safety. It has been far from co-operative. We took the ultimate step some time ago of closing it down for a weekend, hoping that would bring it around.

Since then we have had regular inspections and we have laid charges, which is something the member suggested to me time after time. Charges have been laid; I can assure him more charges, if necessary, will be laid. We are determined we are going to bring that particular operation into compliance.

I must admit I have certainly given consideration to closing down that plant. The only thing that has prevented me from doing so is that there is a terrible shortage of jobs in this province and I just do not want to put anybody out of work. But I assure the member if that situation were not prevalent, we would have taken that dramatic action.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, is the minister then saying he is trading off the issue of worker safety simply to maintain jobs? Is that the tradeoff we are involved in? If it is not, why have charges not been laid vis-à-vis the ventilation problem?

Hon. Mr. Ramsay: Mr. Speaker, that is not what I was attempting to imply at all. I was trying to draw attention to the seriousness of the situation and the fact we are attempting to control it and bring the company into line while making sure those jobs remain. I think that is the responsible thing to do in an economic climate such as we have at the present time.

Mr. Martel: Since the company is about to move to St. Marys with a new name, maybe the minister should lay the charges now for improper ventilation and no assessment, before it gets out and everything is swept under the rug.

Will the minister document in the House all the material on those workers who have been on compensation for the last five years? At the same time, will he intervene personally on behalf of at least two of the workers, Brad Tunks and George Pavao, who are still trying to get benefits or retraining from the Workers' Compensation Board since their blood levels are close to 0.50 milligrams, which still allows them to work there, but they are particularly in need of retraining since one of them has severe nerve damage? Would he intervene personally on behalf of those workers to ensure they get proper retraining?

Hon. Mr. Ramsay: Yes, I would be pleased to do that if the member will provide me with the information he has.

PSYCHIATRIC SERVICES FOR ADOLESCENTS

Mr. Van Horne: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Health. The mother of a 13-year-old boy who died from glue sniffing three days before Christmas told a coroner's jury in London two weeks ago how she tried for months and failed to get help for her son. Dr. Tim Frewen, who treated the boy, said there was no facility in London for such an adolescent. The boy simply slipped through the loopholes.

Is the minister aware of this coroner's inquest and the recommendations that came from it? Is he prepared to comment on the lack of psychiatric service for adolescents in London, Ontario?
2:30 p.m.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, the honourable member will have to refer that question to my colleague the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Drea), who is responsible for psychiatric services for adolescents.

Mr. Van Horne: I am taking a look right now at the press release from Windsor on May 5 and the report of Dr. Heseltine, who has been criss-crossing the province and talking with various medical people and volunteers in the community regarding the proposals he has for psychiatric services within the province. My understanding is that generally this comes under the aegis of the Minister of Health, or at least he is involved in so far as some of these services are offered within a hospital.

Going back to another situation in London last year wherein a parent wrote to the minister about her teenage daughter, who needed some kind of assistance, the understanding came back to those parents that there might be a four- or six-bed unit at Victoria Hospital for the treatment of adolescents. Can the minister or his colleague respond as to why that facility has not yet been placed at Victoria Hospital?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I would like to help the member on those matters, but those matters quite properly, as Dr. Heseltine pointed out, lie at the present time totally within the purview of the Ministry of Community and Social Services. Our ministry, of course, looks after mental health services for adults, whereas all other mental health services, psychiatric services and related services for adolescents, fall to the Minister of Community and Social Services. The member's question should more properly be addressed to him. Since he is absent, I will refer that to him to respond to the member.

SECURITY OF TENURE IN RENTAL UNITS

Mr. Philip: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Attorney General. He will recall that on April 22 he stated he would be meeting with his colleagues the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing (Mr. Bennett) and the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Elgie) and that he would make a statement within 10 days about needed amendments to the Landlord and Tenant Act to protect those tenants who are being evicted as a result of the sale of companies to tenancies in common.

Sixteen days have now passed since he made the statement. Can the Attorney General tell us when that statement will be made in the House? Can we also assure the tenants, particularly the large number of those in the Lakeshore area, that legislation will be forthcoming to protect them from being evicted?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, yes, I will be introducing legislation later today to deal effectively, I hope, with the issue the honourable member has raised.

Mr. Philip: That is welcome news. I would like to send the minister eight eviction notices. Many of them relate to tenants who are being evicted on Allanhurst Drive in Lakeshore. Can we have the assurance of the minister that this legislation will be forthcoming in time to prevent their evictions, most of which are dated July 1?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I think this legislation will protect the security of tenure of those tenants. With the co-operation that I think will be forthcoming from our colleagues across the aisle, this legislation could be passed very quickly.

Mr. Kolyn: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege: I would like to correct the record. Allanhurst Drive is not in the Lakeshore area; it is in Humber.

HYDRO CONTRACTS

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy. In view of the fact that the people of Ontario have the right to terminate mining leases, and given that Denison pays the unbelievable sum of $5,000 a year to mine 28,000 acres of provincial land, for which it now has a $7 billion contract with a $2 billion guaranteed profit, and in view of the fact that Ontario Hydro has also lent $650 million to Steve Roman, which will cost us $1 billion in interest, to give him seed money to start up, with the deadlines facing this province by this contract, by the spring of 1984 the government has to give notice to cancel the contracts or forfeit the $650 million, and we have millions of pounds of uranium which we will not need for decades—

Mr. Speaker: I hope the member does have a question.

Mr. Sargent: I think I will close off right now by asking what is the minister going to do when he faces this deadline next January?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I have not discussed that matter recently with Ontario Hydro, but I have no reason to believe there is any intention to cancel any contract at this particular stage.

As the member knows, there were some projections with respect to what the uranium requirements for the public utility would be over a protracted period of time. We have entered into additional agreements for that supply with other Canadian mines.

If the member is asking me for an update with respect to Ontario Hydro's supply requirements in that regard, I would be glad to get that further information for him.

Mr. Sargent: This is unbelievable. The minister must know he has a five-year lead time to cancel these contracts. It is very serious. It is costing us billions of dollars because we are paying $50 a pound now and the world price is $25 a pound. If the minister does not know about that lead time of January 1984, then we are in trouble.

Mr. Speaker: Is the minister not aware?

Hon. Mr. Welch: With all due respect, that was not the question, whether I knew anything about the lead time. I said I know nothing at the moment that would indicate Ontario Hydro plans to take advantage of any particular provisions with respect to cancellation of the contract. I thought that was the original question.

PRICE RESTRAINT MONITORING

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, may I have the attention of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations? He will know that section 33 of Bill 179, the so-called wage and price restraint bill, says that the Inflation Restraint Board shall monitor the pattern of changes in prices and wages in the private sector generally and report its findings to the minister.

Within the context of that section on prices, has the minister been monitoring the price of birth control pills? Is he aware that the manufacturer's price of the four main brands has increased 52 per cent in the last two years and 19 per cent in the last year with an eight per cent increase in January? Can the minister explain that increase and justify it?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, I may say in a very personal way that with age—and it will eventually happen to the member for Welland-Thorold too—that particular issue does not become as pressing a problem in one's life as it might on other occasions. That is not to say one should not always carefully observe, as the member does, each and every price change that takes place.

However, I do notice that the member consistently fails to point out the broad picture. Had he stood up and said in all honesty, as I suspect he really wanted to but his seat was a little sticky, that from April 1982 to April 1983 the consumer price index rose only 3.2 per cent, we might have had a better understanding of the overall price issue that faces the citizens of this province.

I have not been particularly monitoring the issue with respect to birth control pills or the issue in general, but certainly the member has raised a question which demands a great degree of attention.

Mr. Swart: I am a little disappointed that the minister starts out making fun of this very real problem to women in our society.

The minister must know that the prices of birth control pills, and for that matter other drugs, are published every six months in the Ontario government Ministry of Health formulary. If he has not monitored prices charged to his own government, what monitoring has he done with regard to prices? Is it not true that there is not and was not the slightest sincerity in the prices section of Bill 179? If that is not the case, will the minister tell me one single product whose price he has monitored? Will he table any monitoring report that has been made since Bill 179 was passed five months ago?

2:40 p.m.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Let me assure the member—and I know I speak on behalf of many in this House when I say I do not treat the question and the subject matter he has raised very lightly—it is and has been a very important issue in many of our lives. If he thinks otherwise, then I suspect he may have other problems we do not know about in this House yet.

May I also say that the Inflation Restraint Board will be monitoring by statute the price behaviour in the province during the course of the year. How it will be doing that will be a matter left to its determination. When I receive its report, certainly I will be prepared to consider whether it is a report that can be tabled under the statute.

ASSISTANCE TO FARMERS

Mr. McKessock: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture and Food. Is the minister aware that Ontario Ministry of Agriculture and Food offices are advising applicants to the Ontario farm adjustment assistance program that the ministry will only guarantee a certain portion of their credit and that the bank must guarantee the rest? We understand the minister said at the first of the year that he would only guarantee 50 per cent of the banks' credit portfolios, but now they are saying they only want to guarantee a portion of the individual farmer's line of credit. Is the minister aware of this change in mid-stream?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, there is no change in mid-stream. If the honourable member has a case where he alleges that a specific individual or individuals in the employ of the ministry are misinterpreting or giving out wrong information, I would like to know about it. On any given day in our 53 offices we are dealing with literally hundreds, if not thousands, of people. It is entirely possible that somebody has misinterpreted that policy, and I would like to know about it so we can correct it.

Mr. McKessock: I take it the minister is saying he is guaranteeing 100 per cent of the individual farmer's line of credit?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: What I am saying is that we are dealing with each individual case. Where we agree to approve it, that is where the provincial decision committee approves the case, in effect it is assuming it is 100 per cent. But in looking at the total portfolios, we do insist on sharing the total overall risk with the participating lenders.

Mr. McKessock: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Was that not a supplementary?

Mr. McKessock: I put an explanatory question and the minister answered it, but—

Mr. Speaker: Having regard for the afternoon and the day it is, and my generous and forgiving nature, I will recognize the member for Grey.

Mr. McKessock: I brought an individual case to the minister's attention yesterday. This farmer is coming in off the tractor and calling me every other hour. This morning I gave him the minister's number so he can call him on the off hours. I want to let the minister know how important this is. The farmer told me this morning it cost him $36 a ton more to buy fertilizer on time. Until he gets this approved credit at the bank, the minister is adding to the inefficiency of farm operations instead of to the efficiency.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I do not intend to use the name of the individual, but I am happy to give the member the facts as I understand them. They have been given to me by my staff. The individual in question is dealing with the bank in Mount Forest. In 1982, $42,000 was covered under option B of the farm adjustment assistance program; option C, which was a guarantee of operating credit, was for $56,000. In 1983 the individual applied for assistance under option B, that is, the interest rate reduction grant, on $22,000, and applied for a guarantee of a line of operating credit of $260,000. This increase was requested, I am told, and I think the member confirmed this when he spoke to me about the case on Friday, to get back into cattle. The provincial decision committee initially rejected the application for 1983 on the basis that it was a nonviable operation.

Since then—

Mr. McKessock: Nonviable because he took their advice.

Mr. Speaker: Never mind the interjection.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: One of the strengths of this program is that the decision process is kept apart from political processes. They are good people, using good judgement and making individual judgements on the information placed before them by the applicants. When this individual originally applied, their assessment was it was not viable and, therefore, was something into which they should not risk putting almost a quarter of a million in taxpayers' dollars.

Since then the individual reapplied, and the provincial decision committee, after the reaplication, offered the individual option B at $22,000 as requested; option C at $160,000; $60,000 as carryover plus half the additional amount he was requesting. This offer was rejected by the bank because I take it he was still looking for a further $100,000 beyond that.

In effect, the provincial decision committee was saying, "We feel, based on what we know of this farm operation, that we can go to guaranteeing $100,000 of operating credit". I take it the individual is saying: "That is fine, but I want $200,000. I want the bank to loan me the balance". The bank has said no.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, I want to get back to the minister's answer to the first question. If I heard him right, he said there was no limitation on the guarantee. Is it not true that when the number of second applications goes past a certain percentage of a bank's portfolio, the government then guarantees only 50 per cent of that second loan? Is that not the case? Has there not been a change from last year when there was a guarantee of the whole loan?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, last year the total risk was on the government. The member will recall that he stood in his place here and spoke at various meetings around the country, saying, "This is a program for the lenders, something that will just help the lenders." Surely the member would support the position of the government, that in extending the program for one last year, the risk should be shared by the lenders, all of whom he has no use for anyway, whether they are credit unions, trust companies or banks.

Mr. Swart: You have cut back on the guarantee.

Mr. McClellan: Sure they have. The minister should just say "yes" and sit down.

Mr. Swart: He would be a good Premier.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Yes, I did. The member will surely agree the risk should be shared between the lenders and the government, and that is what we are doing.

ALLOCATION OF HOUSING UNITS

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. Could the minister explain why he passed the buck back to the mayors of Toronto and Ottawa when he met with them earlier this week, when they requested the province to go to bat on behalf of a fair share for those two cities of the newly announced addition to social housing prepared or proposed by the federal government in its recent budget? Why was Ontario not prepared to go to bat through this minister on behalf of people who need housing in our major cities?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, the member for Ottawa Centre is still on the path of trying to be critical without even trying to observe what was the actual discussion that took place.

I met yesterday afternoon with the mayor of Ottawa and the mayor of Toronto in relation to how the federal government might allocate the additional 2,500 units that were given to the minister responsible for housing for Canada to give to the provinces or to whomever under the nonprofit program. The day following the federal budget I was in touch with Mr. LeBlanc. I have talked with him, more by accident, at the Ottawa airport as to where the allocation was going and what amount of it might come for municipal nonprofit in Ontario.

In addition to that, I have written letters to Mr. LeBlanc. My staff has been to Ottawa to meet with Canada Mortgage and Housing Corp. and Mr. LeBlanc. We talked with Mr. LeBlanc's office again this week and we have not been given any indication from that minister at the federal level as to when he might decide to allocate the additional 2,500 units and what number will come to Ontario.

I have clearly indicated I think we should get our historical percentage, which is roughly 600 of those units. He has not even indicated what number of units will be put into the municipal nonprofit versus the private nonprofit versus the co-ops. So the suggestion of the member for Ottawa Centre that this minister and this government have not been very forceful in bringing our position to Mr. LeBlanc, the minister reporting for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corp., is absolutely wrong.

2:50 p.m.

I have pursued the position at every turn possible, which I indicated to the mayor of Toronto and the mayor of Ottawa. I asked for their assistance, as I have of the members on the opposite side of the House representing the Liberal caucus, to suggest to the federal Liberal members that one of the most important places for the allocation of the additional 2,500 units would be in the municipal nonprofit sector. I have asked them to do that so that co-operatively we might succeed.

Mr. Cassidy: The minister should perhaps be aware of the fact that he left two very frustrated mayors after the discussion and that that was far from the impression they had themselves.

Could the minister explain how the municipal authorities in Ottawa or in Toronto should be expected to cope when, to take Ottawa in particular—the minister should know the situation there very well—the vacancy rate is two tenths of one per cent? There are more than 2,000 people on waiting lists for various kinds of social housing in Ottawa and 75 motel units are occupied because those people cannot get any other housing except the kind of emergency housing which is being provided by the regional municipality.

If that is all that is going to come from Ottawa, then why is the minister of housing not prepared to step in to ensure some answers to the housing crisis we are experiencing in major cities?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: It is interesting that the member should go off on a tangent once again. He will recall that two years ago we had the Ontario rental construction loan program which his party found reasons to criticize. But it brought 15,000 units on the marketplace of Ontario through the singular initiatives of this government; there were no others participating. This government went alone under the rental construction loan program and was able to succeed not only in bringing units on stream but in creating employment in the construction industry.

Last year the federal government, if the member will recall, came along with the Canada rental supply program. Mr. Cosgrove, the minister reporting for CMHC during that time, said he would develop 10,000 units in this province. He has not succeeded, nor has the minister following him succeeded. But they asked this province very clearly and very distinctly to stay out of the rental construction loan business; they were going to go it alone.

We went to the renter-buy program—does the member recall it?—which produced about 16,000 purchasers of homes in this province. Over half of them came from rental accommodations into the market of purchasing a home. We have been trying to contribute to the economy of Ontario and to resolve some of the shortcomings in the supply of rental accommodation in the various price ranges.

The mayors might be frustrated. That was a condition they had before ever they came to see me yesterday; I can assure the member of that. I did not create that problem. They have known what the situation was. I have indicated clearly to them what the problems happen to be. This government, I believe, has said time and again—and I trust that maybe this afternoon we might hear something further; I do not know—that we should be looking for a co-operative program between the federal and provincial governments to try to deliver more rental units in this market as well as in the rest of Canada. One government should not be trying to do it alone; it is not possible.

We have clearly suggested we are prepared to participate in a very productive program with the federal government to try to bring more rental units into the marketplace this year and next year. There could be other programs, but we will wait and see.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, in spite of the minister's railing at and criticism of the federal government and trying to pass the buck, does he not realize he has a credibility problem when he talks about housing? He has made comments in the past that he does not believe the low vacancy rate that currently exists in Ottawa. In some of his musings in the past he has even wondered whether the government or his ministry should be involved in housing at all. How does he expect to have any credibility with those kinds of statements?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, first, if the member for Ottawa East wants to support his last statement, I would be delighted to see it because I do not recall ever saying that this government did not have a responsibility. I have said exactly the opposite.

In 16 years the government of this province, along with CMHC, has put 116,000 units into the marketplace for the less fortunate people, both seniors and families. The cost this year to the taxpayers of Ontario and Canada has been $309 million. That is the subsidy this year. The member should not say that this government has never honoured its social commitments for the provision of housing. With 116,000 units, it is a great deal more than virtually any other government on this continent has been able to do.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, I have criticized—

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: I think that was a very complete answer.

SALFORD LANDFILL SITE

Mr. Elston: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Attorney General. As he knows, I asked a question on May 5 concerning the proposed landfill site at Salford and the appeal that is being taken to cabinet. If he has reviewed that answer, I am sure he will find that the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Norton) refused to comment on the matter because of cabinet secrecy.

I want to point out to the Attorney General that in this case the Ministry of the Environment is also a party to that appeal. I wonder whether he does not feel, under the circumstances and in fairness to all the other parties who are participating in that appeal and who participated at the hearing level, that the position of the Minister of the Environment ought to be made known to all the other people who are putting information in front of the cabinet before that decision is made.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, that is a question that should be directed to the Minister of the Environment. At this point, I do not know what information may or may not have been made available to the other parties by that ministry. That might be a question the member for Huron-Bruce might direct to the appropriate minister.

Mr. Elston: I wonder whether the Attorney General, as the chief law officer of the province, wants to comment on whether there is a clear conflict of interest in having any input from the Minister of the Environment when that appeal goes in front of cabinet without equal opportunity for presentations by the members of the public and others who participated in the hearing concerning the Salford landfill matter.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Obviously the information the cabinet would have from the Ministry of the Environment would be very important and relevant information. I would expect that in the normal course of events the other parties would have a pretty good understanding of what the nature of that information is.

Mr. Elston: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: In view of the fact that the Minister of the Environment is now coming into the House and since the Attorney General suggested the first question be referred to him, I wonder whether he might let the Minister of the Environment answer.

Mr. Speaker: In all fairness, because of the time, it would be better to proceed to the next question.

WORKERS' COMPENSATION BOARD

Mr. Di Santo: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a question of the Minister of Labour. Is the minister aware that as a result of a hiring freeze at the Workers' Compensation Board, rehabilitation counsellors now are requested to deal with up to 130 cases, and that because of that situation there are two obvious negative consequences? One is that injured workers rightly feel shafted by the board because of the mockery that is called the rehabilitation department. The other is that rehabilitation counsellors are overburdened to the point where half a dozen of them have had nervous breakdowns in recent months.

Is the minister aware of this situation and is he prepared to do something at this point, given the serious situation?

Hon. Mr. Ramsay: Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the excellent work of the counsellors at the Workers' Compensation Board, and I know they are working with heavy case loads. As far as case loads are concerned, that is the situation in every board and commission related to this government in these days of restraint. I would like to say that they would be able to hire additional people, but as I understand the situation they have a policy there at present whereby they can replace employees who leave but they cannot add to their total complement.

Mr. Di Santo: I am quite shocked by the fact that the minister thinks the counsellors should have nervous breakdowns to serve an increased number of injured workers.

Does the minister not realize the morale of the employees at the board is low not only because of the incredible amount of work they have but also because of the practices of the Workers' Compensation Board? Is he aware that in many departments, especially the assessment department, the employees are required not to socialize, to the point where they cannot even make personal phone calls and they cannot even go to the washroom without asking permission of their superiors.

In fact, a memo of April 26 says: "Effective immediately, members of this team must inform me prior to leaving the area. Socializing must be kept to a minimum and I will stop people from talking to you if they come from another department."

3 p.m.

Is he aware that the whole floor now is partitioned to the point where it looks like a laager rather than a healthy place where people have to work? Will the minister inquire and have that practice stopped immediately?

Mr. Speaker: Could you just inquire and see if the practice can be stopped?

Hon. Mr. Ramsay: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: There was a series of questions, and I would suggest that you answer the last one.

Mr. Di Santo: It is a multiple question.

Interjections.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege: I do not think it is within the right of the Speaker to interpret the question. The member has the ability to put his own questions and you should not make assumptions.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The member for Grey-Bruce, please resume your seat. The Minister of Labour, answer the last question, please.

Hon. Mr. Ramsay: Maybe I can answer all three at one time, Mr. Speaker, if that is permissible. I think it would be wise for the honourable member, myself and Mr. Kerr, the assistant general manager of the WCB, who is attending all the meetings of the resources development committee at the present time, to get together at one of these meetings at the very earliest opportunity and discuss the very real problem that the member has brought to our attention. I think it deserves attention and I think that is the best way we can handle it.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, the minister must recognize that in today's economy with the tremendous increase in unemployment—I point simply to the youth unemployment figure of 17.1 per cent across this province—to say there will be absolutely no expansion, merely the replacement of rehabilitation counsellors, does not recognize the very real problems placed on injured workers who are forced to go out and compete in the job market with able-bodied people who cannot get a job.

It would seem to me that in the minister's response he should recognize that it is critical for the workers not only that we expand the rehabilitation component, but also, with respect to cost effectiveness, to expand at the rehabilitation end is the most cost effective way of delivering a service not only to the workers but also to the province and the people of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Ramsay: Mr. Speaker, I would apologize to the member for Hamilton Centre and to the others who may have misconstrued my answer. Perhaps I was not clear in what I was attempting to say.

The total complement, as I understand it, is frozen. However, that certainly allows for the redistribution of staff.

Mr. Di Santo: It is not so. You know that.

Hon. Mr. Ramsay: It is my understanding that an additional counsellor—and I will check this before our meeting—was added to the complement very recently.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege: I have been in this House a long time—20 years—and I think question period is becoming a farce because of the way you view your part with the government here.

For instance, to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing (Mr. Bennett) you say, "It was a good answer." You have never said to any of us, "It was a good question."

Interjections.

Mr. Sargent: Just a moment, I am not through yet.

Mr. Speaker: Go ahead.

Mr. Sargent: You can ask anybody in the opposition. We feel very much that you favour the government all the time in your remarks. I think it is time you were totally impartial. I really mean that.

Mr. Speaker: Those are interesting comments. I would point out to the member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Sargent), as I pointed out to all other honourable members a few weeks ago, I ask for their co-operation in sharing the question period so that back-benchers will be able to participate more fully than they have in the past.

I was not complimenting the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing particularly. That was my way of telling him that his time was used up. I am taking very close note of the time spent by those people asking questions and those people answering questions. I will continue to do so because that happens to be one of my responsibilities.

PETITIONS

KICKBOXING AND FULL-CONTACT KARATE

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, I have further petitions to present to the House in response to the statement to ban events of kickboxing and full-contact karate made by the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Elgie) on February 15. In the same form as the earlier presentations, these petitions add a further 3,113 names to the previous total of 8,704, making a grand total of 11,817 signatories interested in this matter.

ANNUAL REPORT, MINISTRY OF NATURAL RESOURCES

Mr. J. A. Reed: Mr. Speaker, under standing order 33(b), we, the undersigned, petition that the annual report of the Ministry of Natural Resources for the year ending March 31, 1982, be referred to the standing committee on resources development.

EDUCATION TAXES

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by the presidents of the seven Catholic high schools in Hamilton, representing approximately 7,000 students, advising the Ontario government of the reasonableness of their request that separate school supporters be allowed to designate all of their education tax, elementary and secondary, for the support of Catholic elementary and secondary schools.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

LANDLORD AND TENANT AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. McMurtry moved, seconded by Hon. Mr. Wells, first reading of Bill 32, An Act to amend the Landlord and Tenant Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, a number of rental apartment building owners have and are utilizing complicated conveyancing schemes that have the effect of avoiding condominium conversion controls. The bill I am introducing today deals with the most urgent problems raised by these new conveyancing techniques. It is intended to protect the tenants of buildings where these conveyancing schemes have been used. In particular, my colleagues the member for Lakeshore (Mr. Kolyn), the member for Oriole (Mr. Williams) and the member for Humber (Mr. Kells) have brought a number of these situations to my personal attention.

The conveyancing schemes that are of concern fall into two general categories. In the first, the building is conveyed to a corporation. Shares in the corporation are sold to the public and a shareholders' agreement between the shareholders grants to each shareholder the right to occupy a specific unit in the building. The second scheme involves selling the building to a group of individuals as tenants in common with co-ownership agreements between the co-owners granting each co-owner a right to occupy a specific unit in the building. In each case the purchasers acquire their claim to a specific unit through an occupancy agreement with their fellow purchasers.

Until recently it had been believed that existing tenants were protected from eviction by persons who had purchased interest in buildings by way of these new conveyancing schemes. However, in March of this year the Divisional Court ruled that a purchaser could evict a tenant on the ground that the purchaser desired the premises for his or her own use.

3:10 p.m.

The bill I am introducing today is intended to restore the protection that tenants were thought to have had before the recent Divisional Court decision. It provides that where the landlord is seeking a rental unit for the purpose of his own use, and his claim is based on an occupancy agreement that purports to entitle him to reside in the unit, the judge hearing the application must refuse the eviction order. The only exceptions permitted by the bill relate to very small buildings and to situations where the landlord or his immediate family previously occupied the unit.

I want to emphasize that this bill will apply to all court hearings that take place after the bill is enacted, including those that relate to notices of termination given before that day. Therefore, tenants of buildings that have been subject to these complicated conveyancing schemes and who have already received notices of termination will be protected once this legislation is passed.

I hope all members of this House will assist in giving the bill early approval.

GOOD SAMARITAN ACT

Mr. Haggerty moved, seconded by Mr. Kerrio, first reading of Bill 33, An Act to relieve Persons from Liability in respect to Voluntary Emergency Medical and First Aid Services.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Haggerty: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the bill is to relieve persons from liability in respect to voluntary emergency first aid assistance or medical services rendered at or near the scene of an accident or other sudden emergency.

EXPLANATORY STATEMENTS

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order: The Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) in introducing his bill has, as has been customary in the past, given us a fairly lengthy description of the contents. It seems to me that during the last revision of rules it was decided that ministers having an explanatory statement for a bill should give it under statements so that when the bill is introduced the private members of the House are really aware of its contents.

I think they are slipping away from that procedure considerably. It would be too bad if the opposition did not have knowledge of the contents of a ministerial bill being introduced, in case we wanted to oppose it on first reading.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

House in committee of the whole.

TORONTO FUTURES EXCHANGE ACT

Resuming the adjourned consideration of Bill 7, An Act to incorporate the Toronto Futures Exchange.

On section 13:

Mr. Chairman: If memory serves me correctly, the member for Carleton (Mr. Mitchell) was dealing with the proposed amendment to section 13. Had you read the amendment?

Mr. Mitchell: The amendment has been introduced, Mr. Chairman. I have some background information on this amendment which should be back here shortly and a copy will be provided to each of the opposition critics. Basically, as members will recall, this motion allows the Toronto Futures Exchange, along with the Toronto Stock Exchange, to enter into certain agreements with the builders of a building. This amendment will allow them to hold purchased land.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Chairman, I do not hear the minister's assistant saying he is going to make the changes that were proposed on this side, despite the fact that, as I said in the House a few nights ago prior to the excitement over the budget leak, the amendment would permit the futures exchange to acquire the farm belonging to the member for Kent-Elgin (Mr. McGuigan) or some other completely irrelevant piece of property.

The minister's assistant has told me privately that the purpose is to allow the futures exchange to participate in holding certain properties in the new stock exchange headquarters which might be required for future expansion. I see nothing wrong with that. It is perfectly reasonable that they might have to acquire a part of that building and then rent it out for a few years until such time as they need to expand. I would not think anybody in this House would object to that except in so far as we might object to the concept of trading in futures.

What really troubles me, since the assistant says in effect that the explanatory material will justify doing what is being done here, is that yesterday the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) said in this House that when it comes to a budget the government stood or fell on the budget and that the only role of the Legislature was to make minor amendments to bills. In other words, we are to serve the function of proofreaders, except we are very high-priced proofreaders, because it costs many thousands of dollars for each hour that this Legislature is in session.

Now the parliamentary assistant, presumably acting under the instruction of either the civil servants or his minister, is saying that even to make helpful suggestions and proposals to improve the bill is not going to be accepted but that, right or wrong, the draftsmen who did this have to be protected; the situation as it is proposed has to be accepted, because that is the way his internal committee approved it and that is the way it came forward originally.

For goodness' sake, we might as well pack this place up and meet one day a year. A guillotine could be put on and the government could have all the bills it wanted. We can simply pass bills using the guillotine at the end of the day by moving the previous question, if that is the attitude the government intends to take.

The explanation was not made available to me. I will read it while the assistant comments, or perhaps he would like to comment on it; but in a general way all of us in this House should be concerned about the trivial way in which the House appears to be taken.

Mr. Mitchell: Mr. Chairman, we had some copies being made but, unfortunately, only one copy has been brought back. I am attempting to get another copy for the critic for the Liberal Party. I hope to have that shortly and I can read it into the record.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Chairman, certainly the member for Carleton may proceed, and I will try to catch up when I get my copy. We will not delay the House for that.

Mr. Cassidy: Would the minister's assistant like to have this copy to read into the record?

Mr. Laughren: I don't know what it's coming to around here.

Mr. Chairman: Would someone tell me what we are doing?

Mr. Mitchell: Mr. Chairman, I was asked by the member for Ottawa Centre whether we would consider putting an amendment to our original amendment, which is number 13. I did raise the issue, not only with the people representing the Toronto Stock Exchange but also with our own legal counsel, and I am quite comfortable that the wording in amendment 13 is that which is required.

This amendment gives the Toronto Futures Exchange powers to hold land, which are the same as the powers which a normal business corporation has but which go beyond the land holding powers ordinarily held by a nonprofit corporation. The powers proposed to be given to the Toronto Futures Exchange are identical to the powers now held by the Toronto Stock Exchange. The reason for providing these expanded powers arises solely from the development of the Exchange Tower, which is part of a development in Toronto.

The existence of the Toronto Futures Exchange results from a specific requirement of the Ontario Securities Commission. When a futures market was first proposed in Ontario it was put forward by the Toronto Stock Exchange, which contemplated commodity futures trading as a part of the range of products available on the Toronto Stock Exchange.

However, the Ontario Securities Commission ordered that a new and separate exchange be created under the sponsorship of the TSE for trading in commodities, commodity futures contracts, options on commodities and commodity futures options. Accordingly, Bill 7 was prepared and put forward by the Toronto Stock Exchange, with the concurrence of the Ontario Securities Commission, as a method of effecting this requirement.

When the Toronto Stock Exchange took the decision to move to new facilities, it was made on the principle that it must continue to be located in the downtown core of Toronto and it must continue to hold a direct equity investment in land in the downtown Toronto core. To achieve those results, the arrangements made by the Toronto Stock Exchange with Olympia and York include an equity ownership interest in the development which constitutes the Exchange Tower.

That development includes the new trading floor to be used by both the Toronto Futures Exchange and the Toronto Stock Exchange, a 32-storey office tower in which the Toronto Futures Exchange will, and the Toronto Stock Exchange now does, occupy office space, and including facilities for the Canadian Depository for Securities Ltd. and a commercial complex and parking facility under the office tower and trading floor.

The arrangement with Olympia and York permits the Toronto Stock Exchange and the Toronto Futures Exchange to expand the space occupied by them in this new office tower. The expanded land holding power is necessary to permit the Toronto Futures Exchange, as it was necessary to permit the Toronto Stock Exchange, to take an equity interest in this project and thereby to accomplish the TSE's objective of retaining an equity interest in land in downtown Toronto.

It was neither appropriate nor sensible to attempt to subdivide the interests of the TSE and the TFE from those of Olympia and York in this project or to attempt to divide the interests of the Toronto Futures Exchange from those of the TSE. They are inextricably linked together in a new development which provides more space than they need for their own use or occupation but in which the TSE now has an equity interest that enables it to achieve its long-term goals.

The TSE's interest in the Exchange Tower is permitted by section 12 of the Toronto Stock Exchange Act and the proposed provision of Bill 7 would enable the Toronto Futures Exchange to hold such an equity interest as well. I am therefore satisfied that this amendment is in order.

Mr. Cassidy: I accept that the intricacies of holding a portion of the Exchange Tower are complicated and therefore wording this broad might be required, provided it was limited to the Exchange Tower. Would the parliamentary assistant agree to stand this down so that we may make it refer specifically to the Exchange Tower?

It seems to me we are creating a nonprofit corporation here. It will not be under the direct regulation or control of this Legislature or the government except in so far as legislation could come through the Legislature again. Yet we are creating a body that would technically have the power to invest in property anywhere in Ontario. They could do so in the riding of my friend the member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick), my friend the member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Laughren) or my friend the member for Oakwood (Mr. Grande). They could even do it in Ottawa Centre. Surely that is not what was intended.

I was just beginning to write out the amendment when the minister sat down. The words I would add would further amend the amendment by adding the words, "provided that such land or interest therein is located in connection with the Exchange Tower in downtown Toronto." If the minister's assistants have some other modification to that, then let us put that in. I do not think that is unreasonable, because I do not see why people should come in here and get all kinds of powers they ostensibly do not want and why we should give people powers unless we intend to do so.

Mr. Mitchell: Would the member for Ottawa Centre be prepared to send me a copy of his proposed amendment so I can look at it very quickly? My immediate reaction is that I am not prepared to stand it down, but if he will send me a copy of the amendment we might be able to resolve what appears to be an impasse.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Chairman, it might be preferable to stand section 13 down and complete the rest of the bill.

Mr. Mitchell: I will go with the next amendment until such time as I have a copy.

Mr. Chairman: Then we will deal with section 14 and we will stand section 13 down.

On section 14:

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Mitchell moves that section 14 of the bill be amended by inserting, after "131" in the first line, "275."

Mr. Mitchell: Mr. Chairman, this amendment is basically housekeeping and coincides with the broadened land holding powers we hope will be included in section 13. It adds a reference to section 275 of the Corporations Act, the land holding provision.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Chairman, the point we are raising is we will come back when we look at the stood-down clause and we will not discuss the amendment proposed here. We will simply let it go through.

Section 14, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 15 and 16, inclusive, agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Do we just sit quietly and wait for the member for Carleton?

On section 13:

Mr. Mitchell: Unfortunately, my understanding from legal counsel is if we do what is suggested in the amendment proposed by the NDP, then we must enter into legal descriptions of the building in question. I am not able to do that at this time so I must honestly say that at this point I cannot entertain the amendment.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Chairman, there are four other bills to be done. I am sure the matter could be sorted out in half an hour. This was raised for the attention of the minister or his assistant last Thursday and there has been ample time to look at the issue.

The issue is clearly stated in the sense that the objection was not to a certain broadening of powers, but to the right of the futures exchange to hold property anywhere in Ontario, which is clearly unrelated to its purpose. I suggest we simply stand down this clause while it is fixed up by the minister's people. There are about three or four other bills. Perhaps we can get on with them and come back to this particular clause over which we have had some disagreement.

Mr. Chairman: That is a good and honourable suggestion, but—

Mr. Mitchell: Mr. Chairman, we may be able to resolve this quickly if the House will concur in allowing me to move down to the opposite end of the bench, down near the front. Hopefully, I may be able to resolve this quickly.

Mr. Chairman: Is that acceptable? Agreed.

Mr. Mitchell: If it meets with the concurrence of the critic for the third party and if he is prepared in regard to his amendment—and I am going to have to confirm the actual wording—to say the land holdings are restricted to Metro Toronto, we would be prepared to accept something in that vein.

Mr. Cassidy: In the spirit of compromise, I would be prepared to accept that and I hope this kind of thing could be more narrowly defined next time. I appreciate that is perhaps a compromise. It still allows them to own property in North York, but that is perhaps a bit more appropriate than the member for Kent-Elgin's riding.

Mr. Mitchell: My understanding would be that the wording added, the amendment that is proposed by the New Democratic Party critic, would be the words following, "provided that such land or interest therein is located in Metropolitan Toronto."

Mr. Cassidy: I am sure that is exactly what I said, whether it is the amendment of the minister's assistant or not.

Mr. Mitchell: "In the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto."

Mr. Cassidy: We will be prepared to accept that.

Mr. Breithaupt: If we have to do this, it might be helpful if, after the word "therein," at least in the third line of the printed amendment, we had the phrase "in the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto."

Mr. Mitchell: That is agreeable.

3:30 p.m.

Mr. Chairman: That seems an agreeable approach. We have all heard the amendment to the amendment. I do not have a copy in front of me but I think in the spirit of getting on with it we should do so.

Mr. McGuigan: I want to ask a question.

Mr. Cassidy: This is all for your sake.

Mr. McGuigan: This may be self-evident, but does this in any way stop the exchange from renting quarters in any other locality?

Mr. Mitchell: It does not.

Mr. Chairman: We have all heard the amendment to the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House that it carry?

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Is it the pleasure of the House that the the amendment carry?

Motion agreed to.

Section 13, as amended, agreed to.

Section 17 agreed to.

Bill 7, as amended, reported.

On motion by Hon. Miss Stephenson, the committee of the whole House reported one bill with certain amendments.

MOTOR VEHICLE DEALERS AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I believe this bill is self-explanatory. What it basically does is create a compensation fund which does away with the old method of bonding. If I can use an example, having been in the municipal field, many municipalities have run into problems over the past number of years with this whole issue of bonding because of the legal problems one has to go into. To get a resolution of that—

Mr. Speaker: Before you get on with the explanation, can you move second reading of the bill?

Mr. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I apologize.

Mr. Mitchell, on behalf of Hon. Mr. Elgie, moved second reading of Bill 3, An Act to amend the Motor Vehicle Dealers Act.

Mr. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, that showed my eagerness to get some of these done.

I think the critics for the opposition party and the third party are aware that we are talking of a registration fee of probably $150 to be paid by each dealer, which should be no problem and which is, as far as I am aware, no problem because the current cost to them for a bond for a one-year period is somewhere in the vicinity of $75 to $100. I suggest this bill will be a better way of protection for the public.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, in principle we support this kind of legislation, because a compensation fund will deal more fairly with all the persons in the business by having all of them participate under one program.

I recognize that the cost of a one-year bond, as the parliamentary assistant has said, may range from $75 to $100. I would appreciate hearing from the parliamentary assistant as to whether this $150 initial cost is going to be meant to last for some time to get things started and whether we will simply have to take it as it comes over the next several years to see what annual assessments might be.

It could be the parliamentary assistant has some information now as to the variety of claims being made against the insurance bonding that the various individual dealers now have. The experience of the insurance companies in these matters will give us some guide as to what the expected cost may well be in the future.

He may not have that information, I do not know, but certainly that is the sort of thing that should be made available to us as we go into a new kind of program.

As we look at the development of the travel agents' circumstances, we have seen on a number of occasions that there has been a clear benefit to many members of the public by having a program in place where a chartered flight did not materialize or, indeed, where a certain hotel to which a group of guests were travelling in the Caribbean, or wherever it might be, might have had a problem.

So we see this kind of program as one that is developing the approach of effective responsibility among the members of a certain group rather than having them provide individual insurance opportunities and have their own coverages.

We, as I say, are supportive of the principle of this fund. We are supportive of the ideas involved that will ensure a responsibility among those dealing with motor vehicles within the province and will fairly share the burden of cost among all those in the business. We certainly will support the bill.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I was not sure whether the parliamentary assistant sought to intervene or was trying to close out the debate. The basic principle here, given that it was 1965 when the present arrangement was established, is one that we are prepared to support.

I do have some comments with respect to a way by which we believe this bill should be broadened, but before making those comments

I would like to ask whether the parliamentary assistant could provide a bit more information with respect to the working of this fund in its proposed way.

In particular, what claims from the public would be accepted? How will the fund be administered? I do not think that has been spelled out in the bill. To whom would claims actually be submitted? What grounds of appeal or redress would there be if a motor vehicle purchaser felt he was being inadequately or unfairly dealt with in respect of the compensation he thinks he should be getting from the compensation fund that is being established in this act?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Cousens): That will be responded to in the final statement because we are not in committee. If the member has any further comments on the bill he may make them now.

Mr. Cassidy: I will talk a bit further then, Mr. Chairman—

The Acting Speaker: I am Mr. Speaker at this point. We are not in committee of the whole House.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, you will have to appreciate that I am getting back into the habit of handling bills. It has been some time.

What I would like to say is this. It seems to me that if the minister who is in charge now is not one of those who believes that government has no role in the marketplace at all, if anything he is perhaps at odds with some of his colleagues in feeling that from time to time government does have a role in the marketplace, and given that the automobile is the second most important consumer purchase that most people make—the house being the most important, and many people these days may not have a chance to afford to buy a home in Ontario—it seems to me there is need for the kind of legislation that has been adopted in a number of other jurisdictions in North America to protect purchasers of cars that turn out to be lemons.

3:40 p.m.

The parliamentary assistant is familiar with the kind of situation that happens. Somebody buys a car and the darned thing starts to rust irrevocably after a month or two; or it goes back and back and back to the makers, and the repairs never get made. Somehow the difficulty never seems to be ironed out. It seems as though the people who made and sold the car have abdicated their sense of responsibility and they just wish to tough out the protest until the period of their warranty or guarantee has run out.

The individual can occasionally go to court, but the claims permissible in small claims court are not adequate to gain full compensation if you have a lemon. The personal aggravation for people, who often are busy or may need a car for their work or for getting to and from work, can be enormous and at times absolutely devastating if they rely on a car and it just is not there.

My colleague the member for Etobicoke (Mr. Philip) put forward some time ago a private member's bill that was designed to protect the purchasers of new motor vehicles. Bearing in mind that this is the purpose of this compensation fund, it seems to me the ministry should have been prepared to consider incorporating the type of lemon-aid protection the member for Etobicoke was proposing in this compensation fund, since the basis of the fund is being changed.

I think the minister will recognize that this is not a costly thing as far as reputable dealers are concerned, because reputable dealers are prepared to deal fairly with people who find they are stuck with a car that plainly was made wrong. Maybe it was made on a Friday afternoon just before the long weekend, or maybe it is just bad luck that occasionally a car may not work; I do not want to go into that.

The fact is that the purchaser, who these days pays $10,000 or more for an automobile, should not be stuck with a heap of junk if two or three months after beginning to own it he finds that the thing is chronically and constantly back in for repairs, that the manufacturer and the dealer cannot get it right, that they are trying to fob it off on him and get him to sign a paper in return for $200, when that purchaser should be entitled to a new car and should let the manufacturer and the dealer sort out the problems of whatever was wrong with the existing automobile.

When we come to committee, I will propose a form of amendment that, given the nature of the bill, will be permissive rather than mandatory, but at the very least will permit the government, through order in council, to set up that kind of compensation, that kind of protection, for people who have the misfortune to have a lemon.

If the parliamentary assistant is prepared to accept this amendment and then to see to it that the cabinet acts on it, then he and his government will be seen as champions of consumers across the province, a role that, as the parliamentary assistant knows, has been confined in the past to my colleague who is present here, the member for Welland-Thorold (Mr. Swart).

I hope the parliamentary assistant will comment on those points, because I think it would be a valuable and innovative step for the government to take. We have done so in the case of new homes. There is now effectively a means of getting redress if there are defects in the construction of new homes. That bill was adopted and passed by this government several years ago. If the government were prepared to do it that way with respect to homes, then surely, given the importance in the consumer's budget of buying a new car, they should be prepared to act here as well.

Mr. Haggerty: Mr. Speaker, I want to address myself to Bill 3, An Act to amend the Motor Vehicle Dealers Act, and to support my colleague the member for Kitchener (Mr. Breithaupt). We in this party support such measures.

But the bill does raise some questions. There is not very much in the explanatory notes that tells us what the intent of the bill really is. It says, "The new provision authorizes the Lieutenant Governor in Council to make regulations establishing a compensation fund." It goes on to say in section 2: "(o) providing for the establishment, maintenance and administration of the motor vehicle dealers compensation fund including prescribing provisions relating to investing and paying out of money from the fund."

This indicates to me that the government is trying to plug a hole in the present business practices of automobile dealers permitted to sell vehicles in Ontario.

Some problems have been brought to my attention over the past number of years by constituents regarding used cars in particular. The cars are sold here in Toronto from one dealer to another; such a car may go to a dealer in Kitchener or in Brantford, and from Brantford it may go to a dealer in Fort Erie.

Mr. Mitchell: The wholesalers.

Mr. Haggerty: The wholesalers, this is right. The problem is that in many cases the odometer has been altered. The last dealer who sells the vehicle says it is a one-owner car. I suppose this is the premise when they want to sell some of these cars. No doubt some of the dealers are reputable and good dealers but are not aware of the registration of a vehicle and how many dealers it has been passed through. Apparently they do not register every dealer the vehicle moves from in the transaction to the final dealer in the area who is going to get rid of a vehicle.

I have had cases where the odometer has been altered considerably. There have been three or four owners. In a number of cases the cars have been leased cars, perhaps from one of the major automobile leasing dealers in Ontario. It could be a number of them. One can raise the matter with the consumer protection bureau, but one cannot get too far with them because they say, "There is nothing much more that we can do in this area."

I always thought there were areas where persons could be charged under the act and that one could go after them, but it is difficult when one goes from one dealer to another dealer. Some place along the line these things have been changed, and it is usually the consumer who has to pay for it in the long run.

What are we talking about as compensation in this area? Sometimes one may get a car with 30,000 kilometres on it when, in fact, it may have travelled 130,000 kilometres; it has gone around the clock, if the members follow me.

An individual, particularly a female, may go in wanting to buy an automobile, not realizing the odometer, which says 30,000, has gone around 100,000 kilometres. The dealer says, "It only has 30,000 kilometres on it." It is not realized that he has dropped off the 100,000. Is there some way we can correct the misuse of this so people do not encounter such difficulties when they buy a used motor vehicle?

In one particular case, a person was going to lay a charge and found out he would have to go through about 10 different dealers. The last dealer says, "I am not responsible for changing anything on the odometer on the vehicle." I suggest the area of compensation should be rather heavy here, or perhaps there should be an alternative to compensation so a dealer may well lose his licence. It is a chain of dealers I am talking about. One might call them brokers in this area.

Mr. Mitchell: That may well be altered with the new licences.

Mr. Haggerty: I always thought they were supposed to show the kilometres as they are in the sale or transfer of a motor vehicle from an individual to a garage or a person selling new automobiles. I bring to the parliamentary assistant's attention that this is an area that should be controlled under legislation so things such as this do not happen. I think it is an unfair business practice.

I hope that somewhere this bill is going to provide that when one purchases a vehicle, the guarantee or warranty is going to be there, at least for the 30 days, that there is going to be a true mileage or kilometre indicator and that it is the true picture. Maybe what should be done is that when a person buys a car, he gets a chance to see even a copy of the transfer of licence plate and what the actual mileage is on that vehicle. At present, there is a way they can get around it and I do not think it is fair to the consumer buying a vehicle.

3:50 p.m.

Mr. Samis: Mr. Speaker, I want to speak briefly on this bill. Naturally, all of us on this side support it. As my colleague the member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) has mentioned, I want to call to the attention of the parliamentary assistant the legislation in Quebec and the approach it has taken in this matter.

It seems to me we have individual pieces of legislation that could benefit the consumer, whether it be the Business Practices Act or legislation regarding dealers and the turning back of odometers. I suppose the option to go to small claims court to recover damages is available at times to the consumer.

I prefer the more comprehensive, more thorough approach taken by Quebec. When any consumer goes in to deal for a car with a dealer, the legislation guarantees him certain things before the deal is signed. I do not have the file here with me, but I seem to recall that dealers are obliged to present the customer with a full history of the car. They have to tell the customer what parts of the car have been replaced, how long they have had the car and things of that sort. It is fairly detailed, but it is also, as I recall from talking to Quebec people, written in fairly simple language so consumers can understand it. It was not written in legalese. I recall about four or five years ago introducing a private members' bill to the same effect.

It seems to me that approach would be much more consumer-oriented and more protective of consumer interests than this approach. I realize this is an advance but, in terms of protecting the interests of consumers, I do not think the teeth are really there to protect them.

I recall when my wife was in charge of the consumer aid office, and we did have one in Cornwall, the most frequent complaints she got from people were about car dealers in the community. Most people had no idea what rights they had or what legal recourse they had.

The problem is that when most citizens deal with car dealers, the cards are really stacked in favour of the dealers; they know all the tricks of the trade, the ins and outs. There are so many ins and outs in the auto game that many consumers are totally baffled, bamboozled and bewitched by the whole thing.

Mr. Kerrio: Are most car dealers Conservatives?

Mr. Samis: Social Credit, with maybe a few Liberals thrown in. Bob Andras was a car dealer, was he not?

We have to do something more comprehensive to protect the interests of the consumer. I do not think compensation goes far enough, and I commend to the parliamentary assistant a detailed look at the Quebec legislation. I must say I was impressed by the consumer bias in that legislation; it was extremely refreshing.

I recall at the time I introduced my private member's bill I called up a couple of car dealers, one in Hull and two in Montreal, to sample their reaction. They were fairly candid in saying they obviously were not enthusiastic about it, because they had to be much more careful of what they did, but they could live with it. I follow the Quebec press fairly carefully, and I have not seen much printed in it since that bill became law, complaining about the legislation.

The result has been that when people want a good used car or they want to be fairly safe in what they are doing, they go to a registered car dealer as opposed to private sales. That has given consumers a much greater sense of confidence and assurance when they decide to make a purchase. It is the greatest purchase a person makes in life beyond that of a house. In that sense, it has given greater credibility to the whole car dealer profession in Quebec. It is a perennial knock against car dealers that they rank pretty low on the totem pole when it comes to public confidence and trust. They were competing with politicians and lawyers, if I am not mistaken, in the last poll.

I suggest to the parliamentary assistant that we take a more pro-consumer, more comprehensive, Quebec-style approach to the overall problem of dissatisfaction with car dealers. I think the end result will be a better industry, a better business and a more satisfied motoring public.

Mr. McGuigan: Mr. Speaker, I can agree with many of the remarks that have been made about the overall car sales business. I am presuming that really all we are covering here, and I would like a little more explanation, is the financial security of people who have bought a car.

Perhaps they have made a down payment on the car and the car never arrives. The sales company goes broke or absconds with the funds or whatever. I see the parliamentary assistant nodding his head so that probably is covered. Can he tell us what the bill does in the case of a used car on which there might be a lien?

The Acting Speaker: The parliamentary assistant will provide his answer to that in the final wrapup.

Mr. McGuigan: All right, as long as he responds to that. We are finding that is getting to be a rather troublesome thing in farm machinery. A farmer may go to an auction sale and buy a piece of farm equipment, then later the sheriff may come around and say: "Hey, that is my client's." I guess it would be the lawyer first and then the sheriff saying, "That piece of equipment does not belong to you; it belongs to someone else." This could amount to a very large sum of money.

I want to take the opportunity to scold the government for bringing in this legislation for car buyers and still leaving out in the cold people such as those in my riding—and surely there must be others across this province—who have delivered their commodities. I think we have talked about lemons; I am talking about tomatoes—and people who have delivered their tomatoes to a tomato factory. If the company goes broke, everybody in a secured position gets paid except the farmer who made it all possible in the first place by providing the tomatoes to make the factory viable. He gets what is left, which usually is zero.

We do have an act already on the statutes of this province, the Farm Products Payments Act. It is actually in effect, but it requires a triggering mechanism to bring it into operation. It requires the marketing boards in a particular case to petition the government to enforce and set up just such a fund as this insurance fund. As a matter of fact, the act does provide $250,000 as seed money that can be used: $50,000 in each of five different areas. We have this great act and an illusion of protection, yet it has not been put into effect.

Every time I mention this to the Minister of Agriculture and Food, he says, "You want me to force it upon the industry." It looks to me as if this legislation is being forced upon the industry, because it refers to "requiring participation in the fund by motor vehicle dealers." They are all required to go into the fund whether they wish to or not. I hope perhaps the parliamentary assistant will comment on what sort of reaction there is by motor vehicle dealers. Do they approve of this in general or do some of them disapprove? He is nodding his head, but I would like to hear his comments.

I will expand on that if you will allow me, Mr. Speaker, because this is somewhat off the topic, although it has to do with funds.

When the marketing board people negotiate a price each year with the various canning or packing companies, depending on the particular product, they always try to get the very best possible deal they can for their clients, the producers. The big processors, companies like Heinz, Campbell Soup or Libby, are really not much interested in participating in a fund that would help to guarantee payment to some of the smaller companies. It is apt to be the small company that goes broke, rather than the large processing companies, although we know also that large companies can go bankrupt or can come very close to it, as in the case of the Chrysler Corp.—although they seem to have somewhat recovered—and Massey-Ferguson. There are also other examples in North America and around the world of big companies going bankrupt.

These people are reluctant to participate in a plan that might assist those smaller producers and packing plants; so generally they set the matter aside and nothing is done. That has been the case in the past. There is a company in my riding, Southland Canning, that has gone broke. In fact, to be more accurate, they are in receivership. They owe 15 growers just slightly more than $500,000.

The Acting Speaker: The member is really going off subject now.

Mr. McGuigan: I will wrap it up, Mr. Speaker. I just wanted to draw the comparison. Here we are eagerly going into the situation where we are aiding the consumer, but when it comes to the primary producer in the field of agriculture, who makes all of this possible, we are not quite so eager.

4 p.m.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, as the member who had responsibility in our party for this bill when it was introduced and who gave some thought to it, I want to make a few comments on it. Most of the comments I wanted to make have been touched on; so I am going to be very brief.

However, it seems to me that this bill has nothing to do with giving any added protection to the consumer. It is very limited in its scope. What it does is substitute a system of insurance for the bond that has been in existence up to this time. It may well make it easier for an individual who has bought an automobile to collect if a dealer goes into receivership. It will facilitate the whole thing for the dealer and the courts. That is a good move, but it is very limited in its scope.

We have had changes in the Motor Vehicle Dealers Act on a number of occasions with regard to the odometer, the mechanical certificate and a variety of areas giving some protection for the consumer. As my colleague the member for Etobicoke (Mr. Philip) pointed out in his private member's bill and as the member for Kent-Elgin (Mr. McGuigan) and others in the official opposition have said, there is still a wide area for improvement in consumer protection with regard to the purchasing of motor vehicles.

As so often happens when we bring in legislation, those who want to circumvent it devise new tactics to take in the consumer. Although the measures which the government has brought in over the years admittedly have been of some benefit, the improvements in this area have been very slow. Perhaps the parliamentary assistant will tell us whether he knows if there will be some additional amendments brought in during this session with regard to consumer protection, besides what we have here, which are a change in the method of getting reimbursement if a dealer goes broke.

There is one other thing that concerns me about this bill. Unlike almost all other bills that have been before this House, this bill enacts nothing. It does say there is going to be a fund enacted, but everything is left up to regulation. It makes it permissive for regulations to be enacted "providing for the establishment, maintenance and administration of the motor vehicle dealers compensation fund, including prescribing provisions relating to investing and paying out of money from the fund."

Then, in clause 2(p), the bill says, "providing for the payment of levies into the fund by participants and prescribing the amounts thereof;" and then for the consumer, "(q) providing for payment out of the fund of claims and procedures to be followed in respect thereto."

The only mandatory thing we have in the bill is the setting up of a fund and requiring participation in the fund by all motor vehicle dealers. Those two things are good, but perhaps the parliamentary assistant could give us some assurance that this fund is going to be adequate to pay all claims.

I also ask him, is the government going to pay 100 per cent of all claims? In the Re-Mor situation, which I grant is an ad hoc case, they are going to reimburse investors for only two thirds of their losses. I suggest that the regulations the minister could set up under this bill could provide for a 50 per cent payment of losses or a 75 per cent payment of losses or a 25 per cent payment of losses.

I know there is a question here—and I guess that is what the whole thing is based on—of the legal liability of the motor vehicle dealer. They pay that and nothing more. But it seems to me if we are bringing in a bill that is going to replace the bond, there should be some statement that total compensation will be paid.

Interjection.

Mr. Swart: Perhaps the member for Kitchener has some comments in that regard.

Mr. Breithaupt: It should be at least as strong as the bond.

Mr. Swart: As the member for Kitchener points out, it should be at least as strong as the bond. I would like to see it go even further and require that 100 per cent compensation be paid automatically for all legal liability that exists. The bill does not say that. I am not denying that may very well be the intention; the parliamentary assistant is an honourable man.

If increases are made in the payments which a motor vehicle dealer will have to make, I believe $150 is not enough to pay all of it, especially under the present circumstances. The member for Kitchener asked the parliamentary assistant to give some indication of the kind of claims we have at the present time. If these claims are high, with the economic situation the way it is today, and if we have to raise that from $150 to $250 and perhaps to $500, is the government going to be pressured by the motor vehicle dealers so that only a portion of these claims will be paid? It is not quite good enough to leave all these decisions and details—in fact, the total bill—to regulations.

Because the bill in principle is an improvement on what we have, we are going to support it, but I do not want the parliamentary assistant to think for one minute that we do not have some pretty strong reservations about it. There should be more principles established in this bill for consumer protection. Even if we only want to deal with the changeover from bonding to insurance, we should have more principles involved in that insurance which is going to be provided by this changeover.

To me the bill is very poorly designed to deal with this problem. We, as members of this House, should have more detail in the bill as to what it is really going to mean to the customers of motor vehicle dealers.

I hope the parliamentary assistant either can give us some assurance on these matters—that is, a binding assurance—or perhaps think about taking the bill back and writing into it some of those principles where the intent now is to establish them by regulation, which of course can then be changed at whim.

I realize some things have to be changed; we could not have everything brought back to the House, such as the amount motor vehicle dealers would have to pay. But certainly those principles could be established in this bill. The parliamentary assistant may want to think about taking the bill back and making some of those changes so it is more satisfactory to the opposition, to the government and certainly to all the people in this province who will be buying cars from motor vehicle dealers.

Mr. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I will do my best to answer all the questions that have been raised within the time I have available to me.

If I may comment on the extended warranty situation, I think the point is very well made. In fact, on the weekend, when I had an opportunity to speak to a group, that was an area of question by those people. I was able to say to them that it is an area of very serious concern to the minister. In answer to the concern of the minister, there have been staff discussions with Quebec. There have been, in fact, staff discussions with Quebec, in answer to the member for Cornwall (Mr. Samis), and it is expected—although I must be honest, not in this session, but perhaps within the year—that something will be put forward with regard to extended warranty.

4:10 p.m.

I am unable to do it at this time or within this bill, but it is a very serious concern and consideration in the ministry. In fact, because the question was raised with me by the Consumers' Association of Canada at their conference in Hamilton over the weekend, I have become more involved in it and I have come to appreciate the concerns the honourable member is raising. In discussions with the minister, he was quite clear on the point that it is an area in which he wants to see if there are ways of resolving the very issues the member points out.

Mr. Samis: Their legislation goes beyond just the warranty.

Mr. Mitchell: Yes. I am not arguing whose legislation is better. The staff have been down to discuss their legislation, and I am sure we will gain all the benefit of their examination of that legislation. But as I say, I cannot do it with this particular bill at this time.

To answer some of the questions that were raised earlier, I will read parts of the minister's statement:

"By way of background, the Motor Vehicle Dealers Act was set up in 1965. At that time, a $5,000 bond posted by each of the car dealerships was enough to cover potential consumer claims, but as the industry has rightly pointed out, it is not enough today." Then the statement goes on to mention that some deposits can be as high as $1,000 and, frankly, a $5,000 bond would not go very far if a dealership went into bankruptcy.

With regard to questions as to how the money will be dealt with, the money will be placed in trust and administered by a board of trustees made up of industry, government and public representatives. Administrative costs will be covered by interest from the fund.

I should point out, as I said earlier, that the registration fee will be $150 for two years. It is also proposed that when the fund reaches $1 million, there will be a premium holiday for registered dealers; however, new dealers coming in will continue to add to the fund.

I am not sure whether I have answered them all; my time is running a little tight. I will try to ensure that all the questions that have been raised with me are answered.

The questions with regard to the turnback of odometers have been handled very well by the minister, as I am sure the members know. I believe the new licensing program of the Ministry of Transportation and Communications will also answer the concerns raised by the member for Erie (Mr. Haggerty) in that there will be a better record of those cars. As he will recall, the licence plate becomes the property of the owner, so that every time a car is transferred new plates will have to be issued one way or the other. I think that problem is addressed there.

Motion agreed to.

Bill ordered for committee of the whole House.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, as we had already agreed, I would suggest that since it is practically 4:15 p.m. perhaps at your discretion the House might recess for 15 minutes or so until the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) is ready to present his resolution.

Mr. Speaker: It being almost 4:15 p.m., I do leave the chair. We will resume at approximately 4:30 p.m.

The House recessed at 4:15 p.m.

4:30 p.m.

BUDGET RESOLUTION

Hon. F. S. Miller moved, seconded by Hon. Mr. Davis, that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government.

Mr. Speaker: I ask the indulgence and the co-operation of all members please while the pages distribute the budget. Have all members received their copies of the budget? I presume they have.

BUDGET STATEMENT

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, before I begin the formal presentation of my 1983 budget this afternoon, I would like to review with the House some events of the past five or six days which relate to the budget preparation.

I know members are aware that some aspects are part of investigations relating to pending civil or criminal proceedings. All of these are outside my ministerial responsibility and are not proper for me to discuss or comment on here.

As I reported to the House on Friday, I was made aware on Thursday afternoon, May 5, that some attempts were made to breach security in Don Mills where the budget was to be produced by a commercial printing firm, under contract to maintain security with assistance from the Ontario Provincial Police. Later Thursday afternoon, two reporters from the Globe and Mail, Robert Stephens and Rosemary Speirs, came to my office in the Frost Building and showed me some printed material which they alleged formed part of the budget which I will be presenting to you shortly.

Copies of this material and stories based on it were published in Friday's Globe and Mail. The paper reported that the material was found in garbage bags which, the Globe said, a reporter took from a loading dock at Carswell's plant on Wednesday, May 4. Some members have noted that the early editions of the paper carried a picture of the dock to illustrate the source.

Following the discussion of this matter in the House on Friday morning, a lawyer representing the Globe and Mail delivered two bags of garbage from Carswell Printing Co. to the criminal law office of the Ministry of the Attorney General. My deputy minister subsequently received a letter from Richard J. Doyle, editor of the Globe and Mail, which indicates that all the material taken from the printing plant was given to the Attorney General's officers. This material is now in the possession of the police and has been examined by my staff.

Apart from some industrial garbage, scrap papers and parts of material Carswell was printing for nongovernment customers, my staff tells me that the sacks appear to contain scraps of proofs of documents, three areas of which could be of interest in this discussion. Neither my budget statement nor the tax measures which I will propose later today were part of the material turned over to the police.

Some of the material relating to Ontario government activities included parts of the Management Board of Cabinet estimates for the government for the coming year which were being printed by Carswell Printing Co. under a separate contract. These were also covered by a security clause and Management Board will be pursuing this with its legal advisers.

In addition, there were seven pages of a French translation of an early draft of an appendix to the budget statement. These sheets contain statistics on estimates of expenditures and revenues and appear to be from the second draft of the material. Several subsequent revisions had been made before the Globe and Mail published its report.

The third piece of data used by the Globe and Mail was pieced together from a torn-up proof of an Ontario health insurance plan bulletin which was to be printed for the Ministry of Health to mail to subscribers today, budget day. This document was intended to advise subscribers of our intention to increase premiums by five per cent at this time and it is the one document which we have not been able to accommodate within our in-house printing capacity. It will not be ready to mail for a few days.

However, I will be proposing today to increase premiums by five per cent, in keeping with the Inflation Restraint Act which limits increases in administered prices to five per cent unless an exception is granted by the cabinet committee on administered prices.

OHIP premiums are not a tax measure or an integral part of the budget and can be changed at any time by regulation, a process which also applies to other government fees or licences. For this reason, it was both legally and technically possible to change, drop or delay this increase. But we believe the amount and timing are justified, and in my view it would be quite improper to make any change for the sole purpose of discrediting the Globe and Mail report. I do not believe it is necessary for me to do that.

To recap, the budget which I will be introducing in just a moment is based on the best economic and fiscal advice we could obtain by actively canvassing a broad range of advice both inside and outside Ontario. The major issues today, which seem to have been forgotten in all of this, are the serious economic challenges facing our province and our country in 1983. Our budget is urgently needed, and I hope it will make a contribution to meeting those challenges. It must represent our best effort and must not be something less than that or something different or delayed for the sake of expediency.

So while it is clear that the security of the critical areas of this budget was not compromised by reporters who pieced together a story from the scraps from a commercial printing plant, the precedent involved has caused us a good deal of concern about how we can protect the public interest in similar circumstances in the future.

As I said at the beginning, detailed comment on other aspects of this matter by me would be quite improper until the pending civil and criminal law questions are resolved.

I will now get on with the body of my budget. I am delighted to see over the lights in the balcony two of my predecessors, the Honourable John White and the Honourable James N. Allan, both very fine Treasurers of the past. The family treasurer from Muskoka is seated up there too in the person of my wife. Her budgets balance.

Mr. Martel: You have long promised that.

Mr. J. A. Reed: You could learn something from her.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Right.

I now present to the Legislature the details of the 1983 budget for Ontario.

The aim of this budget is to encourage and sustain the economic momentum as it gains strength. The recovery is still in its early stage and it will be important over the next few months to do what we can to assist the economy by putting into place policies conducive to long-term growth, productivity improvement and job creation.

The recovery is being led, as it must, by the private sector. Only private enterprise can undertake the investments and create the permanent jobs upon which prosperity depends. Experience has shown that government works best when it works in co-operation with the private sector, allowing it the room and the resources it needs to do the things it does best not only for itself but for society as a whole.

Before outlining the objectives I have adopted in the 1983 budget, I would like to comment on our process of pre-budget consultation. In preparing this budget, I had extensive discussions with a large number of groups, including those representing farmers, small businessmen, teachers, workers, women, consumers and manufacturers. As well, I had meetings with other provinces, the federal government and the Association of Municipalities of Ontario. I would like to express my appreciation to all the organizations that took time to present their briefs to me. In virtually all cases their recommendations were constructive and well reasoned.

The pre-budget consultations indicated two main things to me. First, the worst of the recession is over. There is ample evidence we are now moving into a new period of economic growth. According to Statistics Canada, our industrial production jumped five per cent in January, the largest monthly increase in almost 50 years. This was followed by a further 1.7 per cent increase in February.

A Conference Board of Canada survey of business spending intentions has shown that businessmen are revising their investment spending plans because they do feel the recession is over. A consumer survey conducted by the same organization revealed a marked increase in consumer confidence in the first quarter of this year. As well, inflation is continuing to moderate in both Canada and the United States.

Equally encouraging is the news about employment. Since bottoming out last November, the number of people working in Ontario has risen by 24,000, seasonally adjusted. Employment has increased in three of the last five months and I expect that upward trend will continue.

The improving economic news makes me optimistic about Ontario's economic outlook. At the same time, I am realistic enough to recognize we are not out of the woods yet, that the hardship and suffering endured by so many during this recession have not yet been overcome. Our economy is like a patient who has been removed from the critical list but still remains only in fair condition. Further recuperation is required before the recovery is complete.

A second broad point of consensus that emerged during the pre-budget consultative process is that government must continue to play a supportive role in nurturing the economic recovery. The views I received during the pre-budget discussions and my own analysis of the economy lead me to believe our 1983 budget can best help restore economic prosperity by seeking to achieve four objectives.

First, we must try to maintain a co-operative federal-provincial environment so that governments work in harmony to improve our economic prospects. Second, we must emphasize the creation of long-term employment through the private sector by encouraging investment and productivity improvement. Third, we must expand our short-term programs for job creation, skill development and economic growth. Fourth, we must maintain a fiscal framework that allows us to pay for our beneficial public programs without imposing excessive burdens of debt upon the people.

My budget will address each of these areas in turn. I would like first to discuss intergovernmental co-operation. In the past two years, certain policies of the federal government have created severe problems for Ontario. The November 1981 federal budget dampened investment and business prospects. This was compounded by the federal cuts in payments for health and for post-secondary education. These cutbacks cost Ontario $288 million last year and will mean reduced revenues of $315 million this year.

The lost funds in these past two years alone would have been enough to pay for five years' worth of hospital capital requirements. Moreover, the federal government has further compounded the problem by capping the growth of post-secondary education transfers, an action that will trim an additional $37 million from our Ontario revenue this year.

A few weeks ago I met with the Honourable Joel Matheson, the Minister of Finance for Nova Scotia, to release a consensus provincial statement concerning this latest round of federal transfer cuts. As all the arguments are covered in detail in that statement, I will not repeat them this afternoon, but I do want to remind the members of the importance of that document. They should be aware, for example, that even under the most generous interpretation, the federal share in the funding of our health care programs has fallen from almost 52 per cent a few years ago to 43 per cent today. In actual cash payments, their share is about 24 per cent. These disturbing statistics help to explain the fiscal difficulties we have in the area of health care financing.

While I remain critical of federal policies in the area of transfer payments, I am more encouraged by certain taxation and economic policies that have been adopted by Ottawa. Going back to last June, we saw the federal government remove some of the more onerous provisions of the November 1981 budget and provide an incentive for the purchase of new housing that was complementary to the Ontario renter-buy program. We then saw the federal government act, in the fall, to create a new short-term job creation program which, in Ontario, added to the major initiatives I had implemented earlier in the year.

I responded to this constructive action by committing $100 million to the Canada-Ontario employment development program. I was pleased to note that in its recent budget the federal government adopted an economic stimulation program that is oriented to the private sector.

At this point I would like to mention briefly the tax collection agreement under which the federal government collects Ontario personal income tax. Last year, I indicated I was sufficiently concerned about the nature of federal changes to the personal income tax that I questioned whether Ontario should continue to be part of an agreement that compels us to parallel most federal amendments.

Accordingly, I asked the Ontario Economic Council to study this matter for me and report back. As members know, the council has completed its study of the matter and it expresses concerns about the current process, but it recommends that Ontario stay within the tax collection agreement and not adopt its own income tax system on the assumption that the federal government can be persuaded to improve the consultative process.

I believe recently the federal government has been somewhat more willing to discuss tax changes with the provinces. Therefore, we will remain in the tax collection agreement for the time being, but we must seek continuing consultation with tangible results if we are to stay within this arrangement in the longer term.

I would like to inject one word of caution about recent federal policies and that concerns the size of the federal deficit and the length of time it will take to reduce it to manageable levels. The Minister of Finance has attempted to address this issue by proposing tax changes but some of them will not take effect for almost 18 months. I am, quite frankly, sceptical of this approach. Fiscal reality is not something governments can put aside for another day or another budget.

Mr. Conway: Darcy McKeough promised it for 1981.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I had a surplus that year, by the way, in terms of all but the capital account. The members opposite tend to forget that. In nine of the last 12 years, we have had a surplus on operating account and have only borrowed for the capital of this province. That is all we have borrowed for.

Thank you for the interjection. Please be on cue next time.

As I have noted, Ontario's economic performance relies on a strong and vibrant private sector. To gain permanent jobs for our citizens and productivity improvements that enable us to compete in world markets, business must be willing to undertake investments in new plant and equipment. Government has an important role to play in providing a climate favourable to capital formation and long-term employment creation.

In spite of improving economic prospects, business continues to approach new investment and job creation with some caution. In this environment, selective actions by government can be instrumental in reinforcing economic recovery by encouraging the private sector to undertake new job creating investment and by ensuring that our labour force is properly trained.

Later, I will outline new initiatives to expand manpower training. Now, I am proposing the following measures to promote new investment:

Ontario will parallel recent federal actions that improve loss carryover provisions under the corporations income tax. Businesses will now be able to carry noncapital losses back three years and forward seven years for purposes of determining Ontario income tax liability. This will be effective immediately for small businesses, farmers, fisherman and phased in over the next two years for other businesses.

In addition, net capital losses will be eligible for a three-year carryback as well as for the existing indefinite carry-forward provision. These measures, which will be of particular benefit to small business, will provide $40 million in tax relief in this fiscal year.

Turning to the issue of encouraging investment in production facilities, I have carefully examined the implications of our current retail sales tax policy. Existing provisions allow an exemption for machinery and equipment used directly in the manufacturing process. While this tax expenditure provides significant support to business investment, its scope can be enlarged.

Also, the complex nature of the production process, particularly in this era of high technology, means that the Ministry of Revenue must constantly make difficult rulings to determine the tax status of particular items of equipment. This has led to frustration and uncertainty for companies and people attempting to create new production facilities.

Consequently, I am proposing that effective midnight tonight the exemption for production machinery and equipment be expanded substantially. In addition, I propose to exempt from retail sales tax all purchases of tools and parts used for the repair and maintenance of exempt production machinery.

To complement the thrust of these investment incentives, I propose to exempt from retail sales tax the purchase of certain transportation vehicles and equipment such as heavy trucks and trailers.

With these measures, we will assist Ontario industry to improve its productivity which, in turn, will help to protect and create jobs. I estimate these measures will provide some $95 million of additional incentives in this fiscal year.

While the capital tax plays an important role in the province's revenue structure, we have been careful to ensure that this tax represents neither an unfair burden nor a needlessly complex part of business life. Already the bulk of corporations in Ontario pay a flat tax of either $50 or $100. This ensures that small business, in particular, is able to cope with this tax and not only the larger corporations pay the designated rates.

Since corporations are liable for capital tax regardless of their profit position, the tax can cause difficulties during a protracted downturn in the economy when some companies simply do not have sufficient cash flow and must borrow to meet ongoing liabilities.

Farm equipment dealers, for example, have suffered more than many during the recession. I am therefore proposing to extend temporarily the flat tax provision so that corporations in an operating loss position and that have taxable capital of between $1 million and $2 million will pay only $100.

This provision will be effective for two taxation years, ending after May 10, 1983, and before May 11, 1985. I estimate that this measure will reduce provincial revenues by $13 million this year.

I have stood in this House many times and emphasized the vital role small business plays in the Ontario economy. Last year I introduced a major incentive for small business, namely, the complete removal for two years of small business corporations income tax. Many small business people and their organizations have said this is the most important small business incentive introduced by any government anywhere in Canada for decades.

In determining the best small business policy for this budget, I was impressed with an observation in a brief I received from the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. It states that approximately 150,000 new small business ventures were born in 1982 and that 200,000 new businesses will be established this year.

"Thus," says the brief, "the dynamism of the new and young firm continues in spite of the recession. Even more now than usual it is most important to create a business environment in financing and taxation to foster additional formations and the growth" of successful new firms.

This observation has important implications when one considers the key role played by small business in creating jobs. I am proposing to extend the small business exemption from corporation income tax for one additional year. This will expand our small business incentive to a value of $180 million this year.

Another important element of Ontario's support for small business is the small business development corporations program. For the past few years, SBDCs have been increasing the supply of equity capital available to small businesses and they have been helping them to address one of the major concerns of most small businessmen.

To date, some $140 million has been invested under the program. Over 600 separate investments have been made by 314 small businesses in manufacturing, tourism, research and publishing. It is the single most successful venture capital program ever created in Canada.

To strengthen this program further, I have decided to increase its allocation significantly to $30 million for 1983-84, and I am proposing to expand the application of the program by increasing the employee limit for an eligible small business from 100 to 150 employees. To assure that the benefits from this program are distributed widely, I also propose that a limit of $5 million be imposed on the total allowable investment by any number of SBDCs in any one small business.

I believe we must assess carefully the longer-term role of this program so this summer I intend to establish a consultative process that will allow the small business community, the accounting and legal professions, investment analysts and all other interested parties an opportunity to provide me with their views. The advice and recommendations from these parties will help me to assess whether certain changes to the current approach would ensure an even more successful program in the future.

When we look at future productivity, we must keep in mind the sector that has demonstrated the greatest productivity gains in the past and continues to be one of the cornerstones of our economy. I refer, of course, to agriculture.

This government continues to be responsive to the needs of this very important sector. In 1982-83, some $45 million was advanced to the Crop Insurance Commission of Ontario to compensate farmers for their tobacco crop losses caused by hail storms and early frost. Also, the farm adjustment assistance program, which was to expire in December 1982, was extended for one more year to help farmers facing a difficult economic situation.

In this budget I am making provision for a new beginning farmers program. It will provide up to five percentage points in interest subsidy on eligible loans to beginning farmers for a period of five years. Up to 1,000 new farmers will benefit each year. At current interest rates, this program is expected to provide $9 million in interest subsidy in the first full year, and as much as $135 million over five years. The details of the program will be announced in the coming weeks by my colleague the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Timbrell).

This year, funding for the regular programs of the Ministry of Agriculture and Food will be increased by 9.3 per cent. The decrease in the overall allocation for 1983-84 reflects the very high level of extraordinary expenditures which were made last year, including the $45 million for the tobacco crop loss and an additional $15 million for the farm tax reduction program.

Almost a decade has passed since major reforms to the Mining Tax Act were introduced.

I believe the time has come for a comprehensive review of our mining tax to ensure it is meeting its objectives of providing a fair return to the people of Ontario for nonrenewable resources, while encouraging further processing and supporting the long-term interests of the mining industry. Later this year, my colleague the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Pope) and I will announce details of how this review will be undertaken.

In the meantime, I would like to announce a modest incentive to assist our gold producers. Currently, a significant amount of the production of gold in Ontario is used in making the Canadian Maple Leaf gold coin. I propose to remove the retail sales tax from this coin to encourage its production in the face of increasing future competition.

The performance of research and development in Canada has been a topic of discussion and concern for a number of years. R and D can be an important source of competitive advantage, and society as a whole benefits from the innovation of new products and new processes. It has been argued that Canada performs poorly in this essential area compared with other countries. A budget paper I am tabling today addresses this issue. It indicates a marked improvement in R and D performance in the last few years.

I believe the tax policies and Board of Industrial Leadership and Development programs we have put in place have played a major role in this improvement. In fact, our analysis of the tax treatment of R and D in a number of jurisdictions shows Canada to be the most generous. Other studies confirm this finding. If the proposals advanced in the recent federal budget to simplify and increase the accessibility of R and D incentives are implemented, then the current international advantage for Ontario firms in the tax treatment of research and development will be reinforced.

In the face of unexpected economic adversity over the past 18 months, the Ontario economy continues to show fundamental strength. I am confident that, as we emerge from the 1982 recession, our diversified economic base will provide the foundation for a sustained period of economic growth. Nevertheless, I am keenly aware of the need to assist the recovery in its early stages and particularly to accelerate the growth of employment. Therefore, I am announcing today selective measures to stimulate consumption and expand our job creation effort.

The pace of our economic recovery will depend a great deal on the strength of consumer demand. To encourage consumer spending and strengthen confidence, I have decided to implement a temporary program of retail sales tax exemptions for selected items.

I propose a 90-day exemption from retail sales tax on purchases of new household furniture and appliances.

Interjections.

Hon. F. S. Miller: The Premier (Mr. Davis) and I may have trouble explaining to our children, who have just bought a bunch of furniture, what that is about.

A detailed list of exempt items is included in the appendix to this statement.

This tax relief will prompt consumers to accelerate spending decisions and will have a positive impact on important sectors of the economy. By targeting narrowly on products with high Canadian content, the greatest gains in production and employment can be achieved. I estimate that this initiative, which will begin at midnight this evening and extend to August 8, 1983, will save consumers some $55 million this year.

In addition to this tax cut, I will now announce more job creation measures and new initiatives for manpower training.

Members will recall that last May I introduced more than $170 million in short-term job creation initiatives. These programs provided temporary jobs for nearly 45,000 Ontario citizens. In November I announced two additional programs. Ontario committed $50 million for its own program to stimulate employment over the short term. We also agreed to co-operate with the federal government to create the Canada-Ontario employment development program. Our $100 million was added to an equal federal commitment to make $200 million. Private sector, municipal and nonprofit groups have quickly taken advantage of these moneys. To date, 1,800 projects, which will create more than 15,000 temporary jobs, have been approved.

In his recent budget the federal Minister of Finance said more funds would be allocated to job creation programs. I am prepared to provide provincial funds to match that new commitment for the COED program by the federal government if it is willing.

I would like now to announce another new job creation initiative. It is an accelerated capital works program involving $247 million worth of projects, which will create 12,000 jobs. The projects have been advanced from the longer-range plans of ministries so that they can proceed now while the economy needs additional stimulus. Construction will take place over the next two years, and in some cases local governments will contribute a portion of the funding. This capital works program, which is targeted primarily at regions of the province with higher levels of unemployment, will be co-ordinated by BILD. Details will be announced over the next few weeks by my colleagues.

Youth employment has for many years been a priority of this government. In 1982, our programs provided temporary jobs for 75,000 young people. I have decided to increase the 1983 allocation for youth employment by $36 million to bring the total for this year to $121 million. This will provide 100,000 jobs for Ontario's youth.

As part of this expansion, I am allocating $25 million for a new, accelerated youth employment program. It will provide a wage subsidy of $100 per week for up to 20 weeks to employers who add unemployed young people to their payrolls. A portion of the expenditure will be targeted to recent graduates of post-secondary institutions. I anticipate this new program will create 12,500 jobs.

I turn now to the important issue of manpower training. Earlier, I announced measures to create long-term employment opportunities through initiatives to encourage investment and to stimulate productivity growth. Equipping our people with appropriate skills makes a major contribution to economic development and to that productivity improvement; more important, it gives individuals the opportunity to pursue productive and rewarding employment.

I have decided to allocate a further $14 million to BILD this year to expand skill development programs in Ontario. Existing programs will be supplemented and funding will be provided for new programs to encourage employers to accelerate their hiring plans and to create new jobs and training opportunities. I am pleased to note that one of these programs will be of particular benefit to women interested in entering technical occupations.

Further details of these new manpower training initiatives will be announced by my colleague the Minister of Colleges and Universities (Miss Stephenson).

I turn now to the housing sector. The Ontario renter-buy program, introduced in the 1982 budget, proved very successful in promoting new home purchases and creating rental unit vacancies. More than 15,000 new home buyers will have received assistance under this program, with a total provincial commitment of more than $75 million. The program made a major contribution to the recovery of the housing sector.

I expect this momentum to continue in 1983, because new starts will be encouraged by lower mortgage interest rates and improving economic prospects. The preliminary data for the first quarter of 1983 are very encouraging and support a forecast of 53,000 new housing starts for the year, an increase of 38 per cent over the 1982 level.

While I am encouraged by these indications, I believe we do need to provide a degree of stimulus in the rental sector. Therefore, I am proposing this afternoon a $40-million stimulative package aimed at creating and improving the stock of rental accommodation in the province. This new initiative will assist in the rehabilitation and construction of more than 5,000 units, representing 12,000 jobs in construction and related activities. I expect the full amount will be committed this year and that cash flow for this year also will be $16 million. The details of the program will be announced by my colleague the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing (Mr. Bennett).

Before turning to our revenue requirements for this year, I would like to review briefly some highlights of our expenditure program for 1983-84.

In these difficult times, one of our highest priorities must be to provide our people with a sense of security about the availability of fundamental programs that provide support to the individual and the family. In 1983-84, $10 billion will be spent on health care and social services, well over $1,000 per citizen.

We will introduce improvements to treatment centres for the physically handicapped children in a number of communities throughout Ontario. Almost 500 new beds will be opened for the aged and the chronically ill. Last fall, we introduced a special program costing almost $70 million to provide additional social assistance throughout 1983-84 to people most severely affected by the recession.

Our total spending on education this year will be $5.5 billion, an average of about $1,800 for each young person in the province. In recognition of the increasing importance of computers in society, the Ministry of Education is working with school boards to provide software packages for use in elementary and secondary schools. There are now about 7,000 microcomputers in publicly supported schools in Ontario.

New capital spending on our education system will be $116 million this year. This will emphasize our priority on technological training, with expansions or new facilities in Sault Ste. Marie, Oshawa and Guelph. The province has also decided to proceed with the natural resources centre at the University of Toronto.

In special education programs the province has increased funding by 16 per cent to $260 million in 1983-84. Last fall a third demonstration school for children with severe learning disabilities was opened. To provide assistance to students, funding for the Ontario student assistance program will be increased by $9.6 million to $119.4 million in 1983-84. This program helps approximately 90,000 students in the province every year.

Dans le cadre de la stratégie à long terme du gouvernement destinée à préserver et à mettre en valeur nos ressources naturelles, le ministère des Richesses naturelles signera huit nouvelles ententes de gestion forestière cette année. Le Programme ontarien d'exploration minière devrait rapporter $30 millions grâce aux activités d'exploration en 1983-84. Jusqu'ici, plus de 450 projets d'aide à l'exploration minière ont été désignés, ce qui représente près de $90 millions de dépenses d'exploration. Ce programme a déjà permis de créer 2,000 nouveaux emplois et a joué un rôle majeur dans les importantes découvertes d'or à Hemlo et à Sturgeon Lake.

Le gouvernement continuera à améliorer l'accès aux ressources en construisant et en ouvrant cette année plus de 1,800 kilomètres de routes d'accès dans le Nord. En 1983-84, norOntair assurera des liaisons régulières entre 21 communautés du Nord de l'Ontario grâce à neuf avions qui parcourront, selon les estimations, environ 1,564,000 milles. Et le programme rail-transversier de la Commission des transports du Nord de l'Ontario assurera un service à 380,000 passagers en 1983-84.

The province will expand its efforts to promote exports of Ontario products this year. The allocation for the programs of the Ministry of Industry and Trade will be increased by 15 per cent. However, because of the $75-million payment in 1982-83 to meet our commitment for the Massey-Ferguson assistance plan, the actual dollar estimates of the ministry will be lower.

Since it was created two and a half years ago, the Board of Industrial Leadership and Development has devoted $407 million to support economic development. Over 80 new programs and initiatives have been funded. In 1983-84 BILD will invest over $50 million in the recently established centres for the promotion of new technologies and advanced applied research, including the six technology centres, the Innovation Development for Employment Advancement Corp., the fusion fuel technology project and the Allelix Biotechnology Co.

BILD will provide the universities and community and agricultural colleges with $21 million worth of high-tech equipment and training support and direct over $40 million to initiatives in the agricultural, forestry and mineral sectors to upgrade resources, intensify renewal efforts and promote technological advancement.

I have now outlined special job creation measures and some highlights of our overall expenditure program. Another of the great strengths of this province is the reputation of its government for good financial management. We intend to continue to meet our responsibilities to existing and future citizens. Accordingly, the bulk of the stimulation programs I announced earlier must be financed by revenue increases, which I shall now discuss.

Before discussing tax measures, let me turn to Ontario health insurance plan premiums. The province of Ontario commits over 32 cents out of every spending dollar to health care. This fact alone means that even modest percentage increases in health spending can create significant revenue requirements. While OHIP premiums provide an important source of funds, the growth of health care expenditures has outstripped premiums in recent years. Five years ago they paid for 23 per cent of health spending; this declined to just 19 per cent last year.

Last May I released a paper that examined the possibility of addressing part of this problem by replacing OHIP premiums with a payroll tax. I have received a number of briefs concerning this paper, most of which express doubts about the wisdom of introducing a new payroll tax. I intend to heed this advice and I do not intend to proceed with any further study or discussion of the payroll tax concept at this time.

This year premiums occupy a unique place in our revenue structure because they are an administered price and therefore are subject to the provincial restraint program. While this program allows for cost pass-through and therefore a double-digit premium increase could be justified, I believe the overall credibility of the inflation restraint program could be harmed if such an increase were permitted to go through.

Consequently, I decided to restrain the increase of our OHIP premiums to five per cent this year.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. F. S. Miller: This modest monthly increase of $1.35 for single persons and $2.70 for family coverage will yield $60 million in additional revenues. I need not remind the members that 70 per cent of OHIP premiums are paid by employers.

I also propose that additional revenues may be obtained from beverage alcohol by increasing the retail sales tax from 10 to 12 per cent on purchases of beverage alcohol at retail stores. Purchases at licensed establishments will remain taxable at 10 per cent. This increase will be effective May 24, 1983. Members can stock up.

It is estimated that $31 million in additional revenue will be generated from this measure, with price increases amounting to about 20 cents per bottle of average-priced spirits, 10 cents per bottle of popular wines and 15 cents per case of 12 bottles of beer.

I am also proposing to increase revenue from the taxation of tobacco. First, I am proposing that the ad valorem tobacco tax rate be increased from 40 to 45 per cent for cigarettes and cut tobacco. Cigars will stay the same.

Hon. Mr. Davis: That includes pipes.

Hon. F. S. Miller: They are already at 45 per cent.

Second, a seven per cent Ontario retail sales tax will be applied to all tobacco products. The retail sales tax will be levied in addition to the tobacco tax and will be applied to the retail selling price, inclusive of such tax. This will mean that the taxation of tobacco products is more consistent with our treatment of other products. I anticipate that these measures, effective midnight tonight, will raise additional revenues of some $135 million.

I now turn to the corporations income tax. As a paper accompanying this budget shows, Ontario's taxation policies provide a balance between the taxation of individuals and corporations, while ensuring that taxes on business are consistent with our economic growth prospects and with the realities of international competition. With this in mind, I have determined that it is fair and affordable for the corporate sector, along with individuals, to help maintain the essential services our people require.

Therefore, I am proposing that the general rate of corporations income tax be increased from 14 per cent to 15 per cent, while the rate on income from manufacturing and processing operations, mining, logging, farming and fishing be increased from 13 per cent to 14 per cent. This change will apply to taxation years of corporations ending after May 10, 1983, and will generate an additional $70 million of the expected total revenue increase from corporations income tax of $255 million. Small business income, as noted earlier, will continue to be exempt.

I would like to announce one additional temporary tax measure which will be necessary to assist in the financing of our public programs and new initiatives for job creation. Beginning July 1, 1983, and continuing through the 1984 tax year, a five per cent surcharge on Ontario personal income tax will be collected. It will be called the social services maintenance tax.

Mr. Wrye: That's great stuff.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: Four dollars an hour and one gets taxed. That is great. That is a great plan.

Mr. Breithaupt: Call it the Suncor tax.

Interjections.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I borrowed that from the New Democratic Party. They told me to do it. That is exactly what they said.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Lower-income Ontarians will be protected since the surcharge will apply only to Ontario taxpayers with taxable income in excess of $2,178 this year. As a result, some 500,000 taxpayers will not pay this tax. For those who are affected, the average tax increase amounts to about $1.40 per week. Over two million of these taxpayers will, in fact, pay less than $1 per week in increased income tax.

This means that those citizens of Ontario who have jobs will contribute a modest additional amount to ensure that decent public programs and job creation initiatives are paid for without undue increases in our deficit. This measure will yield $170 million in this fiscal year.

Details of the tax measures I have announced this afternoon, as well as a number of additional retail sales tax changes of a technical nature, can be found in appendix A to this statement. Legislation to enact these measures will be brought forward by my colleague the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Ashe).

Now that I have outlined the major actions of this budget, let me move to my forecast for the Ontario economy. As I said earlier, there are encouraging indications of economic recovery.

Inflation has decelerated significantly since the middle of 1982. Public sector wage and price restraint and a favourable outlook for food and energy prices will, we believe, cause this trend to continue. Industrial production has risen in the latest two months for which data are available. Interest rates are at their lowest levels in three years and seasonally adjusted employment in Ontario has increased by 24,000 since the low point of last November.

Real growth in gross provincial product should average 1.9 per cent for 1983. While modest by historical standards, this is a massive improvement from last year. Employment will be on an upward trend throughout the year. I expect the number of people employed in Ontario by the fourth quarter of 1983 will be 65,000 above the level in the fourth quarter of 1982. The consumer price index is forecast to rise by 6.6 per cent, the lowest annual increase since 1972.

5:30 p.m.

Last fall I introduced the legislation required for the inflation restraint program which is a key element in our efforts to foster economic recovery. This program was essential. The private sector, already hard hit by the recession, could not be expected to pay for unwarranted growth in government expenditures.

During these difficult times, the program holds the costs of government down in two ways. First, compensation increases have been limited for over 1.5 million employees in the broadly defined provincial public sector. Second, restrictions are placed on increases in prices set or directly authorized by Ontario ministries or agencies.

By keeping its own house in order, the Ontario government has made an important contribution to the reduction of inflation, both directly through cost and price restraint and indirectly by providing leadership to others. In this manner, the restraint program has made a constructive contribution to moderation in the rate of inflation. This moderation is expected to continue over the next year; unit labour cost increases have decelerated and, as I indicated earlier, our inflation outlook is favourable.

While the measures contained in this budget will help to restore economic prosperity, much remains to be done. Ontario's job losses over the past couple of years have been high and unemployment has risen to completely unacceptable levels. Ontario's public sector workers largely have been sheltered from those events. In part, this is due to the design of our restraint program. When it became necessary to make an extraordinary effort to hold costs down, the choice was made to preserve employment by placing limits on wage increases rather than requiring major layoffs. I might also point out that with declining inflation a five per cent wage increase is not that bad.

Looking ahead, fiscal realities make it essential to continue to constrain government expenditures. Wage demands in the public sector must continue to moderate. Otherwise, it simply may not be possible to maintain the degree of job security in the future that has been provided to date. Public agencies, municipalities, boards of education, universities, colleges and hospitals—indeed, all bodies financed largely through tax dollars—must be expected to show restraint in their compensation plans. Recipients of provincial funds should not anticipate future increases at levels above, or even at, the rate of inflation.

I should also note that restraint is not a matter for the public sector alone. Recovery will require everyone, whether in the private or public sector, to restrain his demands for higher wages and prices.

Nor can our efforts to constrain government spending be limited to wage restraint. We need to examine carefully all aspects of our expenditures to determine where we can find further improvements in savings or efficiencies. While Ontario's record in holding the line on government expenditure is well known, we intend to redouble our efforts. To do this, we have created a formal program review process to examine all provincial programs to see where savings can be achieved.

As part of this review, each ministry will undertake a thorough reassessment of its programs and priorities and recommend to cabinet where expenditures can be reduced. This exercise will apply to all ministries, including my own. In this regard, I have questioned the usefulness of continuing the Ontario property tax credit now that comprehensive property tax reform has been postponed indefinitely and local taxes account for a lower percentage of personal income than they did in the early 1970s.

Before concluding, I would like to discuss briefly the Canada pension plan. As Treasurer, I constantly must balance the desirability of increasing social benefits with the need to ensure that such increases are not only adequately financed but also delivered through the most appropriate vehicle. These concerns have influenced our reaction to proposals to amend the Canada pension plan and to explain why the government of Ontario has not ratified the so-called child-rearing drop-out amendment.

However, it is clear from the many representations that have been made to the government, particularly from the Ontario Status of Women Council, that the drop-out amendment has the widespread approval of people across Canada. Because of this fact, and with the desire to promote a spirit of goodwill in the pension reform process, the government of Ontario will set aside its longstanding reservations and will remove its veto of the CPP drop-out amendment.

Tomorrow I will initiate the process of formally notifying the federal government of Ontario's decision. Later this year, the new minister with responsibility for women's issues will elaborate further on pension reform measures that will be beneficial to women.

Let me now conclude this budget by summarizing our financial position. A brief review of the past fiscal year again shows this government's sound financial stewardship. The record shows our actual expenditures and revenues were both within 0.7 per cent of the original budget estimates I tabled last May. We accomplished this during one of the most difficult years in the post-war era. This kind of management record is second to none. Moreover, in 1982-83 our deficit in relation to output was the lowest of any province in Canada.

During the course of the previous year, we responded to the many economic and social pressures with in-year expenditure increases of $728 million. These were financed mainly by $562 million in offsets from existing programs. As a result, total expenditures went up by $166 million, or less than one per cent. This enviable expenditure management record was achieved by my colleague the Chairman, Management Board of Cabinet (Mr. McCague).

In 1982-83 we allowed cash reserves to decline rather than borrow at record high interest rates. These reserves will be replenished through an orderly borrowing program in a market that now has more advantageous rates. The recession has also had a considerable impact on government revenues, but overall our revenues were within $150 million of the original forecast. Details of our financial accounts and our in-year changes are presented in appendix C.

In the 1983-84 fiscal year, total provincial revenue is estimated to grow by 7.9 per cent to more than $22 billion. I think Mr. Allan had the first billion-dollar budget, and we have multiplied that a bit. This revenue performance reflects both the forecast upswing of economic activity and the revenue measures I have announced. Provincial spending is expected to grow by 7.7 per cent to $24.7 billion in the current fiscal year. This rate of growth is below that projected for the provincial product.

5:40 p.m.

I have outlined certain revenue measures and the program review process that we have set in place to find ways of further improving government efficiency. I have also indicated that last year we were able to find significant in-year savings. This year I am setting a target now of $300 million of in-year expenditure savings yet to be identified.

Mr. Foulds: What does that mean? All you cabinet ministers applaud that.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Cabinet is sadly lacking in its applause for that one.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. F. S. Miller: In other words, I believe our total expenditures can be reduced by $300 million, and this has been incorporated in our net cash requirements projection. These savings are essentially applied to the job creation programs described earlier.

I estimate net cash requirements for 1983-84 to be $2,695 million. When this deficit is projected in relation to the gross provincial product, it will be lower than last year's level. It will be financed by $2,080 million from nonpublic sources, with the balance from public capital markets.

Of the projected $1 billion to be borrowed publicly, $267 million will be used to retire maturing debt and $118 million will be used to augment the province's liquid reserves. Further details of our fiscal plan are appended to the statement.

Pour conclure, M. le Président, je suis certain que les politiques énoncées dans ce budget soutiendront l'économie ontarienne dans la voie du redressement et de la prospérité à long terme.

Ce budget favorise la coopération fédérale-provinciale.

Il maintient l'augmentation des dépenses gouvernementales en dessous du taux de croissance de l'économie.

Il stimule les investissements des entreprises et la création d'emplois.

Il contrôle le déficit.

Il limite l'augmentation des primes d'assurance-maladie à cinq pour cent.

Il accélère la mise en chantier de nouveaux travaux d'immobilisations d'une valeur de $247 millions.

Il crée 100,000 emplois cette année pour les jeunes.

Il lance des mesures pour améliorer la formation de la main-d'œuvre.

Il aide les jeunes agriculteurs et les locataires.

Il offre un encouragement fiscal immédiat pour l'achat d'appareils ménagers et d'ameublement.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I am confident the policies in this budget will assist the Ontario economy on its path to recovery and long-term prosperity.

[Applause]

Hon. F. S. Miller: You can applaud longer. I am running slow.

This budget fosters federal-provincial co-operation.

It holds the increase in government spending below the growth rate of the economy.

It stimulates business investment and job creation.

It holds the deficit in check.

It limits Ontario health insurance plan premiums to a five per cent increase.

It accelerates $247 million of new capital projects.

It creates 100,000 jobs for youth this year.

It initiates measures to improve manpower training.

It helps young farmers and renters.

It provides an immediate tax incentive for the purchase of appliances and furniture.

This budget continues to build upon our record of rock-solid financial stewardship. It is a budget that will assist the restoration of growth and prosperity in our beloved Ontario, a province that will long continue to profit from the leadership of the Premier (Mr. Davis).

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, we would be interested in seeing the budget the Treasurer would have presented if the Premier had moved on to greener fields.

On motion by Mr. T. P. Reid, the debate was adjourned.

The House adjourned at 5:47 p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

Thursday, May 12, 1983

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

ESTIMATES

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, I have a message from the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor signed by his own hand.

Mr. Speaker: The Lieutenant Governor transmits estimates of certain sums required for the services of the province for the year ending March 31, 1984, and recommends them to the Legislative Assembly. Signed under his own hand, Toronto, May 12, 1983.

ESTIMATES TIMETABLE

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that after the usual consultation I am tabling the sequence, location and time allocations for this year's estimates, which members will, I expect, find attached to today's Hansard and tomorrow's Orders and Notices [see appendix, page 691].

VISITOR

Mr. Williams: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege: Before we start the question period, I would like to draw to your attention that we have in the Speaker's gallery with us today a former member of the Legislature, a quiet-spoken, introverted member who used to represent Eglinton riding, Len Reilly.

Mr. Speaker: It is always a pleasure to welcome one of my constituents as well.

ORAL QUESTIONS

JOB CREATION

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, I will let the Treasurer take his seat. I have a question concerning his budget. It deals with unemployment or employment, depending on how one wants to talk about it. The Treasurer prefers to talk about employment, even though many other people see the problem in terms of unemployment. In any event, his prediction in his budget is that 1983 will be some 65,000 above the level for the fourth quarter of 1982 in terms of employment. However, employment growth will not begin to reduce the number of unemployed unless it exceeds the labour force growth, as I am sure he will agree.

The budget forecast labour force growth of some 56,000, year over year in our estimate would mean an increase of some 86,000 in terms of fourth quarter to fourth quarter. When one nets that out, what it says, according to the minister's figures, is that fourth quarter over fourth quarter he is going to have 20,000 more unemployed people. What that says is we are not keeping pace in terms of unemployment; we are going backwards. Why would he consider his budget an adequate response to this most critical problem?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I tried to point out we reached the trough of the recession somewhere between November and December. It was during December that the number of employed started to grow. I realize we can play with the employed and the unemployed. I can only use one as a given constant or sure figure, and that is the number at work. The number in the work force tends to move in and out according to a number of factors.

As the member correctly stated, the 65,000 is what we currently estimate to be the improvement December over December. I suspect the 56,000 he talks about is mid-year over mid-year. I would have to compare the December over December figures to check them to see if they coincide with the same time frames. We estimated 1.2 per cent growth in the work force this year, if I am not wrong, and we have roughly 4.5 million in the work force at the present time. Does that sound right to the member? So we are not far off. One per cent would be 45,000. I think his figure of 56,000 is about right.

Over almost the last decade, Ontario has coped with a faster-than-world growth rate in the labour force. It is just now starting to taper off as the baby boom moves through the work force. I suspect in two or three years the natural growth in the work force will start to decline below the one per cent figure. I can only say we are doing our best—and we are doing our best—to stimulate jobs in the private sector and to give some short-term training and jobs, particularly to the group that is between 20 and 29 where unemployment is heaviest.

Mr. Peterson: Even with the minister's stimulation programs for the private sector and small business, and even with his direct job creation program—taking all that into account and using any figures he wants to use, be it year by year or quarter by quarter—we are going to have more unemployed people in 1983 than we did in 1982. Fourth quarter to fourth quarter there will be 20,000 more unemployed young people.

According to the statistical rates, it was a 9.8 per cent average in 1982. The minister's figures say 11.7 per cent overall in 1983, an increase in real numbers of some 93,000 more unemployed in 1983 than in 1982. When one compares that with his so-called job creation program, netting out the carryovers and netting out some of the strange allocations, he has increased his funding in direct terms by some 5.1 per cent.

Surely, given the magnitude of this problem, this is not an adequate response to this most severe problem which, according to him, is going to stay with us for some considerable length of time in the future.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I did not detect a question, Mr. Speaker.

2:10 p.m.

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, because the Treasurer tells us and we accept that the number of people entering the work force in Ontario is going to be growing rapidly, and since the vast majority of those people are young people and we already have over 200,000 young people unemployed in this province, I would like to ask the Treasurer how he can possibly justify putting only $36 million more into youth employment in this province and only 28,000 new jobs. That is a blasted disgrace. How can he justify it to the young people of this province?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I am sure I would be as happy as the member for Windsor-Riverside to see all those problems disappear. I suggest we are taking what I consider ample and important measures.

The member tends to forget there are two levels of government working on this. One of the reasons I took some time—and I said I would take some time bringing my budget in—was to complement what I hoped were federal measures. I believe there are some there.

I do not like the projection of unemployed that we currently have; I sincerely hope it will turn out to be wrong. I assume at the moment it is correct because I have no better figures to offer, but we are doing our best at this difficult time to solve those problems.

Mr. Peterson: I suggest the Treasurer is not doing his best. He is forecasting higher unemployment and he is passively accepting that. There are a lot of credibility problems with respect to the last forecast, of which I will remind the Treasurer.

He told us a year ago that employment would increase by 125,000; in fact it fell by 209,000, a difference of some 334,000 jobs. After he told us the government would spend $91 million on youth unemployment last year to create 93,000 jobs, he in fact spent considerably less than that and created only some 75,000 jobs.

How does the Treasurer expect us to take his forecast seriously when we remind him of his old forecast? I remind him that in November he told us the Canada-Ontario employment development program would create some 30,000 jobs in his budget, and the ministry now tells us it created fewer than 24,000 jobs.

The Treasurer said the $50-million supplementary employment stimulation fund would be completely spent by March 31, 1983, and now we are informed it is a two-year program and only $30 million was spent last year.

How can we take even his very pessimistic forecast seriously this year when he was so absolutely wrong in every respect for the last year?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I suppose that is the very reason the Leader of the Opposition should be encouraged. If my forecasting is so bad, perhaps I have overestimated the unemployed. Did he ever stop to think of that? He is not willing to accept them when I make good forecasts; why is he so willing to accept them when they are bad?

CONSUMER CONFIDENCE

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, I have another question for the Treasurer, and it deals with his philosophy of the budget, his view with respect to the importance of stimulating or at least not hindering a return to consumer confidence. This was acknowledged in the throne speech where it said: "Nothing will offer a surer sign of improving economic conditions than the decision by individual consumers to enter the marketplace."

It seems to me the Treasurer has gone out on his way in his budget to abort any so-called consumer-led recovery. Granted he has given some $55 million in sales tax remissions for a short period of time, but while he gives $1 i selected areas, he has taken $7 out of the consumers' hides.

How can he possibly have a consumer-led recovery when he has these very high tax increases on top and he is taking away a lot of disposable income that could theoretically be spent in this consumer-led recovery? How does he reconcile what he has done with the philosophy that he has articulated?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, for a person who lectures me regularly on the size of my deficit, I am surprised the Leader of the Opposition did not take the time to review the care with which the taxes were chosen and the fact that even though the temptation to go to a larger deficit was real, we have shown what most observers in the financial community and the business community have said is a proper balance in a difficult year.

I wish the member could sit, as I did this morning, in the room where the hot line is, where we are answering questions from the public. He would find that indeed the public does believe that $55 million will spur it into making some purchases for furniture. He would find there are very few complaints about this year's budget and that this time around our office has received nothing but calls of congratulations about the budget, one that he is trying to make look bad.

Mr. Peterson: I used to think this was a government led by public opinion polls; now I find out it is a government led by hot-line shows.

How can the Treasurer go on maintaining he is going to have some kind of consumer-led recovery in the light of the statistics I have given him and considering the overwhelming critical opinion, as expressed in the comment that it seems to contradict other measures that make the outcome more uncertain? He is operating at cross purposes. He cannot stimulate by taking away more than he is giving.

Given the fact that the federal Minister of Finance gave him a little lead last week by deferring some of his tax increases until the recovery took hold, why would the Treasurer not follow that lead, if he feels obliged to raise taxes, and defer that for some period of time in the hope that this consumer-led recovery will take some hold on the economy?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I have a couple of points, Mr. Speaker. I think the Leader of the Opposition should look at the most recent sales for department stores in Canada and he will find they have a real growth this year in the latest months shown. It is one of the most encouraging signs we have had about the consumer-led recovery. He should also look at the fact that most of our major automobile manufacturers currently have most of their employees called back, which is an indication of a return to consumer buying.

I suggest the Leader of the Opposition should recognize those facts and realize that things are coming along, rather than dampen that by his kinds of actions. We did nothing on the consumer tax front. We taxed the savings side and the personal income tax; and cut off the tax at $2,178 taxable, leaving 500,000 families in Ontario not taxed, or 500,000 taxpayers not taxed, on that surcharge. That is not considered improper taxation technique.

I would also ask, if he is so proud of the delays in Ottawa, is he just as proud of the $31-billion deficit the federal government has?

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, I suggest to the Treasurer the reason he has only been getting positive calls into his office is that I think he only has one line and it is connected to John Bulloch's office.

I would like to ask the Treasurer whether he realizes, when he mentions the auto sector and says everybody is back to work, that there have been about 35,000 jobs lost in that sector and those people do not have any recall rights any longer.

Does he not also realize that this five per cent surcharge will in fact hurt consumer demand? It takes income away from those people who can least afford to pay that extra tax. Why did he not take a look at other kinds of taxes to distribute fairly the cost of this recession—in other words, tax those people at the highest income level who are not sharing the burden of this recession?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, my friend in the New Democratic Party is trying to draw a fine line. It is true he recommended a surcharge on personal income tax, is it not?

Mr. Rae: Over what amount?

Mr. R. F. Johnston: Thirty-thousand dollars.

Hon. F. S. Miller: We differed with his amount, but it is a tax he recommended.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if one of the people who called in on the Treasurer's hot line was the Minister of Industry and Trade (Mr. Walker). Is the Treasurer aware that his colleague the Minister of Industry and Trade said following the budget, "I don't think taxpayers can take a great deal more without a revolt and it won't take much more to cultivate one"?

Does the Treasurer not think the tax increases he is imposing on consumers, including a 2.4 per cent personal income tax hike disguised as a surtax, will push those very same taxpayers his colleague was talking about to the very brink of revolt?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, my colleague tells me he was talking about Quebec.

2:20 p.m.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I admit that about April 29 each year I feel very much like revolting when I send a cheque to myself, and I suppose all of us who are human feel that way.

All I would say is that, compared to many jurisdictions in the world, we are very fortunate people in Ontario (a) to have a good government, (b) to have good services and (c) to have relatively fair tax systems.

BUDGET MEASURES

Mr. Rae: Mr. Speaker, the Treasurer has told us in his budget that there are going to be fewer people working in 1983 than in 1982. He has told us real consumer spending will be up by less than two per cent, which is "a lower rate than in most previous recoveries." He has said there will be "a further reduction in the level of business investment in fixed capital" in the private sector in Ontario.

Given those three very basic, very straightforward facts, which describe an economy in the grips of a deep recession, how can the Treasurer possibly justify the two main features of his budget, which are, first of all, that taxes are now rising at a more rapid rate than expenditures; and second, that in real dollar terms there has been a very significant decline in public investment and job creation in Ontario? How can he possibly justify those kinds of measures, which are going to do nothing to create jobs and in fact are going to take away jobs from the people of this province?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, my friend the leader of the New Democratic Party does believe somehow that one can deliver services without ever paying for them, without ever taxing. We do not believe that on this side, and that is one of the reasons this government has done such a good job of maintaining its credibility in the world financial markets. We really do not accept the socialist jingoism that there is some way of giving everybody in the world something without in fact destroying the monetary system.

We simply believe we have to tell the facts the way they are. Sure, I would like to put facts in there saying there are more jobs, but we say there will be fewer jobs in total on average this year. Is that dishonest? I should hope that if we show not as rosy a picture, it may be accepted as real.

But the fact remains that the trend is up; that is the fact that is important. The 1.9 per cent real growth is our best estimation. It is based on the current, true, real interest rate of about five per cent.

The honourable member knows and I know that traditionally at the beginning of a recovery interest rates are negative in real terms. It is an exceptionally high rate. It can be changed dramatically by a change in American interest rates. It may happen; it may not. We have assumed it will not; therefore, we have tempered our rate of growth.

I would suggest to the member that it is pretty normal when capacity is running at 60 to 70 per cent that the investment side is not very active. Investment will not come into the economy until the recovery is well under way; I am sure he knows that as a student of economics.

Mr. Rae: If the Treasurer thinks it is somehow responsible to leave three quarters of a million people in this province without any prospect of employment this year, that is a very bizarre and, I would say, even perverse definition of responsibility in Ontario. If that is what it takes to be responsible and respectable, then I am proud to be a member of my party and not a member of that complacent crowd over there.

Mr. Speaker: Question, please.

Mr. Rae: I would simply like to ask the Treasurer, since he has not really responded to this question, given the fact that private investment is down according to his own figures and according to his own arguments, how can he justify a continued cut in capital investment by the public sector when there are people out there waiting to do some work and when there are jobs that so clearly need to be done in this province?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I watched my friend on TV on the night of the budget, repeating a lot of things I did not think were in it—I suppose they may be; I will have to look through it—talking about cuts here and cuts there. A $247-million increase in the capital spending program in addition to that which is normal, in my opinion is not a cut.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, the reality is that the Treasurer's programs have about a five per cent increase, which is less than inflation. In real terms, that is a cut.

Mr. Nixon: The Minister of Industry and Trade (Mr. Walker) got a cut.

Mr. Peterson: That is a cut.

The reality is, and we have to get back to the essential point, the minister is forecasting higher unemployment next year than this year. That means the government and the Treasurer have decided that is not a priority. Why did he make that decision, that he is not prepared to actively attack the unemployment situation?

Hon. F. S. Miller: My colleague assumes I did not, Mr. Speaker. I am simply telling it the way it is. The member does not want to hear the facts. I would like to wipe it off the slate. I challenge him to tell me what he would do to get rid of 500,000 unemployed tomorrow morning.

Mr. Rae: If the Treasurer has his budget, he can turn to page 50 where he will see, "Table 7, Recent Trends in Ontario's Capital Investment. Social investments, 1982-83, $469 million; estimated 1983-84, $458 million." That is a cut. That is less; $458 million is less than $469 million. "Economic investments, $1,660 million in 1982-83; $1,653 million in 1983-84." That is a cut. That is $7 million less.

How can he justify investing less in the social services and less in the economic infrastructure of this province at a time when there are 750,000 people out of work and at a time when on his own admission the consumer recovery is not there and the private sector is not doing the spending on its own?

Hon. F. S. Miller: The member is talking about two different kinds of investment. I was talking about investment by the productive side of society. It is to this figure that I understand the $247 million was added. If the member would look at the bottom, $2,314 million is greater than $2,282 million.

Mr. Rae: If we add the financial assets, the land and miscellaneous, we come up with a figure which is still less than real inflation in Ontario—

Mr. Speaker: Question, please.

Mr. Rae: —but if we look at the economic and social infrastructure, we have a cut. No matter how the Treasurer cuts it, he still has a cut and he cannot turn that around.

FUNDING FOR POLLUTION CONTROL

Mr. Rae: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Treasurer a question with respect to the environment in particular. If he would turn again to the budget—and no matter how he cuts it, he can try to play with the figures all he likes but the figures stand on their own—with respect to the Ministry of the Environment, given there is, admittedly, a very real crisis with respect to pollution in the Niagara River, given that acid rain remains the greatest environmental problem facing the province and much of North America, and given the real problem of cleanup of many of our landfill sites, how can the Treasurer, speaking on behalf of the people of Ontario, justify a $32-million cut in expenditures by the Ministry of the Environment?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I am sure when the ministry's estimates are up, the member will be able to go through them line by line to see where those differences occur. It happens that the ministry has been very actively involved in some major projects around the province. I would like the minister himself to tell the member what his overall investment is as opposed to the previous year. I think he can do that more adequately.

Mr. Rae: With great respect, the Treasurer is responsible for the economic policy of this government. With great respect, he is not going to be able to fob it off on some minister whom he claims is going to give us the answers. Those of us who try to get some answers out of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Norton) know how difficult that is. I think we are entitled to ask the Treasurer about the figures contained here.

Let us look at the economic investment side: "Environment, 1982-83, $318 million; 1983-84, $280 million." Given the things waiting to be done in this province with respect to acid rain, the cleanup of the Niagara River, maintaining a safe water system, the cleanup of the dump sites and an end to industrial pollution, how can he possibly justify the kinds of the cutbacks he is carrying out, given that we still have 750,000 people unemployed?

Hon. F. S. Miller: That is the very kind of question one does ask in estimates rather than to the minister responsible for economic development. But let me point out, using the member's own figures, with $38 million less on the capital side, if I added that back on the general operating costs, which include many of the things he is talking about, the figure would be higher. So I suggest the member wait for the explanation by the minister who has the details of that.

2:30 p.m.

Mr. Elston: Mr. Speaker, during the budget speech the Treasurer mentioned that a further $300 million was to be trimmed from his budget. Can he guarantee those of us who are very sensitive about environmental problems in Ontario that he will not be asking the Minister of the Environment to cut more money from his programs at a time when we know the Ontario Waste Management Corp. requires extra funds to deal with its project and there are serious problems with the water tower systems of many small municipalities which the Ministry of the Environment must repair? Can the Treasurer guarantee that the Minister of the Environment will not have to forgo money for those very necessary and emergency programs with respect to the environment in Ontario?

Hon. F. S. Miller: With great respect, Mr. Speaker, it is intriguing to me that this is the day the honourable member asks me to spend more, but most of his party colleagues' speeches will be aimed at the government's alleged waste of money. That is exactly what I hear all around the province. When those fellows return to their own ridings, they do not say, "We asked them to spend more," but, "Why did they spend so much? Why did they run such a poor government?"

I am sure my colleague the Minister of the Environment can and will answer those questions. The member knows he will have his crack at him, because he does it every year.

Mr. Elston: I asked you about the $300 million.

Hon. F. S. Miller: The member cannot suck and blow at the same time. Right now, that is what he is doing; he is talking in class.

Mr. Charlton: Mr. Speaker, considering our rate of unemployment and the need for capital expenditure in the area of the environment, how can the Treasurer possibly justify cuts in the capital expenditure area? How does he think that will be viewed, both by the public in Ontario and by our American neighbours, with whom we are trying to negotiate an increase in capital expenditure in terms of pollution abatement?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I am glad the honourable member talks about our American neighbours. Compared to any neighbouring state, our track record in cleaning up the environment is absolutely superb.

PUBLIC DEBT

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, the Treasurer wants to talk about the debt; so perhaps we can. I am sure he is aware that the public debt has increased from $17.6 billion in the 1981-82 fiscal year to $22.5 billion in the 1982-83 fiscal year, an increase of 27.6 per cent in two years. He is aware that we owe $2,555 for every man, woman and child in this province.

What we are talking about here are the Treasurer's priorities. Can he tell us how he can justify this increase in debt, which is not providing jobs for the people of Ontario? In fact, the Treasurer's own figures indicate unemployment will increase at the same time the public debt is going up. Obviously we are not seeing any results from that increased public debt.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, is that not nice? I hope I can tie this question in with the comment of the honourable member's leader that I was not spending enough. The member is telling me I have too big a debt and his leader is saying I should not raise taxes. How do I put those two questions together? Why did I raise taxes? Why did I let the debt go up? Seriously, what would the members over there do?

The last time there was a Liberal government in this province—thank God it is 40 years ago; it will be another 40 until there is another one, and I hope the New Democrats do not get in in between—we were left with four years' revenue-debt ratio. They left us with four years of debt compared to revenue. We have one year. We have improved it by one quarter.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Obviously the Treasurer did not listen carefully to the question. We are talking about priorities. We are not complaining about the size of the deficit if it is providing jobs for the people of Ontario. We are complaining that the deficit is for Suncor, advertising, Minaki Lodge and all that stuff. That is what we are complaining about.

The government's fiscal mismanagement over the past 10 years of the Premier's (Mr. Davis) reign means the Treasurer can increase the deficit to deal with the unemployment problems we have in this province right now.

No doubt Mr. Kaufman was the one who was crying on the phone about the Treasurer's present difficulties. Can the Treasurer tell us what is the advice from his financial experts as to how high or far the provincial deficit can go without endangering our credit rating, about which the Treasurer is so concerned?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I am so glad the member mentioned Minaki because I understand his brother got elected on Minaki.

Interjections.

Hon. F. S. Miller: What is sauce for the goose ought to be—

Mr. T. P. Reid: Oh no he didn't.

Hon. F. S. Miller: He did not, eh? I think he supported Minaki; did he not?

Hon. Mr. McCague: Oh, yes, he did.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: He is a big hero around there.

Hon. F. S. Miller: He is a big hero up there and we are glad to get the comments back.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Does the member ever talk to his brother?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I wish the member would turn to page 46 of the budget. If he looks at the little bar chart he will see that in terms of deficit per person, Ontario is the lowest in Canada. He does not like that figure, does he?

Mr. Martel: Where is your unemployment rate?

Hon. F. S. Miller: That is Alberta. It is the highest in Canada. Whether the member likes it or not, Ontario's economy is recovering faster than any other province's in Canada. A lot of them are pretty envious of us right now.

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Treasurer about this year's deficit. I would like to ask him why he decided to use an approach which I believe really lacks honesty. He presents the deficit at $2.6 billion when it is really $3 billion because there are $300 million worth of cuts in expenditures still to come in Ontario. Why did he not present an honest budget that either had those cuts already in the estimates or a budget that presented the $3-billion deficit that really exists now?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, last year when we gave our revenue and our expenditure estimates, each was within 0.7 per cent of being accurate. That was the best track record in Canada. We found over $700 million of adjustments in the year and the member wonders if I cannot find $300 million with the help of this highly qualified team behind me.

Mr. Cooke: The point is the Treasurer and the Minister of Health (Mr. Grossman) go out one day and say they are going to give big grants to the hospitals and they get all sorts of good publicity and the next day they cut those grants back. It lacks honesty.

Mr. Speaker: Question, please.

ONTARIO PROPERTY TAX CREDIT

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Treasurer to explain what he meant by the statement on page 20 of his budget. In talking about program review he says, "In this regard I have questioned the usefulness of continuing the Ontario property tax credit now that comprehensive property tax reform has been postponed indefinitely."

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to. The member asked me all last week for an open approach to tax reform. I am asking, as I have in three previous budgets, a basic question about the wisdom of a particular program.

I will have a full year of input, I hope, between now and the time I have to respond. Next year I, as Treasurer, will be quite glad to decide whether or not we need that property tax reform after I have heard the reaction of the municipalities and the people of this province.

Mr. Cooke: I would like to quote from the 1972 budget presented by Mr. McKeough, where he introduced the property tax credit. "Our property tax credit plan has one primary objective: to produce a fairer and more progressive distribution of the property tax burden borne by individuals and families in Ontario."

Without property tax reform in this province, how can the Treasurer even flag the possibility of eliminating the property tax credit which to some small degree eliminates some of the regressiveness of that property tax?

Hon. F. S. Miller: To ask about the appropriateness of a program is not automatically to eliminate that program. We asked about the appropriateness of personal income tax and did not change it. We asked about the appropriateness of the Ontario health insurance plan and did not change it. We are asking about the appropriateness of this tax and we want to see what people think.

Unlike the member's group, we listen before we act.

2:40 p.m.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, obviously this is again going to hit those who can least afford it in our society. Could I recall to the Treasurer the statement: "Our property tax credit plan has one primary objective: to produce a fairer and more progressive distribution of the property tax burden borne by individuals and families in Ontario. It will replace the basic shelter grants that have been in effect since 1968 and deliver relief from the regressive property tax according to individual needs."

Is the Treasurer repudiating that philosophy, which seemed to everyone who was in the House at the time to be a reasonable and fair one?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Of course not, Mr. Speaker, but I think the points made were, one, it was expected there would be a comprehensive property tax reform; that has not occurred. Second, it also appeared to be a shift towards the municipal taxpayer of the tax burden. In the last four or five years that has been reversed. We have to look at the total share of taxes, of income paid at the property tax level, to determine if it is fair.

We have been lowering that share through very progressive grants from Ontario.

ASSISTANCE TO FARMERS

Mr. Riddell: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture and Food. I am sure the minister was as disappointed as I was in the Treasurer's obvious lack of commitment to the agricultural industry, with the exception of a regurgitated promise to start a credit program for beginning farmers.

In view of the fact that farmers who are in the most serious financial difficulty are the beginning farmers, those who have entered the industry in the last few years, can the minister tell us whether the reannounced beginning farmers program will be made retroactive to include these recent entrants into the agricultural industry? How does the minister intend to help those farmers? Will eligible loans for subsidy under the program include those secured through banks, trust companies and supply companies, as well as the Farm Credit Corp.?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, contrary to the point of view of the honourable member—which is not surprising; I would not expect anything positive from him—my colleague the Treasurer has been extremely co-operative and extremely supportive of agriculture at this time. In a couple of weeks' time when we get down to looking at the estimates of the ministry, one need only look at 1982, when the Treasurer provided significant assistance to agriculture, whether through assistance to the Crop Insurance Commission of Ontario, or through the farmstead improvement program or in any number of ways.

The pledge that is evidenced in the budget address of 48 hours ago is very significant in terms of the numbers of young farmers we anticipate will be assisted by it. I am sure it bothers the member that the program commitment has been so well received by members of the farm community. They appreciate how significant it is. I expect to announce the details of the program in the next three or four weeks.

Mr. Riddell: In view of the fact there was no announcement in the budget for any financial assistance for the Ontario Veterinary College which, as the minister well knows, is in desperate need of funds and which has recently had its accreditation reduced for the first time since its beginning in 1922; in view of the fact that the quality and training provided by the college has a direct impact on the viability and competitiveness of the agricultural industry; and in view of the fact that the Quebec budget, also given on Tuesday last, promised $402.2 million to the farmers in that province as opposed to $295 million in the Ontario budget, how can our farmers hope to remain competitive with this lack of commitment?

Will the minister at least assure us that increased funding for the veterinary college will be announced, as part of the $8.4 million allocation for agriculture, under the new capital acceleration program?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I am not sure that is entirely supplementary to the first question, but I am happy to answer it. I am also happy to answer it in some detail, so I will apologize now for what may be—

Mr. Speaker: Briefly, please.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: All right. I would take the member back to the last accreditation report of the Ontario Veterinary College. At that time they identified essentially two kinds of problems: one being the capital needs of the college the other being the operating needs with respect to clinical services. Just over a year ago, I went to the University of Guelph and announced that my colleagues had given me the authority to commit an additional $1.8 million per year to be devoted to clinical services, particularly for the externship program. That $1.8 million was the amount, to the penny, that Guelph itself had calculated was required to address the clinical service problems brought out in the last accreditation review.

At that time, the president of the university and others said, "Yes, but there is this capital problem we have." Fortunately, I knew at the time that in the spring of 1982 the University of Guelph had placed the Ontario Veterinary College as number seven on its list of capital priorities. I said to them quite frankly: "If it is that serious, why is it not number one? It cannot be that serious or it would be."

Since then I have met with the administration of the university several times. As a result of those meetings it is now number one on the list. Since then, I have also met on several occasions with my colleague in Ottawa, Mr. Whelan, urging him to get a commitment from his colleagues in the federal government to do their part, as in the past, in addressing the capital needs of the OVC.

I do have a commitment from my colleagues the Minister of Colleges and Universities (Miss Stephenson), the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) and the Chairman of Management Board (Mr. McCague) that Ontario is prepared to put up its 50 per cent of the cost of beginning to address the capital needs of the Ontario Veterinary College and to do it this year. We will be approaching the federal government to get its commitment to do likewise and to start this year to plan for that.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, recognizing that regardless of how the minister cuts it there is going to be a substantial reduction in Ontario's agricultural budget this year—the minister shakes his head, but of course there is—will he assure this House that this beginning farmers program of $9 million this year and the additional moneys next year will not come out of any regular farm program or any assistance program, but will be new money going into that program?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, the money committed by my colleague the Treasurer in the estimates of the Ministry of Agriculture and Food for the beginning farmers assistance program is new money. I want to say to my friend we can get into it in estimates again starting June 1. We went through a similar exercise last fall. In fact, the spending by the ministry, the base estimates of the ministry, are higher this year than they were last year.

I remind the member we put significant amounts of money into crop insurance in 1982, especially for the tobacco growers of this province, which had not been budgeted for and which put us well beyond the printed estimates of the ministry.

I anticipate that, Lord forbid, if we were to face a similar tragedy of nature in 1983, the support would again be there from my colleagues in the cabinet, as it has been in the past.

FUNDING FOR NORTHERN ONTARIO

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Treasurer. Is he fully aware of these three factors in his budget as they affect northern Ontario:

1. The Ministry of Northern Affairs expenditures are apparently slashed by $22 million, if table C3 on page 59 is correct.

2. The natural resources centre he announced with such pride is to be located right across the street at the University of Toronto when the vast majority of our natural resources are in northern Ontario. That centre is not to be located at Sudbury or Thunder Bay.

3. There were absolutely no specific details in funding to back up the throne speech promise on page 8 which was, "Specifically, we can expect assistance to single-industry communities in northern Ontario."

Can the Treasurer tell us whether this neglect of the north was deliberate or simple political insensitivity and stupidity?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I want to say one thing. As long as my colleague the Minister of Northern Affairs (Mr. Bernier) is in his present position, which will be a long time, the member will never need to worry about political insensitivity to northern Ontario. Would I had the same ability when it comes to getting dollars out of the government of Ontario.

The member should look at the two special projects in last year's budget. He should recognize we put a lot of money into Minaki and into the Detour Lake road. They were two specific projects.

The member should also understand that he is trying to make it look as though a brand new centre is being created where nothing exists. At the University of Toronto they are amalgamating a number of parts of campus activities that have been spread all over the place in old buildings into one convenient location, in modernized buildings, not necessarily new buildings.

I hope the Minister of Colleges and Universities (Miss Stephenson) can discuss that at greater length, but it in no way takes away from the quality of the courses at Lakehead or at Sudbury, and the member knows that.

2:50 p.m.

Mr. Foulds: Is the minister telling me there are no special projects for northern Ontario in this year's budget to replace Minaki? Is he telling me the so-called natural resources centre is nothing new, that it is simply an amalgamation of old stuff that is already located at the University of Toronto? Finally, will he answer my question about the specific promise for help for single-industry towns in the throne speech, which was not delivered in the budget?

Hon. F. S. Miller: How many questions can I answer, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: One.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I find it astounding to have the member for Port Arthur telling me I should replace the money spent on Minaki after listening to him complain about it for so long.

Mr. Van Horne: Mr. Speaker, the government through the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Timbrell) indicated some time earlier this year that there would be new initiatives for the agricultural industry in northern Ontario. We cannot find evidence of that in the budget. Would the Treasurer care to comment on that?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, the member knows it is quite proper to ask the specific minister about that. I do not see that as a supplementary.

TELEVISION IN LEGISLATURE

Mr. Bradley: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs in his capacity as government House leader on the televising of the proceedings of this House. Members of the House will know that on Tuesday we could not move around this building for television cameras. There were two what looked like permanent cameras here and here. There were a large number of cameras along the gallery, out in the hallway, all around this House. Those cameras are always here, Mr. Speaker, as you know, for the two premier events the government brings forward, the throne speech and the budget speech. There is great coverage of that, and nothing now, of course.

I am aware this is a subject of discussion and negotiation, and my question to the minister is this. In the interests of balance, fairness and accessibility to the proceedings of this House for the people of this province, will he give an undertaking as government House leader, and can he tell us the views of the Premier (Mr. Davis), his leader, on the televising of all the proceedings of this House at the earliest opportunity?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, if my friend will talk to his colleague to the left he will understand, as I am sure the Speaker will also be able to tell him, that this matter is being discussed by the Board of Internal Economy next Monday. All views will be presented then. We will have a chance to have a full discussion about the use of television, electronic Hansard, whatever one wants to call it, in this House.

I also want to say that the camera will be here. There was a guarantee the camera would be here. We are so fair that we have given up having the camera over there for the presentations of the members opposite. There will just be a camera over here. It will be appearing soon.

Since we were all sitting here and did not have an opportunity to view the presentation, I might say there was no live television coverage of the Treasurer's budget the other day, and that bothers me. The cameras were in here, but it was not what went on in this House that went out over television.

Mr. Bradley: I should note in my supplementary that the House leader of the Ontario Liberal Party indicated that is exactly the answer the government House leader would give me. He was anticipating that.

I know there are negotiations going on. I know the Board of Internal Economy is discussing this matter. What I am asking the government House leader and his Premier is whether they are prepared to say they will endorse the full proceedings of this House being televised in this meeting. Are they prepared to endorse that? Are they prepared to give it their okay? If they do, it is guaranteed to go through and at long last the people of this province will have access to the other legislative chamber that exists in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I do not play cards very much, but when I do get into a game I do not turn over my cards and show them until I really get into the game.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Martel: What did you feed the seals today?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Martel: I don't know what you fed the seals, but they are working well.

Mr. Speaker, given that we could utilize TVOntario to carry question period, since we have some responsibility in this area, and seeing that the select committee recommended as early as 1976 proper television coverage for the zoo, can we have some assurance that, as part of the package that is being contemplated, television so that question period, the budget and the throne speech will be carried live to the people of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Wells: First of all, let us be very clear about this. Television is in this House. I do not know what all that is up there in the gallery. Television is in this House, and with the agreement of the Speaker at any time those cameras can appear, these lights can come on and any proceeding of this House can be televised. So the question is not whether we should have television here or not; it is the manner and form of the television.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Wells: We have agreed to discuss this at a meeting that I think is next Monday, and I think it is really very premature to discuss anybody's views on this until we get in and have a discussion at your committee, Mr. Speaker.

INCOME TAX SURCHARGE

Mr. R. F. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Treasurer, and it applies to his social services maintenance tax or surtax.

The Treasurer will know that the surtax we talked about was on taxable incomes of over $40,000; that is where it would start. How does he explain this tax as being at all fair and exempting the poor when somebody who earns $3.70 an hour will have to pay this tax and when a family that has an income of $12,500 a year will have to pay this tax? How can he possibly accept the notion that somebody who is getting the average amount of unemployment insurance payments in this province of $155.93 a week will have to pay this tax? Is this not a regressive tax?

Hon. F. S. Miller: No, it is not, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: I find it hard to believe that the Treasurer would answer in such a cavalier fashion.

Will the Treasurer please comment on this strange anomaly? Even under his elusive premium assistance plan, which the member for Bellwoods (Mr. McClellan) raises a lot of the time around here, one can be eligible to receive premium assistance if the taxable family income is less than $3,500 a year, yet his surtax will apply to people who have a taxable income of $2,178 a year. How is it that somebody can be too poor to pay his Ontario health insurance plan premiums but not too poor to pay the Treasurer's surtax?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Not all taxes take over at the same level. I am sure the member knows that. For example, sales tax, which he considers progressive most days of the week, has no such exemption, but we do have our credit on the income tax form. I simply say that we have a very wide range of carefully balanced taxes in this province producing revenue in fair and proportioned ways.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, does the minister not feel that even naming a tax a social services maintenance tax adds to the stigma of those unfortunate people who are unemployed and on welfare assistance right now? Would it not have been more appropriate to call any surtax the Minaki Lodge fiasco tax, the land banking vision tax or the Suncor interest maintenance payments tax?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I do not really think the honourable member was expecting a serious answer.

3 p.m.

ARENA FUNDING

Mr. Van Horne: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry and Trade.

Press reports in the past five months reflect a determination on his behalf to prevent the city of London from getting a grant to help it build a new arena in the south end of the city. Will he explain why he is trying to use his influence as a cabinet minister to interfere with the affairs of the city of London?

Hon. Mr. Walker: First of all, Mr. Speaker, that is a question that does not pertain directly to the Ministry of Industry and Trade. However, I am prepared to answer it if you desire that I answer something beyond my own particular field.

Mr. Speaker: Briefly.

Hon. Mr. Walker: The short of it is that I have the right as the local MPP to express an opinion about anything that may occur in the city of London involving provincial funding. This particular matter involves provincial funding.

Mr. Van Horne: I thank the Speaker for ruling as he did, because in one of the press reports I have in front of me the minister is making reference to public money putting a business out of business and he was speaking in reference to his position as the minister.

The minister and the member for Middlesex (Mr. Eaton) are on record as trying to get the city to buy Hockeyland, a facility that is out in the township and is owned by a Mr. Skinner. I wonder whether this is the same Mr. Skinner who gave the minister a significant amount of money in his election campaign; if this is so, is this not a conflict of interest?

Hon. Mr. Walker: It certainly is, and I think it is the same man who also gave some money to some of the other candidates in the London area. The honourable member might like to check that out.

ASSISTANCE TO FARMERS

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Treasurer. It does not matter what kind of excuses are given; the fact is that the amount he has in his budget for agriculture in constant dollars is 19 per cent lower than it was last year.

We know that the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Timbrell) has given the excuse that there was an extraordinary expenditure for insurance to tobacco growers last year. If that is the reason, how does the Treasurer explain that the amount he has in his budget for agriculture this year is 13 per cent lower in constant dollars than it was two years ago when that payment was not paid to the tobacco farmers?

With the amount of mortgage and loan payments in default by farmers being 50 per cent higher in March of this year than it was a year ago, the impending disaster in the farm community is every bit as great as it was last year, although it may be more spread out and not just involving the tobacco farmers. How does he justify that tremendous decrease in the amount for agriculture?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, there is probably a difference between the actual expenditures and the printed estimates, and I think one should always look at the printed estimates before the year began. The honourable member will realize that in each of the last two and possibly three years there have been fairly heavy extraordinary, one-time-only payments made in Agriculture and Food.

I have no idea whether there will be some calamity this year requiring similar extraordinary payments. We have shown the flexibility to meet them in the year when they were needed.

Mr. Swart: Does the minister not feel the fact that farmers are in default in their payments in an amount 50 per cent higher than last year is already a calamity and an indication of an impending disaster?

Is he unaware of what Ralph Barrie, the president of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, said about his program? Mr. Barrie said he criticized the Treasurer for failing to address the credit needs of Ontario's 40,000 to 50,000 established farmers. "This program doesn't do a bloody thing for those people," he said. Can the minister deny that?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I have great respect for Mr. Barrie. I would like to have a chat with him before I react to the member's quote out of context.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, is it not a fact that farmers in Quebec get assistance to the tune of $9,000 a year while the Treasurer assists farmers in Ontario in the order of $3,000 a year? How can he expect farmers from eastern Ontario to compete with their counterparts in that neighbouring province when from the start there is a $6,000 difference in the assistance they will get from government?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, the farmer in Quebec pays a 40 per cent tax on his gasoline too. The farmer in Quebec, if he makes any income, pays a much higher income tax. The farmer in Quebec is faced with a government that has not run its funds too well. The farmer in Quebec receives, through the federal government, equalization payments of almost $3 billion a year, mostly from Ontario.

NOTICE OF DISSATISFACTION

Mr. R. F. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order: Pursuant to standing order 28(a), I wish to advise you of my dissatisfaction with the response of the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) to my question on the social services maintenance tax.

Mr. Speaker: Thank you.

[Later]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Cousens): Pursuant to standing order 28, the member for Scarborough West has given notice of his dissatisfaction with the answer to his question given by the Treasurer and Minister of Economics concerning the social services maintenance tax. This matter will be debated at 10:30 p.m.

MOTIONS

ESTIMATES

Hon. Mr. Wells moved that notwithstanding any previous order of the House, the estimates as they are presented to the House be referred to the standing committees as indicated in the estimates statement tabled earlier today.

Motion agreed to.

STANDING COMMITTEE ON RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT

Hon. Mr. Wells moved that the standing committee on resources development be authorized to sit the afternoon of Wednesday, June 1, 1983.

Motion agreed to.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

SMITH BROS. & SONS LIMITED ACT

Mr. Kells moved, seconded by Mr. Kolyn, first reading of Bill Pr24, An Act to revive Smith Bros. & Sons Builders Limited.

Motion agreed to.

ONTARIO LOAN ACT, 1983

Hon. F. S. Miller moved, seconded by Hon. Mr. Wells, first reading of Bill 34, An Act to authorize the Raising of Money on the Credit of the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

Motion agreed to.

TOBACCO TAX AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Ashe moved, seconded by Hon. Mr. Bernier, first reading of Bill 35, An Act to amend the Tobacco Tax Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Ashe: Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for the amendments arising out of the Treasurer's budget of May 10, 1983, as well as for some administrative amendments.

The bill increases the rate of tax on cigarettes and cut tobacco from 40 to 45 per cent of their retail prices. This change, which is effective May 11, 1983, brings the applicable tax to 2.3 cents per cigarette and to 1.4 per cent per gram or part of a gram of cut tobacco and all other tobacco products, except cigars. The tax rate on cigars remains unchanged at 45 per cent.

3:10 p.m.

SMALL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT CORPORATIONS AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Ashe moved, seconded by Hon. Mr. Bernier, first reading of Bill 36, An Act to amend the Small Business Development Corporations Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Ashe: Mr. Speaker, this bill implements amendments arising out of the Treasurer's budget of May 10, 1983, as well as some administrative amendments.

The bill limits the maximum investment in any one project by one or more small business development corporations to $5 million. The eligibility requirements for an investment by a small business development corporation have also been amended. The administrative amendments contained in the bill enact certain policies required in the effective administration of the act.

RETAIL SALES TAX AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Ashe moved, seconded by Hon. Mr. Bernier, first reading of Bill 37, An Act to amend the Retail Sales Tax Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Ashe: Mr. Speaker, this bill contains the changes to the Retail Sales Tax Act announced in the 1983 budget as well as some administrative amendments.

The bill provides for a temporary exemption for new residential furniture and major household appliances. It broadens the exemption for machinery and equipment purchased by manufacturers and producers and for certain transportation vehicles and equipment. In addition, the bill eliminates the exemption for tobacco products. The tax on beverage alcohol sold at retail outlets will increase from 10 per cent to 12 per cent, effective May 24, 1983.

Other budgetary changes include the expansion of exemptions concerning alternative-fueled vehicles, admissions to places of amusement, certain gold coins and educational publications. The majority of the proposed administrative amendments are aimed to update and revise a number of penalty provisions, which should help in deterring noncompliance and the ensuing loss of provincial tax revenues.

CORPORATIONS TAX AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Ashe moved, seconded by Hon. Mr. Bernier, first reading of Bill 38, An Act to amend the Corporations Tax Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Ashe: Mr. Speaker, the bill contains amendments arising out of the Treasurer's budget of May 10, 1983, as well as some administrative amendments.

The budgetary measures being implemented by this bill include the increase in the income tax rate by one percentage point, the extension of income tax exemptions for small businesses by one year and the temporary capital tax relief for "loss" corporations.

INFLATION RESTRAINT AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Peterson moved, seconded by Mr. Nixon, first reading of Bill 39, An Act to amend the Inflation Restraint Act.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, these are amendments to Bill 179, which passed in the last session. They would make the bill more equitable and fair for everyone concerned.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, before calling the orders of the day, I might ask the table to keep the time allotments for the contributions this afternoon. It has been agreed to split the time remaining from now until six o'clock between the two speakers.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I rise to present the official opposition's views on the 1983 budget of the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller). We intend to be very positive in our remarks and in putting forward our views on what should have been in the Treasurer's budget.

We in this party agree with some of the budgetary measures proposed by the Treasurer, particularly the extension of the tax holiday for small businesses and those matters that parallel the federal initiatives in terms of the carryback and carry-forward losses and profits relating to corporations. We agree with those measures fully.

Last year's budget was a budget of sins of commission, particularly the extension of the retail sales tax. This budget can be largely criticized as a budget in which the sins are of omission. That is primarily what I want to talk about.

In this party we are concerned about the fact that the Treasurer is predicting an unemployment rate of more than 11 per cent for the next year. That concerns us very deeply, especially when we put that in conjunction with the highest deficit and highest budget we have ever had in this province. Yet we do not see the jobs being created with those tax dollars that are being spent.

More than that, our concern is that the economic future of Ontario is not dealt with in this document at all. We were told by both the Premier (Mr. Davis) and the Treasurer that this was the economic statement of the year as far as charting Ontario's course went. If this is the budget and the economic document that is going to give some hope to the people of the province, some vision of the future, it is not just sadly lacking, but completely lacking. The budget should have told us where this province wants to be in five, 10 and 20 years. This budget has refused to face the future squarely.

A Liberal government would have seized this opportunity to position ourselves for the future, for the rest of the 1980s. Strategies concerning productivity, research and development, human resource management and the careful husbanding of our natural resources are the cornerstones of the Ontario Liberal policy. Government has a role to play in ensuring orderly change in society. Uncertainty about the future destroys the individual's ability to make long-range plans.

As I mentioned, the government has made some constructive changes in this budget, but these good points are lost in a myriad of ad hoc and piecemeal changes. Can the government tell us today what the long-term strategy is for this province? Can we claim that this government's stewardship, typified by this document, is leaving the proper legacy to our children? Unfortunately, the government has stopped running in place and has started only to walk in place.

I want to deal with only about four or five items. I particularly want to talk about productivity in the context of charting a course for Ontario for the 1980s.

Productivity has been defined in a number of ways, usually as the output per man-hour, mostly in terms of labour input and output. But productivity is not a problem of laziness of our work force. Productivity is not simply high technology, as the Treasurer would have us believe. Productivity is efficiency; it is what our performance is.

I have tried to engage the Treasurer both in terms of last year's budget and in terms of his estimates in dealing with productivity and the Ontario economy. I suppose I can take some small measure of consolation from the fact that he mentioned the word once in this budget, but that is all.

Productivity is efficiency and productivity is competitiveness. How we can have a budget document, the main economic blueprint for Ontario, and not deal with these crucial matters is beyond me, especially when we all know Ontario and Canada have one of the worst demonstrations of productivity of any western democracy. We should have been discussing this. The Treasurer should have recommended that there be a discussion paper on this issue more than anything else.

What should be done in terms of productivity? There probably should be some system of tax incentives for those who can improve productivity, there should be an expanded definition of research and development and we should be paralleling some of the incentives at the federal level.

With the shifting industrial structure, it is imperative for Canada and Ontario to establish and maintain a comparative advantage in as many sectors as possible, not only in secondary industry but also in primary industry. A comparative advantage does not simply happen by itself. Planning and hard work develop one's strengths and enable one to capitalize on potential opportunities. That is what the budget does not do. We have no plan to emphasize our strengths and we will not be able to capitalize on our opportunities.

Productivity and research and development are crucial elements in an overall strategy vision for Ontario in the 1980s. Let us take advantage of what we have and what we can have. A misconception exists that Ontario's poor productivity performance is due to employee laziness. For instance, people might say Canadians are not working as hard as the Japanese or the West Germans. That is simply not the case.

Productivity is not simply high technology. Another misconception that is reinforced by the Treasurer is that productivity is simply incorporating high technology into the production process, i.e., computer-aided design/computer-aided manufacturing robotics. This is true in many respects, but it misses huge potential in other areas.

Productivity is efficiency. Productivity is simply a measure of efficiency, how innovatively industry uses each element that goes into producing a product or service. Productivity is not working harder, but smarter.

From 1960 to 1980, Canada had a productivity growth of 2.4 per cent a year on average. This is clearly below the average of 3.9 per cent for the 16 other member countries of the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development. Only the United Kingdom experienced a slower rate of growth, approximately 2.3 per cent. This 2.4 per cent figure has dropped to a point where we are losing ground in productivity.

The reasons for our poor efficiency are numerous. The Economic Council of Canada claims the present recession accounts for only half the productivity decline. The other half comes from structural problems and the orientation of management, labour and government.

This budget does nothing at all to address these issues.

Management and labour, and obviously this government, do not look to comparative advantage and productivity as a fight for survival. Management was content to concentrate on mergers and acquisitions, which take up scarce capital but which produce no real economic growth. Labour has been seen as totally disregarding competitive problems. As well, management does not trust labour, labour does not trust management and neither trusts government.

Efficient co-ordination of production components cannot take place in an environment such as this. With all our major trading partners, such as the United States and the European Economic Community, it is interesting to see the co-operation among government, labour and management in this area and to see the kind of involvement government has.

They say the United States is based mainly on myth, and one of the myths is the free enterprise system of which the Treasurer is so enamoured. For someone presumably of his experience and knowledge, he is awfully blind when it comes to seeing the tremendous amount of assistance given to industry by governments at all levels in the United States.

The role of government should be to facilitate a structure and environment in which productivity will be improved. The budget is said, by the Treasurer among others, to be a psychological document, yet no mention is made of improving management's or labour's orientation to productivity improvements. No attention is focused on these pressing problems.

We in this province could embark upon a productivity centre which could be developed here. The centre would provide an emphasis and focus on productivity and its benefits, providing a framework for co-ordinating production components. Specifically, this would involve collecting and performing research on productivity and providing practical application of the theories. Areas of emphasis could be on the development of a co-operative environment, partially through employee participation, and on providing courses on modern management techniques and plant management, distribution, material and inventory control, and industrial engineering.

Unlike Board of Industrial Leadership and Development technology centres, productivity centres would emphasize a whole production process and not simply automation through robotics, CAD/CAM and microelectronics.

Ontario is far behind in developing a productivity emphasis. The Japanese productivity centre was started in 1953, the West German in 1952 and the US centre in 1977. It is interesting that the Premier himself, I understand, gave some thought to this in 1975, but for some reason unknown to me he killed the idea at the outset.

Of the funding for the centre in Japan, 20 per cent is provided by the government, while for the West German centre, 60 per cent funding is provided by the government, and the one in the US is privately funded. Perhaps there is a role of funding, but it seems to me, with the resources available to labour, management and government, those items could be worked out.

If we define productivity as high-tech production, we lose the benefits in the important resource-based industries. Increased harmony among labour, management and government, and the application of modern management and distribution techniques will surely help the mining and forestry section.

Ronald Anderson wrote a column in the Globe and Mail of December 22, 1982, entitled "Serious Consequences Loom If Productivity Issue Ignored." I quote from that article:

"Productivity improvement, however, must be a long-term, rather than a short-term, objective. It should be regarded not as a threat, but as protection for existing jobs. Without an improvement in productivity, as the United States recognizes, many jobs will be destroyed by an inability to compete in the market."

One of the benefits of doing this, of course, will be to deal with that one facet of automation and the effect it will have on our work force, and to bring labour into the whole discussion in terms of how to adjust. We are kidding ourselves and the labour people as well, because to compete internationally we are going to have to be as competitive as, or more competitive than, our trading partners in the world.

3:30 p.m.

Andrew Kniewasser, president of the Investment Dealers' Association of Canada, stated at an Ontario Chamber of Commerce meeting on April 14, 1983: "In our situation, and with our export reliance, increased productivity is the only way to achieve substantial increases in employment. It is the only way to ensure secure employment in Canada."

Again, planning for the future, research and development is a crucial element in an overall strategy for Ontario in the 1980s. For Ontario to develop comparative advantage, we must have a competitive edge. Research and development is like productivity in that it can make us competitive, but we must develop this capacity.

We know that Canada spends less than one per cent of its gross national product on R and D, compared with 2.5 per cent in the United States and 2.1 per cent in West Germany. We must have not only a higher quantity of research and development but also R and D in a quality form, a form that enables development of secondary processing of our natural resources.

The Treasurer, in his Tory ideology of the 19th century, gives us a paper in which he comes to the conclusion that there is nothing Ontario should be doing. But if we do not increase our R and D in this province, one of the significant and sad losses to Ontario is going to be those people, our human resource, with the education they have obtained at great expense to the taxpayers of this province. They will go somewhere else if the opportunities for them to exercise their expertise, knowledge and skill are not available here in Ontario.

There is nothing in the budget that recognizes this fact. What the Ontario Liberal Party would do would be to parallel the federal investment tax credit for R and D carried out in Ontario. For instance, a four per cent Ontario tax credit would be roughly equivalent to the 10 per cent federal credit that is now available. The April 1983 federal budget announced the extension of the carry-forward and carryback provisions to seven years and three years respectively. Ontario could parallel these measures.

As well, we see an expansion of the definition of R and D. The definition should not apply strictly to pure R and D, but should be expanded to include costs related to preproduction planning, trial production, troubleshooting and engineering follow-through. This would make the R and D incentives more desirable and would emphasize practical applications for the marketplace. Let us get the products developed and into the market.

Obviously part of any strategy for the Ontario economy has to deal with capital formation. We were glad to see the extension and expansion of the small business development corporation program. But obviously the continued formation of pools of capital is absolutely necessary to economic growth and security in this province. Further, this capital must be used in innovative ways. Innovation is the engine of economic growth, and the government can help by designing policies that put resources in the hands of the innovators in our society.

It is interesting that because of the recession, people have been thrown back to a large extent on their greatest resource, themselves. An unprecedented number of corporations has been formed, and people are coming forward with ideas. That we applaud, and we think it should be encouraged.

We applaud the government's decision to increase funding to the small business development corporation program, but we ask: "Has the government gone far enough? Are we stifling some of our most creative entrepreneurs when the government spends only $30 million on this worthwhile program whose benefits extend throughout society, but $40 million is used in advertising and self-congratulatory praise?"

We must encourage grass-roots, public participation in the financing of our entrepreneurs. We need innovative policies to get the money out of the sock and into the hands of those who can help to create prosperity in society. The current tax system heavily favours the issue of debt rather than equity. We need fiscal policies that will put debt and equity on an equal footing. For instance, capital is so crucial to our future that this issue might have been a discussion paper within the budget or attached to the budget rather than a discussion about doing away with the home shelter program that is going to hurt the poor. Instead, we should be looking forward and thinking of these things in a sophisticated way. We do not see this in the budget.

We might have had a paper discussing whether we should allow individuals to make equity investments and defer capital gains tax as long as the equity was rolled over and was put forward. This is the type of policy that might encourage the formation and retention of a strong capital base. These are the kinds of ideas we might consider. We might have had a discussion paper considering doing away with or partially reducing Ontario's portion of the capital gains tax. We might have had a discussion about those things, yet these matters were not put forward by the Treasurer as being of any import.

Ontario should move to implement the Toronto Stock Exchange proposal for a junior exchange. I am sure my friend the Minister of Northern Affairs (Mr. Bernier) would agree with that. He knows that when the government, in conjunction with the Securities and Exchange Commission, did away with junior stock promotion in Ontario it hurt a lot of small entrepreneurs, in northern Ontario particularly. Small investors could infuse desperately needed capital directly into those ventures, which carry not only the greatest risk of failure but also the greatest opportunity for substantial economic growth, again in northern Ontario in particular.

In order to further encourage capital formation for high-risk ventures, the government could also consider exempting the capital gains of junior equity issues from Ontario income tax and could press the federal government to do the same. These matters should be considered.

The Ontario Securities Commission has pointed out in the past that there is virtually no mechanism for small and medium-sized business to raise relatively small amounts of capital from the public. Ontario desperately needs to revamp securities legislation to get the capital out of the socks of the province and into stock—a phrase that has already been used—and into the productive investments we need. Obviously, if we were to do these kinds of things, those very jobs that the Treasurer says will be created at some time in the future, but we do not know when, would come as a result of these suggestions.

I want to touch briefly on job retraining and the human resource. Today, about one half of the young people receive the necessary education or skills training in formal institutions. We know the private sector is not filling the gap, as over 70 per cent of business-provided training is for less than 26 weeks in duration and it does not build the long-term skills we need.

The Ontario Manpower Commission projects that we will be 45,000 skilled tradesmen short by 1986. The current government-sponsored apprenticeship program is abysmal. Less than six per cent of young people started an apprenticeship program and less than three per cent managed to complete their apprenticeship. Last year only 1,358 apprentices actually graduated. Yet since the late 1960s and early 1970s we have heard about what a great job we are doing in Ontario.

The budget does not even acknowledge that a problem exists. A token $14 million is allocated through the Board of Industrial Leadership and Development to manpower training. Is this thinking for the long term? We need a comprehensive system to determine where the opportunities will be in the future and to disseminate this information to those who are making career choices.

We must send secondary school guidance counsellors into the real world so they can return to the secondary schools and help our young people make intelligent career choices. The current nonsystem offers virtually no help to the teenager making decisions that will affect him or her for a lifetime. The government must make a concrete commitment to the training of highly skilled blue-collar workers. Last year the government spent $185 million on manpower training and $2 billion on colleges and universities. Both training grounds are vital if we are to position ourselves for the future.

This budget has sinned in this regard by omission rather than by commission. In failing to provide the long-term skills our economy and young people so desperately require, we are creating a powder keg that can explode at any moment. This area once again shows that the government of this Premier has turned its back on the future. It is saying that our economy is in retreat and that our young people, who are entering this world with no marketable skills whatsoever, are those left in the cross-fire.

If there is one priority the government must bring to the budget-making procedure it is the commitment that funds must be invested in the most important resource we have, the residents of Ontario. Without this commitment the budget is failing its most basic responsibility, and the route to prosperity is destroyed. This budget has failed to make that commitment.

I want to speak very briefly about some of the sectoral problems of our economy that again were not addressed at all. Obviously the automotive sector is one of the primary sectors we have to deal with. The automobile and automotive parts sector remains our single largest industrial sector. At its peak in 1978, 110,000 workers were directly employed. Unfortunately, by 1982 this number had dropped substantially to approximately 97,000.

Some carefully considered action is required if we are to keep this sector vibrant. Since the 1975 signing of the auto pact agreement with the United States, Canada has run a net surplus only three times. A renegotiation of this important trade agreement is required. With Japan we are running a trade deficit in the auto sector of over $100 million every month. The auto parts sector, made up of many independent Canadian manufacturers, is hurting particularly. In 1982 the auto parts sector had a $4.2-billion deficit with the United States.

It is time we considered bringing into place a graduated domestic content restriction. Our goal is to achieve a minimum of 65 per cent domestic content in the automotive parts sector. It is time the Ontario and Canadian governments started playing hardball in this absolutely vital sector.

I turn now briefly to agriculture. This budget, as my colleagues have pointed out, does nothing to give Ontario farmers any confidence in the future of their industry. It fails to provide any sense of direction to farmers at a time of greatest need. Our farm sector is most vital to Ontario, and yet we find little direction and few resources extended to this part of our economy.

The budget offers farmers $35 million less than last year. Agricultural budgetary expenditures are to remain at 1.09 per cent of total budgetary expenditures, the same level as two years ago. The minister's argument that we cannot compare this year's decrease in the overall budget allocation to last year or even to two years ago because of the extraordinary expenses for emergency assistance in those years is a clear indication of the government's failed ad hoc approach to agriculture. Inadequate long-term commitments to agriculture lead to instability and the need for emergency assistance.

What is seriously required in this province is a long-term strategy for agriculture within which farmers can make their decisions. Ontario farmers cannot hope to survive if they are left to plan on a year-to-year basis.

The government's commitment of $295 million to the whole agriculture industry pales in the light of the $533 million that will be collected by the tobacco tax alone. Almost twice as much is collected in the tobacco tax as is expended by this government on agriculture. In comparison, the Quebec budget of two days ago promised farmers $402.4 million next year. That is $8,358 per farmer in Quebec as opposed to $3,578 per Ontario farmer.

The only major announcement for farmers in this budget is a beginning farmers program, which we in this party have been demanding for years now. Even this announcement, however, is really a carryover of a promise made in last year's budget. We have yet to see the details of this program and we will reserve judgement until we do. I hope, however, as my colleague the member for Huron-Middlesex (Mr. Riddell) has put it to the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Timbrell), this program will be made retroactive to include recent entrants into the agriculture industry and the program's criteria will be broad enough to accept loans outside of farm credit corporations.

We are also concerned that this budget contains no announcement of increased financial assistance for the Ontario Veterinary College.

We are disappointed that, while tile drainage is essential for the improvement of Ontario's food land and an additional 2.9 million acres are still in need of improved drainage, the funds allocated for that purpose for next year will be reduced by $6 million from last year. Instead of reducing these funds, the government, we believe, should be providing up to $50 million per year and should cover 75 per cent of the cost of the drainage work as opposed to the present 60 per cent. We are glad to see, however, the government took our advice and reduced the interest rate under this program to eight per cent.

We are disappointed also that there was no announcement in the budget to expand the guidelines under the Ontario farm adjustment assistance program. Very little of the government's announced $80-million allocation for this program will be spent if changes are not made. Only about $18.8 million has so far been spent and $20 million from last year's program has been carried over to next year because it was underspent. We believe the guidelines under this program must be relaxed to allow producers under 10 per cent equity to be eligible, and the interest rate should be subsidized from the current 12 per cent down to eight per cent.

We currently import about $2.3 billion worth of agriculture and food products into Ontario each year but there is no mention of an import substitution program. We could create thousands of new jobs in the agricultural industry by displacing these unnecessary imports. There is no announcement of any program that would develop the agricultural potential in northern Ontario even though the government has announced marketing studies to examine this question since 1977.

What the budget has announced, however, is an increase in Ontario health insurance plan premiums of which farm families must pay 100 per cent, which will cost them $2.6 million extra per year. The present emergency economic difficulties facing the agricultural industry in Ontario are directly related to the lack of commitment and direction given to this vital industry and underline the failures of years of Tory misrule.

The only time one hears of any dedication to agriculture by this government is during an election. Then one hears promises such as those in the last election to drain and develop one million acres of land in northern and eastern Ontario or to move the stockyards out of downtown Toronto. These promises have never been kept. Each election is filled with promises simply to cover another crop of failures. The rest of the time is spent blaming the federal government.

I also want to refer to northern Ontario and in particular to our mining, forest and tourism sectors. It was interesting that today questions were put about northern agriculture. We were promised some kind of policy relating to one-industry towns in northern Ontario. This was not addressed in the major and only economic statement we are going to get from the government this year.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure you will recall that the Brampton charter of 1972 promised to replace with at least two trees every one harvested henceforth in Ontario and to regenerate every acre harvested. The fact is that many northern Ontario communities are facing economic constraints in the near future due to shortages of timber. We are facing imminent timber shortages of crisis proportions due to years of government mismanagement which has permitted more trees to be cut than have been replaced. The total backlog of unregenerated cutover forest lands since 1971 is over 1.4 million acres and is growing at a rate of 180,000 acres per year.

The years of government failure are starting to catch up with us. Of the 562,000 acres of total cutover in 1981-82, regeneration was undertaken on only 38 per cent of the land. Some 180,000 acres were left untreated, essentially written off. The government has allowed this resource to be mined rather than to be treated as a renewable resource. This record makes a mockery of this government's promise contained in the Brampton charter.

In the forest industry we would insist on sustained-yield management and the regeneration of all cutover lands. This would ensure adequate supplies to meet current demands and allow future expansion. Jobs would be created as part of an accelerated forest renewal program. Timber-cutting practices have to be changed, particularly with respect to the clear-cut.

We would expand the use of wood products to include biomass production of methanol. We could have an improved and accelerated forest cleanup program so that trees could be planted, we could expand our nursery stock and we could create, literally overnight, thousands of jobs.

We are spending about $35 million on this program this year. All the experts have said we should be spending at least double that; in fact, probably closer to $100 million. Let us use the unemployment insurance commission funds constructively in our other programs. Let us put people in northern Ontario into productive work, improving the yield from our national crop, which is our forests.

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Cousens): Order.

Interjections.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Oh, come now.

The Acting Speaker: The member for Rainy River, carry on please.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I want to touch as well on the housing program, or the lack of same, that was announced in the budget: $40 million, of which $16 million is going to be spent this year in demonstration projects. We have heard for the last two years—in fact we have rent control dating back to 1975 with the prices at that time—that there was not sufficient rental accommodation available, particularly in urban centres; yet there is very little in this budget to deal with that program some eight years later.

The government is claiming with this program that it will create some 5,000 units and 12,000 jobs; this, of course, is based on spending the whole $40 million. But the facts and figures contradict each other. Unofficially, I have learned that $10 million will be used for three experimental projects, creating fewer than 1,500 units. The Treasurer indicated in the lockup that the remaining $6 million will be used for rent subsidies. Details have not yet been announced. Thus, the program cannot be evaluated beyond noting that it is an incredibly uncreative use of meagre funds and it does nothing to stimulate construction.

Ontario Liberal proposals for a rental housing stimulation program, which were released on December 20, 1982, were designed as a first step towards raising vacancy rates in major municipalities to three per cent. The cost was $129 million, the number of jobs created 23,500 and the number of units built 13,350. The average cost per unit would have been $9,700.

On May 14, 1982, the day after the budget, at an early morning press conference, the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing (Mr. Bennett) unveiled Challenge 2000, composed of four programs: renter-buy; quick mortgage repayment scheme, which, of course, is not costing any real money; InnoRent—the price tag for these three is $48 million; and Renthab, aimed at rehabilitating and preserving existing rental housing. In addition, the government was to launch a series of demonstration projects designed to create new rental units from existing housing, with a price tag of $10 million.

The $58 million needed for these two programs was never allocated by the cabinet. The $16 million in 1983-84 represents only 27.6 per cent of last year's promise, a promise that was never kept. Government has created an illusion that over a two-year period it has put $98 million into rental housing construction proposals. In fact, at best we can hope for $16 million this year.

The government also cut back on the Ontario home renewal program, which was of great benefit to people in rural areas and in the north. It cut back on that program, which was helping the elderly and the poor to rehabilitate their homes and bring them up to standard. Again, they suffer because this government really has no commitment to helping that sector of the population. The Social Planning Council of Metropolitan Toronto and the Ontario Economic Council have suggested that the property tax credit program be redesigned to help people who need the help most. That fell on deaf ears this year, that is sure.

I want to speak briefly about employment and job creation once again and about the BILD program. The budget admits that the employment situation will continue to deteriorate. The unemployment rate for 1983 is forecast to be 11.7 per cent, compared with 9.8 per cent last year. On average, employment will drop by 37,000 and unemployment will increase by 93,000. The difference is a result of the increase in the labour force.

To deal with this problem, the budget announced $242.3 million in programs to help create 76,000 short-term jobs. At first, this sounds impressive. However, last year the government was supposed to spend about $226 million to create approximately 40,000 jobs. In fact, expenditures fell short by about $10 million. This year's funding shows an increase of only $16.3 million, or 7.2 per cent over last year's allocation. Yet average unemployment in 1983, according to the Treasurer's own estimate, will be up 21.1 per cent over 1982.

Though job creation funding is up only 7.2 per cent, the total number of jobs to be created has almost doubled from 40,000 to 76,000. Obviously, either the jobs will be of even shorter duration than last year or someone is inflating the numbers. The former may be happening—we will not be able to tell until the programs are well under way—and the latter definitely is occurring.

In many cases, it would be difficult to shorten the average duration of jobs created under the various programs without totally destroying their effectiveness. Last year the average length of jobs created under the northern employment incentives program was 4.9 weeks. The average participant under the repair program for college, university and local school buildings cost the government $577, hardly symptomatic of a major campaign to create jobs.

An expenditure of $14 million to enrich manpower training programs by 9,100 positions is listed under the short-term job creation program. I welcome any increase in training efforts, even this pittance, since our party has been pushing the government to act in this area. But manpower training is not job creation.

Training expenditures are listed separately from job creation in expenditures by category in the budget, and manpower funding has never been included under job creation. To do so here is a blatant attempt to overstate what is actually being done in job creation as well as being naïve double accounting. When compared on an equal basis, job creation expenditures this year will be $221.8 million versus allocations of $226 million or actual expenditures of $211 million.

Even using the most favourable measure, funding for job creation will increase only 5.1 per cent this year. The people of Ontario were not expecting that the five per cent restraint rule would be applied to the government's efforts to get the economy back on its feet.

While on the topic of job creation, it is worth mentioning the fate of the Canada-Ontario employment development program. When the Treasurer announced the program in the House on November 22, 1982, he told us the federal-provincial actions would create 30,000 jobs. This year's budget reveals that the $80 million to be spent on COED in 1983-84 will yield only 19,000 jobs, 5,000 fewer than would be expected on the basis of the Treasurer's estimate.

A check with Treasury officials found that the total cost of COED has now been revised downward because of higher costs. Since the Treasurer made such a commotion about announcing the original 30,000 jobs, I am curious why he did not stand in the House and tell us that 20 per cent of them had disappeared before they even got started because of his department's miscalculation.

There is one last area I wish to touch on with regard to job creation, namely youth employment programs. We are all aware that youth unemployment stands at 22 per cent at this moment and will rise over the summer. Fully one in four young Ontarians, more than 250,000 people, will be unable to find employment. I am sure the Treasurer will not deny that the youth unemployment rate in the coming months will be an unbelievable eight points higher than last year's horrendous level.

The youth programs this government put in place in 1982 were an unmitigated disaster. I have already mentioned the Ontario youth employment program, which, through an administrative foul-up, had $6.5 million left in its kitty after turning away hundreds of willing employers and thousands of eager and needy young workers.

But OYEP was not the only failure. Youth programs listed in last year's budget were supposed to create 93,000 jobs, but the current document tells us that only 75,000 positions were achieved. It is ludicrous that in a year when youth unemployment soared to unprecedented heights, the Ontario government fell 18,000 jobs, or 20 per cent, short of its already inadequate goal.

Whether or not this year's target will be achieved we shall have to wait and see. However, the important fact is that the target itself is far too low. The government is aiming to create fewer than 101,000 jobs for young people, or fewer than 8,000 more than last year. I will say here and now that 8,000 jobs will not even deal with half the additional unemployed in the first month of this summer, much less the year-long plight of our youth.

There is much in this budget that speaks of the government's lack of vision for the future, but something more direct than this shameful abandonment of those who will mould our future cannot be found.

I want to touch on the tourism sector. One of the major shortcomings of this budget is its failure to deal with our tourism sector in a year that followed the first deterioration we have experienced in our provincial tourism deficit after years of improvement. Our tourism deficit had been progressively shrinking, to $392 million in 1980 and $328 million in 1981, but in 1982 this trend was reversed and our preliminary estimates indicate that the deficit could be well over $400 million once again.

Our tourism revenues were much lower than expected last year when one considers such factors as the exchange on the dollar, which should have attracted more American tourists and kept Ontarians at home, and a substantial expenditure on our promotional budget.

Ontario's tourism industry may well be one of the brighter spots in our economy, but tourism on a worldwide basis has been expanding at such a rate that it is expected to be worth $120 billion globally by the year 2000 and certain to be the largest industry for this province. Given this growth in the tourism sector throughout the world in the past decade, Ontario's share of world tourism expenditures actually fell from 4.2 per cent to 2.7 per cent. In reality, then, while millions more people visited Ontario this year than a decade ago and spent billions more dollars here, our share of potential visitors to Ontario decreased.

The point here is, if Ontario had maintained its share of the world tourism market since the early 1970s, our economy would be richer by $850 million, the provincial government's revenues would be $375 million higher and, most important of all, perhaps 58,700 more jobs would have been created for Ontario.

Tourism Ontario made a pre-budget presentation to the Treasurer in which a number of recommendations were made to improve our tourism sector.

One of these dealt with a 10 per cent licensed trade discount on all purchases of beverage alcohol and 15 per cent on domestic wines. When a consumer purchases a bottle of liquor from a Liquor Control Board of Ontario outlet his price is made up of the basic selling price plus the retail tax, currently 10 per cent but which this budget will increase to 12 per cent.

When the owner of a licensed establishment purchases the same bottle of liquor, he pays the basic selling price minus a five per cent licence fee discount plus the 12 per cent gallonage tax. As a result, the price differs from the consumer price by only about three per cent. However, when he sells a drink in his establishment he must add on the 10 per cent retail tax and submit that as well to the provincial government.

Compare this situation with licensees in the US, our closest competitor, who may benefit from volume discounts when they purchase liquor. It is one factor that immediately places our hospitality industry at a competitive disadvantage with our closest neighbour.

I took the time in last year's budget reply to point out some actions that could be taken by this government for the benefit of our tourism sector. I want to repeat some of them because one suggestion was actually picked up, the realignment of ministries to form the new Ministry of Tourism and Recreation.

Tourism is one of our largest employers, providing jobs for 541,000 Ontarians or about 14 per cent of our employed labour force. The participation of government in this sector is crucial since the industry is made up of over 30,000 firms, most of which are small but all of which need to advertise.

The government, therefore, assumes a very important role in co-ordinating this effort and promoting the industry as a whole. The government, however, has failed to provide the framework in which the individual tourist operator can carry on business. The industry is so over-regulated that tourism operators can find themselves dealing with as many as 14 provincial ministries.

That means up to 14 different ministers can all be making policy decisions without knowing how the decisions will affect the tourism sector. Without one person representing the tourism industry, many policy decisions have been made negatively affecting tourist operations. We had hoped this would be remedied with the appointment of the new Minister of Tourism and Recreation (Mr. Baetz).

I want to touch briefly on some of the suggestions we have to improve this sector of our economy. Some of these have been put forward by my colleague the member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Eakins) in previous speeches.

We suggest taxing tourist resorts in a way that takes into account the fact that they may operate for only part of the year; implementing a full restocking program for our lakes, which would improve the attraction of fishing in our province; giving local travel associations a bigger voice in deciding how the provincial tourist advertising dollar is spent; using our community colleges more fully to improve the skills of those in the hospitality industry, and providing facilities in the soon-to-be-built Metropolitan Toronto Convention Centre for making reservations for resorts and attractions in any part of Ontario.

One final word on our promotional budget: While the "Yours To Discover" campaign may be paying substantial dividends and attracting tourists from targeted markets in Canada, bordering US states and overseas markets in Britain, Germany, France and Holland, we have to work even harder today just to maintain our position in these markets.

We must never forget we are living next door to the most successful promotional campaign ever with "I Love New York." In addition to that, the state of New York increased its aggressive tourism marketing budget by 17.5 per cent in 1982, and Michigan augmented its impressive tourism budget by a remarkable 50.9 per cent. Given all of this, the only measure affecting the tourism sector in this budget is a negative one: an increase in the purchases by tourists eligible for the retail sales tax rebate to $100.

4:10 p.m.

Given the multiplier effect of tourism spending on the provincial economy and the impact of this sector on employment, any stimulation of this industry can have profoundly beneficial effects. This budget is sadly lacking in this area of stimulation, and we will continue to press for such measures for this sector. Considering the number of jobs that could be created in the tourism sector, particularly for our unemployed youth, it is almost criminal that this particular sector is not taken note of in this budget at all.

I have a number of comments to make on the Board of Industrial Leadership and Development program. I am not going to go over the BILD program; it has been completely discredited. There is no one in Ontario who believes it was anything more than an election ploy, which unfortunately worked. But it has no credibility, the Treasurer has no credibility when he talks about it and neither he nor the Premier can even keep a straight face when they talk about the "bilge" program.

It is interesting. This is supposedly the cornerstone of whatever economic policy this government has, and yet the funds in that program have gone up all of $9 million over last year.

Mr. Bradley: But you have to be fair. It has been good for the sign-painting industry.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Yes, a lot of ministers have had their names painted on signs; that in fact is true. But there is no one, from the chamber of commerce to anybody anywhere else, who believes that as an economic strategy, as an economic document, it is anything but a bunch of warmed-over programs previously announced and with money previously allocated under other budgets.

I had intended to talk about the deficit in financial stewardship. It is interesting that nine cents of the taxpayer's dollar used to go to pay the interest on the provincial debt. In one year that has risen from nine cents to 11 cents, so that for every dollar the taxpayer puts into the pockets of the Treasurer he is paying 11 cents of interest—completely unproductive. That is an increase of over 20 per cent.

I asked the Treasurer during question period and he pretended not to understand the question. We understand that we have to run deficits in times of recession and bad years, but I think the people of Ontario are entitled to see that they are getting something for that deficit in job creation and in jobs for our unemployed, both our youth and the rest of the population.

This is an unproductive deficit. The taxpayers are still paying for Suncor and Minaki Lodge; for the overblown cabinet we have and the limousines that go with it; for the $40 million in advertising by the government, a good half of which is for self-congratulatory pap; and for the land banks that we are still holding on to.

Somebody asked me the day the budget came out, "Should the Treasurer resign because of the leak?" I think he should resign not because of the leak but because this is an abysmally bad budget.

I tried to put forward some creative, innovative and, we think, constructive ideas for improving things in Ontario, particularly for the future but also for the short term. I have tried to be constructive and I have tried to be positive, as we always are in the Liberal Party. I have said there are things in the budget that we agree with and applaud.

There are a few things, unfortunately, that we do not agree with. I am not going to spend a lot of time talking about the Ontario health insurance plan premiums. I am not going to spend a lot of time talking about the increase in personal income tax. I am not going to talk about the social services maintenance surtax.

Interjection.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Tell us about the $45 million, a good half of which the government wasted on Minaki?

It has long been the position of this party that we would eventually like to see the Ontario health insurance plan premiums phased out and that there be a charge on the consolidated revenue fund through personal income tax. We realize that is not going to be done with a stroke of a pen, but we wonder if the Treasurer has not launched us in that direction with his five per cent social services maintenance surtax.

I must say to the Treasurer that I do not know if my colleague on my left was listening to me the other day or not, but I think its title is demeaning both to the Treasurer who presented it and to the people at whom, presumably, it is aimed. I frankly think it verges on Archie Bunkerism or that kind of thing. I will leave it at that, but I really believe the Treasurer is a much more honourable person than that. I believe someone has slipped that into the budget and I find it quite distasteful.

It is distasteful because it points out or points at a particular segment of our society, generally those who need assistance the most and who should not be singled out in a budget any more than anybody else.

Second, even worse than that, is probably the fact that the Treasurer, who prides himself on being honest and direct, which I believe he is generally, has stooped to such a subterfuge to say that he is imposing a temporary surtax. He knows and has said himself—and I have all the quotes here to prove it—that all the money that is collected goes into the consolidated revenue fund.

There is no such thing as particular taxes earmarked for a particular program. There never has been. It has been the position of the government, and I think rightly so, that it be that way.

What the Treasurer is trying to do is smudge and fog the issue when in fact he is simply doing nothing more than increasing personal income tax. That is all he is doing. He is trying to set up a smokescreen and perhaps have people pointing their fingers at one segment of society, a straw man that he puts up, because he was afraid to admit honestly, for once, that he had to raise personal income taxes. It is as simple as that. But we are again concerned about the temporary nature.

I do not have to tell the Treasurer because I think he, as a veteran of the Boer War, was around during the First World War when the personal income tax was first brought in. It was going to be a temporary measure. After April 30, ask anybody who has filled out his income tax if that was a temporary measure.

Interjection.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I think the minister is more of a bore than a Boer.

We are concerned about the corporation tax and the processing tax. We are not sure that those are appropriate in times of recession. It bothers me that the Treasurer seems to be convinced we are out of the recession, or coming out of it fairly rapidly. I do not believe that is the case. I think this five per cent surcharge on OHIP premiums and the eight to one ratio that my leader mentioned are going to abort the consumer-led recovery that he has talked about.

I want to go off on a bit of a tangent for a moment because I was completely baffled listening to the news last night, then reading in the media this morning, to learn that the Treasurer, one day after he announced his budget for 1983-84, is talking about having a mini-budget in the fall. We have not even digested this one and he is talking about a mini-budget in the fall. This is big news, for some reason. It really boggles the mind. It may well have been another smokescreen he was putting up.

If the Treasurer is trying to create a climate of confidence and stability, surely to say one day after he tabled his budget, "I probably will have to change all this and none of this is going to make much sense six months from now," is hardly creating a climate of confidence and stability. Perhaps he really thought about how bad this budget was and decided he would have to bring in another in the fall to refurbish his image.

Incidentally—probably this is closer to the truth—the Treasurer may simply be picking up on my idea that at least twice a year—once in the budget and at one other time some six months after his budget—we should have a statement of the economic wellbeing or otherwise of the province so we will know exactly where we are going. It is deceitful for the government to table estimates in this House and table a budget and then cancel programs without announcing it has done so, as it did in last year's budget.

I have tried to be positive and constructive; I have put forward a few ideas but I am more interested in the general philosophy and thrust. In my remarks I have tried to look to the future and where we are going to be for the balance of the 1980s and into the 1990s. I have suggested we have to do something about productivity and the government has a role in that. I have suggested some job creation areas that should be looked into and acted on quickly, and that there are particular problems in some of our economic sectors which can be dealt with in an innovative way. I have tried to be constructive in looking at and positioning Ontario so we can take advantage of the opportunities that will be ours in the rest of the 1980s and 1990s.

We in this party are concerned about the future. We are concerned that the government that has been in power for 40 years seems to be more concerned about looking backward than forward.

The Acting Speaker: Mr. T. P. Reid moves, seconded by Mr. Nixon, that the motion that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of this government be amended by deleting the words following "that" and adding thereto the following—do I have the approval of the House to dispense with the reading?

Mr. McClellan: No, we want to hear it.

Mr. Rae: Read it out.

The Acting Speaker: I would be pleased to read it.

"This House deeply regrets the 1983 budget fails to recognize the most serious and fundamental problems facing the province of Ontario today and condemns the government for:

"Ignoring the continuing plight of the more than half-million unemployed Ontarians, neglecting in particular the desperate prospects faced by hundreds of thousands of idle Ontario youth, by refusing to introduce any serious long-term job creation programs nor any significant job training proposals;

"Ignoring the serious structural economic deficiencies plaguing Ontario's industrial infrastructure, neglecting in particular the need for a sound and thoughtful vision of Ontario's economic future for the rest of the 1980s and beyond, relying instead on short-term and short-sighted Band-Aid measures;

"Introducing yet another series of inequitable and unfair tax increases, and at the same time increasing the provincial deficit, thus punishing the citizens of Ontario for such wasteful government excesses as the Suncor purchase, the land banks, Minaki Lodge, government advertising, government polling and the practices of Ontario Hydro, among others;

"Ignoring or reducing the provincial commitment to such important sectors of our economy as agriculture, tourism and the auto sector;

"Threatening our social services with the prospect of cutbacks while a plethora of government excesses continues to be funded;

"Ignoring or reducing the provincial commitment to northern Ontario and environmental protection in this province;

"Ignoring the crucial issue of productivity across all sectors of our economy;

"Producing a budget which is unfocused, without direction, contradictory in its proposals and offering little hope for the thousands of Ontarian citizens suffering during the current recession;

"Therefore, this government lacks the confidence of this House."

Some hon. members: Well read.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you. The honourable members are very kind.

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to have the opportunity to lead off the remarks for the New Democratic Party and our reaction to a budget that is—

Mr. Samis: Boring.

Mr. Laughren: Boring.

Mr. Cooke: —boring and I guess in many ways maintains the momentum that was established by the throne speech earlier this year.

I must indicate that last year when we gave our budget responses, the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) was several thousand miles from Ontario. This year, for most of the response of my colleague from the Liberal Party, he was just several hundred feet from the Legislative Assembly and most of the members of the Conservative Party again are not in attendance for the budget debate.

I must again, and I have said this several times, state how dissatisfied I am with the process this Legislature is following. We just do not take this place seriously and, on the most important document that is presented before the Legislature and us, who represent the people of Ontario, the members of the Conservative Party are satisfied simply when their honourable whip tells them to stand up and vote. They do not think it is their role to participate in the debates and listen to the opposition positions on these very important matters.

Once again I just want to put on the record that I think they are contributing to the downfall of a very important process in this Legislature, and the members of the cabinet, the so-called leaders of that party, should be somewhat concerned about their back-benchers.

4:30 p.m.

I want to make a few comments. I probably will not take all of my time on the budget that has been placed before us and the people of Ontario.

At a time when we needed imagination, we received instead a budget that can only be described as bland. At a time when we needed action, we received inaction. At a time when 750,000 people needed hope, they received a budget that gives them nothing but hopelessness. At a time when we needed jobs, we received virtually no jobs. At a time when nearly 250,000 young people in the province are unemployed, we received at most only 28,000 jobs—and that is not even 28,000 man-year jobs.

This government seems to be satisfied with real growth of only 1.9 per cent, with an unemployment level of 11.7 per cent and with the reality that there will be 37,000 fewer jobs in Ontario in 1983 than there were in 1982.

This budget means that average unemployment will remain at an incredibly high level—535,000 people—and the real unemployment level will continue to run at nearly 800,000 people in this province. Yet the Treasurer describes this budget as realistic.

The budget talks about the recovery, but the reality is that for nearly 800,000 people in this province there is no recovery; and there will be no recovery as long as this government is in power.

The statistics show also that there is no recovery at this point. So far, the figures for January and February of 1983 show a 31 per cent increase in layoffs over 1982 levels. Those figures are from the Ministry of Labour.

The budget restates a faith in the private sector and refuses to accept that the public sector has any active role to play in creating economic development and wealth in this province.

I would like to read a couple of letters into the record, one from my own riding and one that was sent to the member for Scarborough West (Mr. R. F. Johnston).

"Dear Mr. Cooke:

"As a welfare recipient with a wife and two children, I am a welder with 10 years' practical experience. I have just completed a course at the Industrial Resource Centre in Windsor to upgrade my skills to that of a fitter-welder, third-year apprentice. Included with my study, I earned certification from the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations, technical standards division, pressure vessel branch, as a high-pressure pipe welder.

"When I went to the Industrial Resource Centre, courtesy of the Canadian government, my area was and still is considered to be a critical trades area. With co-operation from Canada Manpower and local industry, students—including myself—were led to believe that although no promises were made, employment would be readily available for successful graduates.

"I was successful. However, there are no jobs available to me, even though I was and still am prepared to relocate anywhere in Canada.

"The government also has an incentive program for employers ready to continue my training: the critical trades skills training assistance for employers.

"I have attempted to seek employment but was unable to even obtain application forms, let alone an interview, at which I could introduce myself and my skills.

"I am also listed with Canada Manpower for a position under the NEED," new employment expansion and development, "program and, thus far, no jobs have been forthcoming.

"My question to Mr. Axworthy"—this was originally written to Mr. Axworthy, with a copy to me—"is, if the welding field is a critical trade area, where is the shortage?"

The fact of the matter is, this young man in the city of Windsor has gone through for training, he is a skilled tradesman in a so-called critical skills area, and still no jobs exist in this province for him.

Here is a letter addressed to my colleague the member for Scarborough West:

"I am a 23-year-old, university-educated male who has been ungainfully employed for over a year. My political leanings are left of centre, although I have never voted for the NDP. I was brought up in Montreal but returning there is out of the question.

"I spent four very difficult years studying journalism at Carleton University. I supported myself since I was 16 to go to university. While studying I never managed to live more than $2,000 under the poverty line. Me and many other students who were in the same situation didn't mind the hardship, however, because, perhaps naïvely, we considered our education as an investment for our future and would pay for itself many times over. As it turns out, nothing could be further from the truth.

"In November 1981 I got a job as a reporter with the Peterborough Examiner. After four years of post-secondary education I was making $225 a week for sometimes as long as 50 or 60 hours. Conditions were deplorable. In January 1982 the Examiner newsroom was recognized by the Ontario Labour Relations Board as a local of the International Typographical Union. In March 1982 I was fired, I suspect no small part because I was a member of the union.

"Since March 1982 I remained unemployed. At the moment I have a temporary job filing at a Toronto law firm. That job ends at the close of business today." The letter was written in March.

"The financial problems of unemployment are well known to us all. In my case circumstances are not as bad as many. I don't have a family to support and I don't have any major debts. But my concern is the other problems that unemployment brings.

"My résumé will soon be on the best-seller list if any more copies are distributed. In our lives we must all experience rejection, but the feeling of going home day after day to a mailbox of rejection letters would discourage even the most hardy of us all.

"Of course, we all know that this is the worst possible thing; to find a job while you are discouraged is next to impossible. But how many times can you lie to yourself and say things will be all right when there is no indication that things will be all right?"

The letter goes on to describe this individual's feelings.

I suggest that these two individuals, along with thousands of others unemployed in Ontario, have no more prospect of a job today than they did at the beginning of this week, before the government brought down its budget.

This budget offers no vision, it offers no direction and it offers no hope. Instead, it says, "Corporate profits are on the rebound; so hold on, recovery will trickle down some time." For our party and for the people we represent and care about, that philosophy is completely unacceptable.

Let us go through some of the specifics of this government's job creation proposals; for example, the Canada-Ontario employment development program. They have a commitment in this budget that they will match any further federal money if any is coming; so it is an if-maybe-but program.

But there is old money in the budget under the COED program. I remember when the Treasurer announced the COED program. He said this money would be spent quickly and jobs would be in place very quickly. To date in Ontario, 5,000 jobs exist under the COED program. It is a disgrace at a time when there are 17,000 new welfare recipients every month coming off the unemployment insurance rolls and having to go on welfare.

Let me read some of the welfare statistics of various communities across this province to show how desperate the situation is.

In Chatham their welfare budget in 1980 was $993,000; in 1983 they are projecting that their budget will be $2.4 million—from less than $1 million to $2.4 million in just two years. The city of Brantford now has the distinction that four per cent of its population is on welfare.

In Sudbury there has been a 39 per cent increase in the welfare budget; in 1982 their budget was $11 million, and this year they are projecting it will be $15.4 million. In London their budget is up by 49.7 per cent for welfare this year over last year. In Hamilton-Wentworth there has been a 19 per cent increase in the welfare case load, and their budget this year is up by 20 per cent over last year's.

In Sault Ste. Marie there were 1,152 general welfare cases in December 1981; in December 1982 they were up to 1,670, a 45 per cent increase. But even more remarkable, their welfare budget for 1983 is up by 71 per cent over 1982's. In Kingston the case load is up by 9.9 per cent. In Kitchener, the welfare case load is up by 45.4 per cent.

In my home city, our case load has been increasing since 1978. The case load in December 1981 was 3,900 and in February 1983 it was 5,043, which is an increase of 24 per cent. I have a couple of other statistics to indicate how badly off that community is: in 1982 there were 625 personal bankruptcies and 145 business bankruptcies in Windsor.

Communities in this province are suffering because of the inaction of this government. More and more people are being forced to go on welfare, which for many individuals in this province is the very last resort and something that requires them to swallow all their personal pride, to walk to the welfare office and apply for something that has a very negative stigma attached to it.

This government has not seen fit to do anything to try to turn around that situation by job creation. In fact, based on the budget statistics for the various municipalities, we are likely to see more and more people forced to go on welfare because there just will not be the job opportunities.

Let us take a look at this government's accelerated capital works program, which is supposed to be a job creation program as well. They say 12,000 jobs will be created, and they tell us $246 million will be spent on capital works.

First, last year, when the accelerated capital works program was announced, $133 million was the provincial share. Now this government presents us with a figure of $246 million, as if it were all provincial money. The reality is that only $167 million is provincial money.

Then they tell us there are going to be 12,000 jobs created, but their officials in the lockup could not tell us how many man-years that is. They tell us it is going to be spent over two years, but for some reason all the jobs are going to be created this year. It really does not make a lot of sense. It is an indication of other aspects of this budget that lack some basic honesty with the people of this province.

Capital investment by this province as a percentage of total budgetary expenditures has fallen. To maintain even 1981 levels would require an additional $430 million of expenditures by this province.

Unemployment in the building trades province-wide is more than 37 per cent. In some cities it is much higher. In Sault Ste. Marie, for example, it is 75 per cent. In Sudbury it is 64 per cent; in the Quinte-St. Lawrence area it is 75 per cent, and in the Essex-Kent region it is 60 per cent. Yet this government cannot see fit to create more than 12,000 jobs, the man-year equivalent of which we do not know, and it cannot see fit to bring up its capital works expenditures to the levels they were at in 1981.

We need those jobs now, and it would make much more sense for this government to get much more involved in capital works, to create jobs now and to build facilities that will be useful not only today but also for many years in the future. This type of investment cannot be looked at as a waste of government money or as make-work projects. Capital works investment is something that the government gets a return on as well as creating jobs now when we need them.

Youth employment: With nearly 250,000 young people unemployed in this province, this government comes in with a program of 100,000 jobs, but it does not tell us that in 1982 there were more than 75,000 jobs created under this program. In reality, they are putting only $36 million more into youth employment in this province and at most they are creating only 28,000 new jobs, according to the figures they presented to us.

At a time when our young people are unemployed, not just for one or two months but for very long periods of time, and when our young people are feeling more and more alienated from society because they are not allowed to participate in or contribute to our economy, this is a miserly approach to youth unemployment and does not take the problem seriously. This government is sowing the seeds of problems for years to come by not putting our young people to work today.

In housing, the last statistics show vacancy rates in Toronto were 0.7 per cent; in Hamilton, 0.6 per cent; Oshawa, 0.5 per cent; Thunder Bay, 0.6 per cent, and Ottawa, 0.2 per cent. Those are the vacancy rates in those communities, yet what does this government propose? It proposes a $16-million program over four years to upgrade and rehabilitate 5,000 units. What a disgrace at a time when we need not only those jobs in the housing sector but also the housing units.

There are 10,000 senior citizens on waiting lists for social housing in Ontario and we can come up with only 5,000 units. This is after the government shut down or eliminated the Ontario home renewal program just a couple of months ago. The net amount of money being put into this program is practically nothing at a time when we have a housing crisis.

In the small business sector, this government pays lipservice to the small business people of this province. A tax holiday for small business is a great political gimmick. It certainly satisfied many small businesses that are profitable and incorporated, but it does nothing for those small businesses that are in trouble because they have experienced high interest rates and falling consumer demand in this province.

Over the course of this recession, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business said that across Canada we lost 700,000 to 800,000 jobs in the small business sector. If 40 per cent of those jobs are in Ontario, that means we have lost 300,000 to 350,000 jobs in the small business sector during the course of this recession.

The $200-million tax giveaway to the profitable, incorporated small businesses would be much better used to help those small businesses in difficulty and to act as an incentive to create jobs in that sector of our economy.

This tax holiday was supposed to create 10,000 jobs in the small business sector, but ask the Treasurer today how many jobs were actually created and he will tell us, as he told me last December, that there has been no evaluation. As he said, acting like my father: "David, if you were ever in this position, you would institute taxes based not on what really works but on what your gut reaction is. My gut reaction was that this was a good tax expenditure; so we put it in place."

There was no attempt to evaluate it. From a government that is supposed to have good business practices, there was no attempt to see whether this tax expenditure was working and creating jobs. It was just the Treasurer's gut reaction. Perhaps he was hoping to get another dinner out of it as he did from the car salesman.

What we need in this province is a small business strategy that will plug the small business manufacturers into an industrial strategy, that will increase consumer confidence and consumer spending so there is activity in those corner stores, and that also, for the manufacturers, plugs into an automobile parts strategy, for example. The vast majority of our Canadian-owned auto parts firms are small businesses within this province. If we had a strategy in the auto parts sector, those businesses could benefit.

Instead, the only answer from this government to the problems of the small business sector is a tax holiday for what was two years and now is three years. The chances are that there probably will be a fourth year, because they will want to get past the next election without reimposing this tax.

In the agriculture sector, again this government talks a good line about its commitment to the farm community, yet in 1982, 43 per cent of farm bankruptcies were in Ontario where we account for only 25 per cent of Canada's farms. Since the last election, an average of three farmers have gone bankrupt every week in this province. In 1982 farm income dropped by 26 per cent.

The Ontario farm adjustment assistance program fails to address the problems of foreclosures and has assisted very few farmers in Ontario.

Ontario still lags far behind other provinces in terms of long-term credit programs. With inadequate returns for farmers, the problem will continue. So far this year there have been 47 farm bankruptcies, the same number we had in 1982. Last year there were 176 for the entire year. There is no reason to believe the same number of farms will not go into bankruptcy this year without a proper program from the government of Ontario.

The beginning farmers program announced by this government in its budget is a program our agriculture critic has called for, previously Donald MacDonald and now the member for Welland-Thorold (Mr. Swart). We have called for that program for many years and we congratulate the government for finally bringing it in. We look forward to seeing the details of that program, but an awful lot still needs to be done in the agriculture sector of this province.

The tax changes announced in this budget again demonstrate the basic philosophy of the Conservative government of Ontario. The cost of the Ontario health insurance plan is up $60 million or five per cent. A family now will be paying $680 a year for health insurance and a single person $340 a year; that is a 42 per cent increase since 1980. We have the distinction of being one of only three provinces that pay premiums and we charge by far the highest premiums in all of Canada.

The premium assistance program remains untouched in terms of levels of income to qualify for that program. We, along with Alberta and British Columbia, are the only provinces that continue to charge premiums. The so-called link between premiums and the cost of health does not exist. Even Mr. McKeough, the former Treasurer, admitted that back in 1978.

At the same time that premiums rise to pay for an overly generous settlement with the doctors of this province, we allow extra billing to continue in Ontario. Extra billing is a deterrent fee, a user charge that hurts those on fixed and low incomes the most. It should be stopped by this government immediately. Instead, not only does this government allow extra billing to continue but also it has the audacity to approve of it through the Minister of Health (Mr. Grossman).

If one is a low-income person or cannot afford these deterrent fees imposed by the doctor, he says, "Go talk to your specialist, go talk to your doctor and beg for charity medicine." That is what it boils down to. One has to go to his doctor if he is on welfare, is in a low-income bracket, is paid the minimum wage or is a senior citizen and say, "I cannot afford to pay your extra fee, so would you please not charge it to me?"

I thought charity medicine had gone out in Ontario when the health insurance scheme came in during the 1960s. This government is allowing charity medicine to creep back into the system at increasing and alarming rates.

The social services maintenance tax introduced the other day by this Treasurer is a part of the budget that I believe lacks honesty. This is simply a surtax that was introduced to raise revenue. It had nothing to do whatsoever with maintaining social services in this province. It had to do with the fact that this Treasurer wanted to increase taxes.

The Treasurer did not want to talk about any substantial increases in taxes for his corporate friends. Instead, he wanted to bring in this surcharge, which hits people on low incomes the hardest by trying to give those people on low incomes the guilt trip that they have to contribute to those people who are drawing on the social services system of this province because of the recession.

That is exactly what this government is trying to do. It is a regressive tax, and it has nothing to do with the proposals this party made of a surcharge on net income of more than $30,000. There is no parallel whatsoever. This surtax will kick in on incomes of $7,500 for a single person and $12,400 for a family. An individual who has a gross income of $7,500 is going to have to pay this surcharge, the so-called social services maintenance tax.

What a disgrace in Ontario when we decide to put a surtax on those people who are at the lowest income level, many of whom work in the social services sector. For example, nursing home workers have very low incomes; this government, which put them under wage controls last year, now slaps a five per cent surtax on their income.

This particular tax demonstrates more clearly than anything else in the budget the philosophy of this government. I am very sorry this government decided to bring in this type of tax, and I can pledge that this party will be fighting this tax as hard as it possibly can.

I want to give just a few examples of the lack of honesty in this budget. As I have already indicated, the job figures that have been totalled up by this government are not real job figures, because they have not been put in man-years. They give the illusion that a few thousand jobs are going to be created, but the reality is that they are part-time, temporary jobs that will do virtually nothing to turn around the economic situation and the unemployment crisis.

The one aspect of this budget that is very dishonest, and it was raised in the Legislature today, is how the deficit is presented in the budget.

The Treasurer and other ministers have gone around the past few months announcing increases in transfer payments—in some cases percentages that have been ahead of inflation; for example, in the hospital sector—and tried to give the impression that these areas are now priorities for this government. After years of underfunding, they are now going to give adequate funding for one year.

Then they present a budget, the bottom line of which says the deficit will be approximately $2.6 billion plus $300 million, which has to be squeezed out of transfer payments to achieve that $2.6-billion deficit. The reason it was presented the way it was is that with the $300 million as part of the deficit, as it should have been, it would have been reported as a $3-billion deficit. And that is what we have.

I do not have any trouble with a $3-billion deficit, as long as it is a productive deficit. I do not agree with the spending priorities, but I think the Treasurer, because of his philosophy, has great difficulty with even a $2.6-billion deficit. He did not want the publicity of a $3-billion deficit; so he played this new little gimmick in reporting whereby we can squeeze out another $300 million. I think that lacks honesty with the people of Ontario and with the members of this Legislature.

I want to spend some time going through some of the proposals that this party outlined in a document called "Ontario Can Work" and released last week at a press conference in Toronto. The document defines economic recovery as one that has full employment as its goal. An 11.7 per cent unemployment figure is unacceptable, and our proposals were designed to create new jobs and to protect existing jobs.

In the job protection field we once again call for amendments to labour laws in three areas: (1) longer notice before mass layoffs or a shutdown, (2) universal severance pay, which is something we do not have in Ontario and, most important, (3) a process of justification before a plant can close down in Ontario.

Companies in this province now are allowed to close their doors with no explanation or justification to the community and to the workers. I want to give an example from my own riding. The Chrysler spring plant will be closing down in July 1983. They have been able to sell the idea that the plant is going to be closed, not because the plant is not profitable but because the plant can be more profitable—$5 million more profitable—by relocating and contracting the work out to non-unionized plants in the sunbelt states in the United States. That is exactly what Chrysler is doing.

The Minister of Industry and Trade (Mr. Walker) buys that line and has interpreted the $5 million in increased profits as meaning that the plant is now losing $5 million. But the plant is profitable; it always has been profitable. Yet it is going to move out because it can make $5 million more. Why is it less profitable than a plant down in the southern states? Wages may have something to do with it. What are we to do? Are we to lower our wages to the levels they pay in the sunbelt states and the right-to-work states?

The reality is that in the 60 years that plant has existed in Windsor, there has been virtually no investment by the corporation in new machinery. So, of course, productivity cannot compare with that in a brand new plant. The answer is not to close that plant down. The answer is not to allow it to close and lose for Ontario another auto parts plant and the 350 jobs associated with it. The answer for the corporation is to invest in that plant with new machinery to make it productive, make it competitive and increase the quality of its output.

The government cannot blame the workers who made concessions to that company in 1978 in order to try to save jobs. It cannot blame the workers when the company refuses to invest in its own facilities. A process of public justification would make those facts very clear to the community and to the government and would offer an opportunity to make a clear case for that plant and for 350 jobs for people in Ontario.

There are numerous other examples that have been brought up by my colleague the member for Hamilton East (Mr. Mackenzie). There are examples in Hamilton. There were numerous examples brought before the committee studying plant closures in the province, but that committee was not allowed to report because the election was called and the Tory majority refused to set up a new committee.

A process of justification is overdue in this province. We will continue to raise the issue of individual plant closings and layoffs in the hope that this government will some day see the light and bring in legislation to provide for justification.

With respect to youth unemployment, we called for a 25 per cent increase in student job programs. The cost would be $16 million, and the total jobs created would be 89,000. We called for an increase in seasonal employment expenditures such as the Experience program. A 25 per cent or $27-million increase would create 24,000 jobs.

In the area of forest conservation, we suggested teams of young people with supervisory staff be established in each of the Ministry of Natural Resources districts for forestry-related work. This program could be expanded as new seedling stocks and nurseries are established. Its cost would be $20 million and it would create 1,400 jobs.

We suggested that a neighbourhood service program be set up, again with teams of young people, funded to provide maintenance and home-related upkeep for the elderly and the disabled living at home. The cost would be $8 million and 1,000 jobs would be created. It would not only provide the jobs, but it would be an important service to the elderly and disabled in this province. It is something we need and are eventually going to have to establish. Why not establish it now when we need the jobs?

In the area of energy conservation we suggested that in the regions of highest unemployment, teams of 30 young people be employed in residential energy conservation programs. Their work would be combined with classroom training in which they would learn to perform energy audits in residential homes. Such training will allow them to make recommendations on energy conservation in those homes. We suggest that 4,000 jobs could be created in that area.

We would use $100 million of the $200 million of the tax expenditure to provide a manufacturing wage subsidy to small business. We suggest that if the $100 million was redirected to $5,000 subsidies for hiring young people for a year, without displacing existing workers, then 20,000 jobs could be created for our young people in this province.

In those programs, with a little bit of innovation and a little bit of effort on the part of government, 140,000 jobs could be created for our young people in this province. We also suggested that the whole area of training has to be examined and, later in the budget debate, my colleague the member for Hamilton West (Mr. Allen) will present some of our detailed plans on training in Ontario.

In the area of accelerated capital works, this budget calls for $167 million over two years. This does not even bring up the expenditures to 1981 levels as a percentage of budget expenditures, and it overestimates jobs. We suggested that at least $300 million in new money should be put into accelerated capital works in this province. These investments today would benefit this province now and for many years to come. This proposal would realistically create 12,000 jobs in Ontario.

In agriculture, by increasing the tile drainage program and funding by $25 million, agricultural productivity could be increased and 2,000 jobs could be created. Furthermore, we believe the $3,000 grant provided to farmers for farm improvements is inadequate and we suggest that a $25-million program to write down loans to eight per cent would be more effective and create more jobs.

In the area of energy and conservation, the program we suggested would be directed towards encouraging and supporting the development of conservation and renewable energy sources. Such a commitment has the potential to create thousands of jobs. A residential energy conservation program, with Ontario Hydro acting as the agency with municipal utilities, should provide low-interest loans, technical advice, inspection services and follow-up.

Jobs would be provided across Ontario. Job creation examples would be 1,000 utility personnel to perform the energy audits, 8,500 construction-related jobs, 1,000 skilled trades jobs for the conversion to natural gas, 4,500 in insulation manufacturing, 800 in furnace manufacturing and 3,000 in other related conservation production. The job creation potential in this area is at least 18,000 to 20,000 jobs for a program that has the resources put behind it and for a government that wants to implement this type of program.

Again, this kind of a program is not a make-work program. It is a program that has long-lasting benefit because it means fewer people will be relying on oil, it means those who are still on oil will use less of it because of conservation methods, and it means we will not have to import as much and therefore there will be tremendous savings to the people of this province and to the country as a whole.

In the environment, a program of environmental remedial action is long overdue. Over one million tons of hazardous industrial waste are produced by Ontario industries every year. Every year, 1.6 million tons of sulphur dioxide are pumped into the atmosphere by Inco Ltd., Ontario Hydro and Falconbridge Ltd., and by the oil, pulp and paper and steel industries. Solving these problems presents significant opportunities for job creation in Ontario.

We suggest an environmental repair fund should be set up in this province. It would be funded by government and industry, and it would clean up five waste sites in the province—the Beare Road waste site, the Upper Ottawa site in Hamilton, the York Sanitation landfill site in Stouffville, the Eric Pauzé landfill site in Tiny township and the Uniroyal site in Elmira. We suggest the cost would be $25 million, some of which would be funded by the industry. There is a potential of 1,500 jobs to be created.

We have suggested other environmental areas where jobs can be created, again with long-lasting benefit to our province. The member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Charlton), our environment critic, will be explaining those in the course of the budget debate.

The housing sector was the most disappointing to the members of this caucus in terms of this government failing to take advantage of the opportunity that exists for job creation. There are 10,000 senior citizens right now waiting for rental units in Ontario. A program in this field, as well as in the co-op and nonprofit area, would meet an important need. Over 30,000 jobs could be created in the province. Again, the low vacancy rates that are a problem today provide this province with an incredible opportunity for job creation.

There are other housing areas such as renovation. About 20 per cent of our housing stock in Ontario is 50 years old. A program of renovation and conversion to rental units where appropriate would create jobs, in addition to upgrading Ontario's housing stock.

Again, opportunities exist for job creation in health and social services. Our document proposed several programs in the health and social services field. They include child care, neighbourhood support, homemaker programs and nursing homes. I want to focus on one of our suggestions. The others will be dealt with by my colleagues the member for Bellwoods (Mr. McClellan) and the member for Scarborough West when they join the budget debate. All these people did not plan on speaking, but they do now.

The area I would like to address in the health and social services field is the nursing home sector. I became fairly involved in this area after my election in Windsor. I found nursing homes in this province were not providing the kind of care I expect them to provide, because the motivation in the nursing home sector is profit and not care. There can be simply no doubt about that when one tours the nonprofit homes for the aged and sees they provide much better care in Ontario.

We suggest the government has to get into nursing homes and nonprofit nursing homes in a big way. We need those beds now. There are people on waiting lists. In fact, in many areas of this province it takes a year to get into a nursing home. In the meantime, people have to remain in unregulated rest and lodging homes across this province, where the care, to say the very least, is inadequate.

We suggest there should be 2,000 nonprofit beds provided in the nursing home sector in this province. We are not suggesting these beds would be run directly by the Ministry of Health. We are suggesting, instead, that church groups, municipalities and other community groups get involved in running these nursing homes and that government work with them, providing capital while they provide the care and maintenance in running these nursing homes.

I am convinced that in the long run, nonprofit nursing homes would not only provide better care for our senior citizens and others who need to be in nursing homes, but they would also be less expensive for the people of this province because the profit would be turned back into care for our elderly. Instead, the profit is taken out and given to the owners of the nursing homes. This is an area that would create 3,000 permanent jobs, and the capital funding for this program would come from our accelerated capital works program.

In the long term, we have to develop an industrial strategy in this province, not a political strategy such as BILD was, but a real industrial strategy. Ontario imports $35 billion worth of manufactured goods every year. If we could replace just 15 per cent of that, 60,000 jobs would be created. We have deficits in food, in auto parts, in machinery, especially mining machinery, and in electronics. These problems, these deficits, represent significant opportunities for job creation in Ontario. Our proposal is for a $5-billion investment over five years.

I want to focus on auto parts and food processing. Other parts of the proposal will be described later by other members of our caucus. We still have significant problems in the auto sector, even though we heard the Premier (Mr. Davis) in his summary of the throne speech say the auto sector has made a magnificent recovery. The fact is that in 1978, in Ontario, the UAW had 100,000 members in the auto sector. Now they are down to 79,000, and the working members are only 65,000. So 14,000 of those 79,000 are on layoff.

Thousands of auto workers in this province have lost their jobs and those jobs have gone permanently from our economy unless something is done to bring them back into Ontario. The reason the layoff numbers seem so low is that thousands of auto workers have lost their recall rights because they have been on layoff for such a long time. The reality is that the structural problems in the auto sector remain. They are there today just as they were in 1980 and 1981. We still have an incredibly weak auto parts industry. We still have no research and development. We still have an assembly bias and we still have a bias in the work force towards unskilled workers rather than skilled labour.

The government proposal in the throne speech to bring the offshore companies under the same kind of rules as the auto pact in my view is a cop-out. It was only a year ago that the former Minister of Industry and Tourism, the member for St. Andrew-St. Patrick (Mr. Grossman), said we needed 100 per cent Canadian content. Now, a year later, they say they are willing to settle for 65 per cent and, for example, Chrysler and Ford are running around 50 per cent Canadian content in what they produce and what they sell.

What we need in this province from our Liberal colleagues at the federal level is content legislation, not just for the offshore auto makers, but content legislation that applies equally to the North American auto makers as well.

When that content legislation is brought in, there will be an increased demand for auto parts in Ontario. In order to take advantage of that increased demand for auto parts, we need to set up a crown agency, as we have suggested before. You are familiar with this, Mr. Speaker, because you are the one Tory who voted for my resolution. We need a crown agency that we would call AutoCan. You can call it whatever you want, but we would call it AutoCan.

AutoCan's purpose would be to get into joint ventures and co-invest with the Canadian-owned auto parts sector. It would be to get into research and development and joint ventures in the research and development field with the private sector and to build a process of Canadianization of the auto parts sector in Ontario. The potential for job creation in the auto parts sector, if content legislation was brought in, would be 35,000 jobs, most of which would be here in Ontario.

In the food processing sector we again are going backwards rather than forward. Between 1979 and 1982, imports rose by 57.5 per cent in Ontario and the trade deficit in food processing increased by 50 per cent. Two hundred million dollars worth of replaceable fruits and vegetables are brought into this province every year. That represents 9,000 jobs. We suggest a program should be set up and funds should be provided to small food processors throughout the province in existing or new co-operatives, small processors and canneries. In return, these Canadian companies would sign performance guarantees and the money would be advanced through co-investments with the private sector.

A very real opportunity exists for a government that has the will to eliminate the trade deficit in the food processing sector in five years. I want to spend a few minutes talking about how this program should be paid for. This $2-billion program for short-term job creation would create, as I have said, 150,000 jobs throughout Ontario. Of this $2 billion, about $400 million is composed of low-interest loans that would be paid back over time. In addition, some of the funds would come from redirecting existing commitments. Some would be provided by Ontario Hydro, for example, in the residential energy conservation program, and some directly through private sector contributions, such as in the work futures training program.

Another $700 million would be offset by increased revenues, leaving less than $1 billion in net addition to the deficit. The total deficit with our increase would be less, as a percentage of the gross provincial product, than the deficit in this province in 1975-76.

Compare a deficit that would be close to $4 billion under our suggestions to the costs of unemployment in Ontario. Under the present circumstances we lose $11,265,000,000 in lost wages every year, $1.5 billion in lost taxes, and $4.7 billion in unemployment insurance benefits and welfare payments in Ontario.

We have a choice. We can invest now and put people to work in productive activities, or we can maintain high unemployment, low revenues and high deficits for many years to come.

The increased deficit we suggest is a productive deficit, one that adds needed facilities to our province. These are facilities that have to be built sooner or later, so it is not wasted money. It is money well spent for today and for tomorrow. A productive deficit also increases revenues for the government through direct and spinoff job creation.

In the area of taxation, I want to make several proposals. Over the last 30 years in Canada, the inequality of income share has remained remarkably constant. At present, as in 1951, the bottom 20 per cent of the population receives only four per cent of the income, while the top 20 per cent of the population captures more than 42 per cent of the income, which is more than the entire bottom 60 per cent of the population receives.

The distribution of wealth is even more unequal. The richest 10 per cent of Canadians own 57 per cent of total Canadian wealth, while the lowest 40 per cent own less than one per cent of the total wealth in this country. A progressive tax system can mitigate some of these inequalities.

Under our current system, regressive taxes greatly offset the progressiveness of the personal income tax. We have sales tax, Ontario health insurance plan premiums and property taxes. Furthermore, the favoured treatment of investment income means wage and salary incomes are taxed at roughly double the rate of investment income.

This budget, along with the last two, has raised taxes in Ontario for families by about $800 annually. The Lalonde Liberal budget imposes $3 billion worth of additional taxes over the next four years. At the same time, the Lalonde Liberal budget proposes corporate tax cuts of about $1 billion. This budget parallels some of those federal tax changes, therefore giving further benefits to the corporate sector.

We have examined a few areas in which we believe revenue could be raised, while at the same time providing more equality in the tax system. Canada ranks last of all Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development countries in terms of taxation of wealth. An annual net wealth tax is levied in the Scandinavian countries, West Germany, Austria, Belgium and Luxembourg. This tax is at an annual rate of between one and 1.5 per cent of net worth on an individual, in excess of an exemption level. This tax is applied in addition to succession duties.

Ontario does not even have succession duties. That tax was eliminated at the end of the 1970s. That tax raised $75 million when it was phased out. We believe a tax on estate wealth should be reintroduced and a net wealth tax should be considered. The estate tax could raise $100 million a year in Ontario and should be imposed in such a way as to avoid taxation of the family farm.

At present, the current tax treatment of dividend income and capital gains has resulted in a situation where many wealthy income earners effectively reduce their income rate to levels below what is paid by the average income earner. According to the federal Finance department, in 1979 there were 152,000 people filing tax returns who were identified as having incomes in excess of $50,000 a year. Of these, some 3,400 had no tax liability. A further 21,300 were taxable but paid less than 10 per cent of their income in federal tax. There were 740 individuals with incomes over $100,000 a year who had arranged their affairs so that they paid no federal income tax. A 20 per cent surtax on only the taxable portion of capital gains and dividend income would raise approximately $200 million in Ontario.

In addition, this government should be reviewing all its tax expenditures to business to determine if in fact they have been achieving job creation. I assume the only purpose for a tax expenditure to a business is to create jobs. They should be assessed to determine if they are. If they are not, then those tax expenditures should be plugged and we should redirect those funds so that jobs are created.

We believe that rather than introducing more and more tax expenditures we should be using a more direct approach of grants, joint ventures, loans and loan guarantees with performance guarantees attached to them. This provides for more accountability and an easy evaluation of success or failure. By raising other taxes such as capital tax on banks, trust companies and corporations to levels of other provinces, an additional $110 million could be raised. These tax changes along with the increases in corporate tax announced in the budget would raise in excess of half a billion dollars for the province.

In summary, as a member of this Legislature I feel a great deal of frustration with this government. The reason I feel frustration is that when one examines the sectors of the economy—whether it be housing, auto parts, food processing, or mining and mining machinery—opportunities exist for jobs to be created, thousands of jobs. I am convinced that if the government took advantage of these opportunities, this province could achieve full employment.

But the fact is we have a government that no longer has the will to govern. It no longer has a vision for its people. We have a government that refuses to take advantage of those opportunities and create jobs for the people of this province. It is incredibly frustrating when one comes from a community that now has had over 20,000 people unemployed for going on five years; in my home town we have had over 20,000 people unemployed.

Every week we have people who come in and virtually beg us for jobs, assuming that we have connections to get people jobs. They have come to the point where they will go and see a politician, an MPP; they have become so frustrated and alienated and so completely lost and filled with despair that they will go to an MPP's office and ask if they can get connections in order to get a job. This happens weekly.

Then we come and hear a budget read to us that creates not even enough jobs to take care of 10 per cent of the people who are unemployed in the province. It is frustrating and disappointing. One can only hope that eventually the people of this province will see this government has completely collapsed. It is completely void of any direction and ambition to do what is needed for this province.

We in this party have a vision for this province. We see that full employment can be achieved in Ontario. We would dearly love to have the opportunity, and I believe we will have the opportunity to implement our programs. In the meantime, we will harp away each day at this Treasurer and this government and put our proposals forward, communicate with the people and hope and pray that some day the Treasurer and the rest of his government will see the light and implement the policies to bring about the economic growth we know can be achieved.

In conclusion, I would like to present our amendment to the motion by the member for Rainy River (Mr. T. P. Reid).

5:30 p.m.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Cousens): Mr. Cooke moves, seconded by Mr. Rae, that the amendment of Mr. T. P. Reid be amended by—should I dispense with the reading?

Some hon. members: No.

The Acting Speaker: Are you sure?

Mr. McClellan: Read it slowly.

The Acting Speaker: Mr. Cooke moves, seconded by Mr. Rae, that the amendment of Mr. Reid be amended by adding after the word "recession" and before the words, "Therefore, this government lacks the confidence of this House," the following:

"Continuing the government's slavish"—

Some hon. members: Slavish.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: Slaving and slavish.

The Acting Speaker: I apologize to all members of the House.

"Continuing the government's slavish adherence to the economic directions established by the Liberal government, policies which have resulted in the unemployment of hundreds of thousands of Ontarians;

"Ignoring the overwhelming evidence of the budget's own figures that the private sector in general and private sector investment in particular are not leading us to economic recovery, yet cutting back on vital public investment in environmental protection, housing, health, social services, agriculture and the north;

"Failing to introduce a major program to assist the construction of co-operative and non-profit housing to create jobs and meet pressing needs for shelter;

"Failing to respond to the unacceptable levels of unemployment among young people and women with concrete proposals to create permanent jobs and comprehensive skills training programs;

"Failing to respond to the needs of older workers laid off or threatened by technological change by the establishment of a workers' training fund, improved layoff and severance pay legislation and pension reform;

"Increasing once again regressive OHIP premiums instead of shifting this unfair tax burden to an equitable tax source;

"Failing to reform the funding of health care in Ontario by banning extra billing and user fees;

"Abdicating completely its responsibility for the economic wellbeing of Ontario's people through its failure to introduce any long-term investment proposals to plan for our future."

On motion by Mr. Gillies, the debate was adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Gregory: Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the government House leader, may I indicate the business of the House for tomorrow and next week?

Tonight and tomorrow, the budget debate; on Monday, May 16, in the afternoon, the budget debate; on Tuesday, May 17, in the afternoon and evening, legislation, with second reading and committee of the whole if necessary, as follows:

Any third readings on the order paper; Bills 32, 1, 25, 28 and 29 standing in the name of the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry); Bills 4, 5, and 13 standing in the name of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Elgie); and, if there is time, Bill 14.

On Wednesday, May 18, the usual three committees may meet in the morning.

On Thursday, May 19, in the afternoon, private members' ballot items 1 and 2 in the names of the member for Essex North (Mr. Ruston) and the member for Wentworth (Mr. Dean); in the evening, budget debate.

On Friday, May 20, beginning the estimates of the Ministry of Government Services.

The House recessed at 5:36 p.m.

APPENDIX

ESTIMATES TIMETABLE

(Estimates to be taken in order shown)

To the committee of supply—the Ministry of Government Services, four hours; the Ministry of Revenue, five hours; the Management Board of Cabinet, six hours; the Ministry of Northern Affairs, eight and a half hours; the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs, five hours; the Ministry of Treasury and Economics, six hours; the Lieutenant Governor, Premier and Cabinet Office, five hours.

To the standing committee on administration of justice—the Ministry of Correctional Services, seven hours; the Ministry of the Solicitor General, nine hours; the Provincial Secretariat for Justice, four hours; the Ministry of the Attorney General, 13 hours; the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations, 20 hours.

To the standing committee on resources development—the Provincial Secretariat for Resources Development, seven hours; the Ministry of the Environment, 16 hours; the Ministry of Transportation and Communications, 15 hours; the Ministry of Natural Resources, 18 hours; the Ministry of Municipal Affairs and Housing, 15 hours; the Ministry of Labour, 22 hours.

To the standing committee on social development—the Provincial Secretariat for Social Development, five hours; the Ministry of Citizenship and Culture, five hours; the Ministry of Community and Social Services, 20 hours; the Ministry of Education, 14 hours; the Ministry of Colleges and Universities, eight hours; the Ministry of Tourism and Recreation, 10 hours; the Ministry of Health, 23 hours.

To the standing committee on general government—the Office of the Ombudsman, three hours; the Office of the Assembly, five hours; the Ministry of Agriculture and Food, 20 hours; the Office of the Provincial Auditor, three hours; the Ministry of Energy, 10 hours; the Ministry of Industry and Trade, 11 hours.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

Thursday, May 12, 1983

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment to the motion that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government.

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Speaker, I seem to have drawn my usual large crowd tonight. I appreciate joining what is, I believe, the third budget debate in which I have taken part since my election some two years ago. In commencing this evening I would like to draw the attention of the honourable members to the presence in the gallery of some very distinguished visitors from Brantford.

Mr. Ruston: You can't do that.

Mr. Gillies: My good friend the member for Essex North is telling me I cannot do that, and I apologize now, having already done it.

Hon. Mr. Walker: What city are they from?

Mr. Gillies: From Brantford. The honourable minister is asking me where they are from.

We have some friends, supporters and members—at the risk of sounding a trifle partisan—of the Brantford Progressive Conservative Association, and I am just delighted that they were able to be with us this evening.

In commencing this brief speech tonight, I would like to commend the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) for the budget he has tabled with this House in the last number of days outlining policies that I believe effectively address the major economic problems of the day and that will help our private sector to take full advantage of, and build on the opportunities afforded by, improving economic conditions. I am confident that in tandem with other actions of our government this budget will be responsible for what will doubtless be a slow, but none the less steady, transformation of the current economic situation into a recovery of the economy of our province.

I would like to say at this time, and I think I speak for all my colleagues on this side of the House, that we have been very proud of the performance of our Treasurer in the last number of days. We recognize the difficult task the Treasurer and his staff had preparing and tabling the budget we now have before us. Meeting the deadline with the various complications that developed in the last number of days required, I know, an unusual effort on the part of the people in the Ministry of Treasury and Economics. I am sure that effort is appreciated by all members of the House.

Although I know this was the subject of an emergency debate last Monday in which I took part, I would like to reflect briefly on the circumstances that surrounded the preparation and presentation of this year's budget, as I fear that in some ways the substance of the budget has been overshadowed by the purported leak of some documents that were alleged to be part of the budget. The incident I am referring to at the print shop in this city has had serious implications for the preparation of budgets in the future. I think it has in turn had effects on what will be the future budgetary policies of the government.

I would like to make a few observations about the issues involved in the incident itself and the subsequent debate on those issues that took place in this House. The incident led many members opposite to demand the resignation of the Treasurer. It is our feeling on this side of the House that the Treasurer must remain in his post and continue to exercise his duties on behalf of the people of this province.

Mr. Nixon: That is not what he said.

Mr. Gillies: I am coming to that. There was some insistence the Treasurer must resign because of the dilemma in which the federal Minister of Finance found himself. I would like to make only two observations on that point.

First, the two cases in my opinion are so dissimilar that the situation prohibits any drawing of legitimate comparisons between them.

Mr. Wildman: More like comic books.

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Cousens): Order.

Mr. Gillies: My friends over there are just reminding all my friends up in the galleries why they voted Conservative in the last election and why that change may have been beneficial for them.

Mr. Wildman: You probably have as many friends in the gallery as you have over here.

The Acting Speaker: The honourable member's interjections will cease.

Mr. Gillies: I hope I have more friends in the gallery than I have over there.

The Acting Speaker: The member will speak to the Speaker.

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Speaker, I will speak to you.

The Acting Speaker: The members opposite will refrain from interjecting.

Mr. Gillies: I will try to ignore the interjections opposite.

In speaking again to the comparison between the situation the Treasurer found himself in and the situation Mr. Lalonde was in some weeks prior to that, it is obvious to any observer that Mr. Lalonde was in large part the cause of his own misfortune, and directly and immediately contributed to the leak of the federal budget. I do not believe those conditions hold in the case involving the Treasurer of Ontario. The members of all parties, in fairness, should acknowledge there is an obvious and important difference between the two cases and govern their statements accordingly.

One has only to read the letters to the editors of our various newspapers to appreciate that the public is very supportive of the Treasurer in this case. In my opinion, it would be a great shame indeed if the province were to be deprived of a man of his undoubted abilities and talents, someone who has in the last 12 years contributed greatly to the public life and administration of this province.

8:10 p.m.

I and the members of our caucus, therefore, urge the Treasurer not to resign and, if such a resignation should be tendered, we urge the Premier (Mr. Davis) not to accept it. There is nothing in this unfortunate incident that has compromised the integrity of his office, nor would a decision on the Treasurer's part to retain his cabinet post undermine the principle of ministerial accountability or show any disrespect of this House. I can assure the Treasurer that he has the confidence of his colleagues in this caucus and of the people of Ontario.

In the light of the incident last Thursday evening, it might be advisable for this House to take a long look at the relationship that exists between parliamentary traditions, often rooted in the practices and conventions of a less complicated age, and the demands and procedures typical of a modern government. In particular, this incident should serve to demonstrate to all of us that we have to explore ways of opening up further the budgetary process itself. I have heard this sentiment expressed by members of all three parties, and I think that it is something we should all be working towards.

Speaking to the budget itself, it is an honest and realistic document, formulated in consultation, as has become the practice in Ontario, with a large number of groups and individuals representing a broad spectrum of Ontario society. It is an honest budget because it does not attempt to disguise the fact that, though our economy is improving, we still have some distance to go before the recovery is complete.

It is a realistic budget because it recognizes that an enduring recovery and positive economic growth can only be built on a vigorous private sector. As the Treasurer said, "Only private enterprise can undertake the investments and create jobs upon which prosperity depends." I do not say this in any dogmatic or philosophical sense. We all know, as members of the House, how much good can be done through the use of short-term job creation projects. We know what can be done by a responsible government, operating in a mixed economy, to help people through the worst days of a recessionary cycle.

At the same time, I have to believe that, in the long term, for the continuation of full-time, permanent jobs in the private economy, we have to offer incentives to business, small business and large business, and to the various organs of the economy that are going to bring about a permanent recovery in our economy.

This budget has demonstrated that our government is committed to helping the unemployed, and maintaining the level and quality of fundamental social support upon which our citizens have come to depend and which they have reason to expect in the future. The government has set out four objectives in this budget, which we believe will work towards, and help to restore, economic prosperity.

First, there is the maintenance of a co-operative federal economic system, a co-operative federal and provincial environment. Second, there is the creation of long-term private sector employment through increased productivity and through increased investment in the private sector. Third, there is the expansion of short-term job opportunities through job creation programs, skills development and economic growth. Finally, there is the maintenance of a fiscal framework that will allow the government to fund public programs without burying the province in debt.

To achieve these objectives and to help strengthen the recovery, this budget introduces programs that will strike a balance between strategic stimulation of the economy and continued fiscal responsibility. In order to ensure the continued delivery of high-quality services to the people of Ontario and to fund job creation initiatives, the government has introduced a number of new equitable tax measures, some of which have been implemented as temporary measures. I speak specifically of the social maintenance tax, the five per cent surcharge.

As mentioned earlier, although our economy is now in a recovery mode, there remain a number of obstacles to full economic recovery. The most pressing of these, in both its economic and human consequences, is the problem of unemployment. The recession has taken a terrible toll in jobs and job opportunities across this country. In the 18-month period ending January 1983, the recession has eliminated permanently, or we hope in many cases temporarily, over 1.4 million jobs in the Canadian economy. In Ontario in 1982, employment declined by 108,000. Some improvement was evident by April of this year when seasonally adjusted employment had risen by 24,000 compared to the November 1982 low.

In spite of improvements in the Ontario economic picture in the last number of months and predictions for continued improvements during the year, unemployment will continue to be the major economic problem facing our people and facing this government. For 1983, the budget predicts an average unemployment rate of 11.7 per cent, with an average annual employment level below that of 1982. I am sure every member of this House will agree that this is a very sorry situation and one that every public organ in this country has to work towards eliminating.

This apparent paradox of high unemployment in a recovery economy can be explained by a number of factors. We have to turn here to our friends the economists. First, there is always a lag between the upturn in economic growth and activity and the decline in the rate of unemployment. In a riding like mine, which is so heavily dependent on heavy manufacturing, that is very evident. As I talk to people in my community, they will point to the renewed activity in the housing market and increased sales of certain consumer products, but there will still inevitably be a lag before the heavy manufacturing sector pulls out of the tailspin in which it has been.

The lag will be particularly pronounced in the current recovery because the recession cut demand for products to the point where many industries were operating well below capacity. Consequently, in the initial stages of this recovery, employers will make greater use of their existing work force as they work back to full production, and they will only expand their work force when the existing people are fully employed.

The second factor is in itself paradoxical. Economic conditions improve and unemployed people, who have become so frustrated that they are no longer registered as unemployed, begin again to take up the job search and temporarily, one would expect, swell the jobless numbers. An analysis by the Toronto Dominion Bank points out that these people may well swamp the job market as they return to the employment scene, and the result will be continuing upward pressure on the unemployment rate.

It does not follow then, as some critics would have us believe, that high unemployment rates mean that recovery is an illusion. This, however, is of little immediate comfort to the unemployed man or woman. There is little comfort in being told that one is a lagging indicator. Being a lagging indicator does not buy food and it does not pay the mortgage. Nor is there comfort in being informed that one has been seasonally adjusted. We cannot seasonally adjust pain and frustration, and hardship indices cannot measure the damage done to a person's self-esteem.

It is this government's responsibility to do what it can, through both direct and indirect measures, to stimulate job creation in our economy. The programs contained in the 1983 budget prove that we have not only to accept that responsibility, but we must have the policies that will effectively discharge it. I am confident that the budget policies put before us by the Treasurer will help us to meet this challenge of unemployment without jeopardizing the fiscal integrity of this province and without burdening the citizens of Ontario with a huge public debt.

There is a connection between inflation and unemployment that must be considered when assessing the wisdom of any policy calling for massive financial stimulation. In its latest annual report, the Bank of Canada notes that many of our current economic problems, including unemployment, are caused by the distortions in our economy introduced by inflation and stagflation in the 1970s.

A contributing cause of this inflation was massive public spending, which, no matter how well-intentioned, produced some nasty, unintended consequences. Now, just as we are beginning to pull out of the recession, some critics would have us adopt policies that would again begin that sorry cycle. This is what they call progress, while accusing this government of being on a treadmill.

The real keys to the creation of permanent new employment lie in policies that will control the provincial deficit, that will create an environment conducive to new investment and capital formation, and that will assist our industries and manufacturers in becoming more competitive by improving their productivity.

The budget puts in place policies to stimulate the economy strategically and to help the private sector create jobs. For example, the corporate tax exemption for small businesses has been extended for a further year. We calculate this will cost the province approximately $180 million in revenue. However, this is a sound investment in the economy that will yield a return in the form of higher tax revenues from the businesses that are able to sell their products and continue in operation.

It is also a sensible indirect investment in job creation, because historically the small business sector creates more than 50 per cent of all new jobs in this province and employs about 40 per cent of our jurisdiction's work force. In addition, small businesses will benefit, as will all businesses, from the budget's amendment of Ontario's loss carryover provision.

These changes have been introduced to complement those announced in the recent federal budget. Each of these programs and others will create in the private sector a new pool of investment capital by forgoing revenue. It is to be hoped this capital will be invested in expansion and the creation of new job opportunities. In the early stages of the recovery, it will be expected that businesses will use increased cash flow to eliminate their debts. However, this is a necessary prelude to any form of sustained growth.

We have also taken steps in this budget—and

I think this is very important—to stimulate directly the employment market by employing people through various government programs in either short term or, we hope, longer term job creation projects. Many of these projects, some of them co-operatively run by the government of Canada and the government of Ontario, were undertaken in the budget of May 1982.

In that budget, the government introduced a four-point job creation program, which included accelerating the capital projects program, the farm improvement program, the co-operative employment projects funds and youth program enrichment. These various projects received $171 million in funding and were expected in the last year to create some 31,000 jobs. As of April, last month, the government had invested $176 million and these programs have created more than 40,000 jobs.

I hope these efforts will be further enhanced by the Treasurer's announcement of the 90-day sales tax holiday on certain types of furniture and household goods and by the announcement of a permanent tax exemption for large trucks and trailers. This will directly benefit my riding because of the presence of Pullman Trailmobile Canada Ltd., which employs several hundred people in the production of truck trailers. I have talked to several people in the industry since the budget was brought down on Tuesday and they see great things for the trucking industry because of this measure.

In November 1982, the government provided an additional $50 million in funds to create 7,500 new jobs through co-ordinated efforts through the Board of Industrial Leadership and Development program.

Interjection.

Mr. Gillies: Yes, the BILD program. My friends opposite are so quick to criticize it and so quick to try and take credit when it has a positive benefit in their own ridings. I always point out to my friends opposite that they are opposition members in this chamber from Monday to Friday and they are almost government members when they go back to their ridings on Saturday and Sunday, absolutely falling over themselves to announce new initiatives in their ridings and to get on the platform or in the picture with whatever minister of this government happens to be there.

But I do not want to get sidetracked by my friends opposite and talk about the habits of opposition members.

Mr. Mackenzie: I thought it was going to spend $150 million a year for five years. How come it is only $111 million this year? How come the figures have changed?

The Acting Speaker: Order.

Mr. Mackenzie: It was $150 million a year. All of a sudden it is $111 million this year.

Mr. Gillies: I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the member for Hamilton East for the background music. He is always so helpful.

As of April 19 the total value of job creation programs under the Canada-Ontario employment development program—and this is a program that has been of distinct benefit to our community in the city of Brantford—stood at $188.9 million. I am very pleased, as are the various municipalities in Brant county. I am sure we have benefited more, dollar for dollar, in Brant county through COED than any other jurisdiction in the province. We have already approved well over $3 million of COED programs, which shows, I think, a great commitment on the part of the government of Ontario—

Mr. Nixon: And the government of Canada.

Mr. Gillies: —and the government of Canada, as my friend opposite reminds us, to our community.

I might say in response to those who say we need more public sector investment in our various industries that I have to be very aware that the governments of Canada and Ontario have a massive investment sitting in the Massey-Ferguson company in my riding and a very large-scale investment also in the White Farm Equipment company, not to speak of all the smaller companies that have been helped through federal programs like the industry and labour adjustment program and through provincial programs like the Ontario Development Corp. I am very sensitive to any suggestions that our governments have not taken a hands-on attitude towards the problems of our economy, because indeed they have.

I am going to speak very briefly about an area of special concern and responsibility of mine, and that is youth unemployment. We spent in the last year in this province over $90 million on youth employment programs to create over 80,000 jobs for young people. We have to be extremely concerned that the rate of unemployment among our young people under the age of 25 is close to double that of the population as a whole. We have made a massive public sector investment through this province and through various organs of the federal government to try to make a dent in that program.

Mr. Mackenzie: There are 220,000 unemployed young people. I thought that was your responsibility.

Mr. Gillies: Mr. Speaker, I am trying not to get sidetracked, but again I hear the very sensible and constructive suggestions being made by our friends opposite, many of whom could not even name the projects we have under way through the government now. They are not aware of the various youth employment programs that the Ontario government is running—

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: Order.

Mr. Gillies: —and that, I would suggest, is because they are more concerned with scoring political points than they are with realistically addressing the problem.

As soon as I open my mouth on youth employment the music starts; but as soon as I start speaking about the Ontario youth employment program, the Ontario career action program, the Experience '83 program, and so on, I see nothing but blank expressions, because they do not know what I am talking about. They have no idea what our government is doing to help young people; and, at the risk of being repetitious, it is because they do not care; as long as they can score their political marks their purpose in life is achieved.

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: Order.

Mr. Gillies: Through the budget announced by the Treasurer on Tuesday we will be enhancing these youth employment programs by some $30 million for a total of $120 million, an increase this year over last of over 25 per cent. I take severe exception to any suggestion that we are not doing the job, because the members of this government and the members of this caucus are responding riding by riding and they are doing the job.

8:30 p.m.

I will draw to a close with a few brief observations. This government has one of the most respected records of fiscal integrity of any jurisdiction in North America. The government of Ontario has one of the best standings in the money market. We have one of the best administrations of our own government's affairs. We have the respect of the people who are going to invest in this economy and bring our province out of the recession.

At the same time, in an ongoing fashion, we have responded with realistic and sweeping programs to help the unemployed in our society and we will continue to do so. Those efforts have been increased and enriched in this budget. We will continue to do so.

I ask the members of this House whether these things have been achieved because of the barracking of our friends across the way. I would suggest that has not done a darned thing for this province in 40-odd years. I am a very tolerant man, but like many over here I get sick of the pious prattling that we put up with day after day from the people who have never had the responsibility for so much as running a $1-million department, a $1-million business or anything else, when this government is stewarding over $20 billion of the public's money every year and is doing it with the overwhelming support of the people who elected us.

It is my hope that in the weeks and months to come the Treasurer will remain in this House and retain his responsibilities as Treasurer and bring in the measures we have outlined in this budget. He will do so under the leadership of quite simply the best politician in this country, the Premier.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Why did he not go federal?

Mr. Boudria: Yes, why didn't he?

Mr. Gillies: The member would have loved that. Despite the suggestions from my friends opposite, whose Prime Minister blanched at the thought the Premier would go federal, he will continue at the helm here.

Many members of this caucus will be speaking in the days to come to the measures we have outlined in this budget. The Treasurer will bring forward the budget bills and we will march forward in a responsible manner to fulfil our obligations to the people of Ontario. It is an obligation. It is not an easy job but it is one that we take seriously and that we relish and we will continue to steward for the people of Ontario in the years to come.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to participate in the debate on the budget of earlier this week. Before speaking on the budget, I would like to remind all honourable members of the very sad economic tragedy that my own constituency is living at this very moment that we are here discussing this budget. I think it is important to talk about that in order to find out what things are like in the real world out there, not in that Utopian world that has just been described to us by the member for Brantford (Mr. Gillies).

The constituency I live in is suffering from the highest unemployment we can ever recall, perhaps in much the same way as Brantford. Just this morning a young man came into my constituency office to ask me if I could assist him in finding a job. He has just finished his post-secondary education at Algonquin College in Ottawa where he took a course to become a machinist and tool and die maker. This is one of the professions, the line of employment, we have been telling people and informing our young people to direct their efforts towards because that is where the future is. This young person did not think the future is there.

He has been finished school for months now and cannot find any employment at all as a tool and die maker. How can we give any hope to our young people when somebody who is 23 or 24 years old and has been going to school for just about all his life cannot find any employment after taking the courses and the instruction we as a society have directed him to take?

That is the very sad reality we have in our area. When 40 per cent of our young people are unemployed, I do not think we can say things are going well and this government is doing a good job. The reality of the constituency I represent is very different.

The Minister of Industry and Trade (Mr. Walker) is here in the House with us tonight and he too knows the difficult situation my constituency is in. Perhaps I should state at this time I am grateful for the good co-operation I have personally received from the minister in trying to assist the people of the constituency of Prescott-Russell. We have had some assistance but all is not well in that area, as the minister knows. We are still hopeful we can attract more industry and more employment for the people of the riding of Prescott-Russell.

We had all hoped this budget would address itself in a major way to meaningful job creation. I am not speaking merely of the make-work things some would perhaps expect to find in the budget to create only short-term, rather meaningless jobs to get some people off one's back for a short while. That is not what I am advocating. I am stating there are many things, many capital investments that could have been made by the provincial government in the constituency I represent to stimulate employment and benefit this province on a long-term basis.

We have many public facilities in need of improvement. As the member for Carleton (Mr.

Mitchell) will know—he was here a minute ago and has now stepped out—in regard to our highways in eastern Ontario we do not even have a decent highway linking the capital of this country to Highway 401. That is a major undertaking and the kind of development project I would have liked to see included in the budget document with which we were presented earlier this week. That is the kind of initiative that would build something for the future, while at the same time giving meaningful employment to the people of this province. Sadly, we did not see those things.

We hear this is supposed to be a recovery budget, but that is contradictory. It proposes a consumer-led recovery, but it aborts the process by taking seven times more out of the consumer's pocket than it puts back in.

The members opposite and many other people have criticized the federal government in the past for its inaction, or at least what they perceive as being the federal government's inaction. The federal budget of only a few weeks ago at least delayed increases in taxes to let the economy pick itself up again, but these people have socked the consumer right away before we even had a chance to get out of the present economic recession.

Mr. Gordon: You are so naive. They are waiting for the election. You must know that. Don't they consult you? How naive.

Mr. Boudria: The member for Sudbury would know, coming from an area of high unemployment, that the people from his area are not out of the woods yet. The people from his constituency are still in a very difficult economic situation. They do not want to be socked right now with increases in taxes. They could have waited for a while for that tax increase, one that is largely due to the mismanagement of the economy by this provincial government.

I would like to refresh the members' memories about an event that took place not long ago, in February 1981. At that time the government did a few things, two of which are particularly worth remembering. One was the release of the document I have in my hand, Building Ontario in the 1980s, by the Board of Industrial Leadership and Development. We all remember the board, commonly known as BILD. The other major event that occurred not too many days after, by mere coincidence, was the calling of the 1981 election.

8:40 p.m.

Mr. Wildman: It was not intended that way.

Mr. Boudria: As the member for Algoma states, it was not intended that way. That is just the way things happen.

Let us remember what the government said in 1981 at that election. They wanted a mandate, they wanted to "keep the promise," they said the Premier could do it and all those other things. They wanted a mandate to keep taxes down. I am sure the House will recall that. Is that not cute?

Ontario health insurance plan premiums, which are, as members know, a form of taxation, have increased by 42 per cent in 26 months. This is not bad for a government that was going to keep taxes down. Imagine if had they not promised to keep taxes down what things would have been like.

Personal income tax has increased 15 per cent in those 26 months. Again, this is from the government that promised to keep taxes down and wanted a mandate to keep such taxes down.

Since 1981, the three budgets of the Treasurer have increased the tax burden of an average family of four with an income of $25,000 by $1,470.61 per year. Here is how that works: OHIP fees for the average family of four have increased by $368.40; retail sales tax has increased for the average family by $181; the hospitality tax, another $159; and the usual sin taxes that people do not usually object to—but I will—liquor and tobacco, have increased by $195.41. Apparently the government thinks it is a sin for the senior citizen to smoke his pipe and for the family to have a bottle of wine at dinner. I do not happen to agree and I do not think those taxes are any more legitimate than any of the others.

The gasoline tax has increased by $184.13 and the provincial income tax—again the income tax of the government that promised to keep taxes down if it was re-elected—has increased by $381.60. It is small wonder that people are losing faith in what public officials are telling them when we hear this kind of thing.

A moment ago we heard from the member for Brantford that this was an honest budget. I found that to be a particularly amusing phrase, especially when I look at page 17 of the budget document, which describes the social services maintenance tax. We should remember the previous speaker stated that this was an honest budget. Those are the words I believe he used.

A social services maintenance tax—imagine the pressure the unemployed, the welfare recipients, the recipients of family benefits, the sole-support mothers and the other people in this province who have to live on social assistance are enduring at this moment. Imagine what it is like to have to exist on that amount of assistance, $238 per month I believe it is for a single person on general welfare assistance. It is very difficult to exist and the pressures on these individuals are just unbearable.

Now, just to make them feel better, the Treasurer has a new tax called the social services maintenance tax. The person who is already paying high taxes and the welfare recipient who already feels so burdened and so pressured being on general welfare assistance are now being blamed by this government for the increase in taxes. If things are not already bad enough for people on welfare, they are going to be even worse because from now on these people are held responsible by this Treasurer for the increase in taxes.

I asked the Treasurer this afternoon if this increase in taxes will generate some $170 million. If a $170-million expenditure warrants a tax to be named after it—and one would assume that is the case because the Treasurer has done it—then why do we not call another tax the Minaki Lodge fiasco tax? After all, that cost us $40 million. That certainly warrants having a tax named after it.

How about the John White land assembly vision tax? That surely deserves a name. Some $508 million was spent on that deal by Ontario, a far greater amount than is needed this year for that increase in social assistance. Or why do we not call a new tax the Ontario Hydro overbuilding tax? Just imagine what that cost the taxpayers of Ontario. But no, the government does not name a tax that way; of course not. They would hold themselves responsible if they did. Instead, they prefer to attack the poor, the elderly and the people on social assistance.

As far as I am concerned, that is the most disgraceful thing in the whole budget. That is the thing that struck me while reading the document in the lock up session that day. Why would anyone blame the recipients of social assistance for the mismanagement of the economy this provincial government has orchestrated? That is shameful.

I would like to talk about agriculture for a moment. As the members know, the area I represent has a large farming community but, unlike other farming communities in Ontario, the farmers in my area are far from being well off. Perhaps they are not well off anywhere, but the economic situation for farmers in the area I represent is probably even worse than in most areas.

The members will recall that not long ago Highway 417 at the St. Isidore de Prescott exit in my riding was blocked by a group of disgruntled farmers, out of desperation as a method of protesting the difficult economic situation they were in, where banks were coming in daily and taking over farms.

Pork producers from our area were one day in their farms, their houses and had a business; and the next day they were on general welfare assistance with no place to stay. Overnight, just like that, everything was swept from under them. That is the harsh economic reality of the agricultural area in the riding I represent. For a long time we have stated in this House that what the provincial government has to do is put the agricultural component in a balanced situation with that of other jurisdictions.

This afternoon I asked the Treasurer why the government of this province assists farmers to an average of $3,000 each, when the government of the nearest province to the east, Quebec, assists farmers by $8,600-odd for every farmer. If one were a farmer in Prescott-Russell and one's farm was in St-Eugene near the Quebec border, and the farmer on the other side of the border, actually just the other side of the fence, in Quebec in St. Redempteur, Rigaud or some other area receives $6,000 more in benefits, how is one supposed to compete when each gets the same price for his commodity? One cannot compete when one person is $6,000 ahead of the other, no matter how one looks at it.

Mr. G. I. Miller: The member for Brantford did not mention that.

Mr. Boudria: Perhaps the member for Brantford forgot about that aspect of agriculture, or maybe he has never been to Prescott-Russell, but either way there must be farmers in his area who are just as concerned, even if they are a little farther from that artificial line that separates Ontario and Quebec.

Mr. Charlton: There is one of them sitting in the front row.

Mr. Boudria: I hope that member takes note of what I have to say. I hope the member in the front row just described previously will be able to speak on behalf of his party and explain to everyone the importance of improving the agricultural sector of this province.

8:50 p.m.

Moments ago I referred to the Board of Industrial Leadership and Development document. I am sure you have memorized the document by now, Mr. Speaker, but I would like to refresh your memory on a few sentences which are very important for the people of the area I represent.

I am glad to see the member for Renfrew South (Mr. Yakabuski) and the member for Carleton (Mr. Mitchell) are here, because I am sure they will remember this part of the BILD document. I quote as follows:

"Through land-clearing efforts, selective drainage and farmstead improvements, one million acres of farm land in eastern and northern Ontario are capable of being upgraded into high-quality agricultural land. The large capital input required for these improvements will greatly increase the overall productive capacity of the agricultural land base and permit the expansion of high-value crops in areas where agricultural potential has not been fully realized.

"To achieve such production, Ontario will establish an acreage improvement fund which will provide financing at favourable rates."

I wonder whether members from eastern and northern Ontario recall those profound words of BILD. How did this government go about implementing this? First, it said it would drain one million acres of agricultural land. Then twice within a year after the election, the government increased the interest in the tile drainage scheme, from six per cent to eight per cent and from eight per cent to 10 per cent.

One does not have to be an economic genius to realize that if you make these plans unattractive, nobody is going to use them, and that if nobody uses them, one million acres of agricultural land will never be drained.

Further, the government was lending up to 75 per cent of the cost of improving drainage, to a maximum of $20,000. Then they changed that and lowered it to 60 per cent.

How are farmers in eastern and northern Ontario ever going to drain that one million acres which the government itself thinks is a reasonable amount of land to drain in those areas when the government is making plans unattractive for the people of eastern and northern Ontario?

One might think the people of eastern and northern Ontario could have drained their farms at the same time as the people of southwestern Ontario did. But that is not so. Let me tell the members why. It is important to realize that up until a few years ago, the tiles that were used to improve drainage were orange clay tiles. Those orange clay tiles did not work in our area; they broke under the weight of the clay and the farmers in our area therefore were not able to drain with those tiles.

The member for Renfrew South knows those things did not work in our area.

Mr. Pollock: I am not from Renfrew South. I am from Hastings-Peterborough.

Mr. Boudria: I am sorry; Hastings-Peterborough. He should know that; he is from eastern Ontario as well.

We know that when they started with the perforated tiles, these tiles worked fine in our area. But by the time we got those tiles, by the time technology was able to accommodate us, the government programs no longer were attractive.

Why are the government programs not attractive for eastern and northern Ontario when they were attractive elsewhere? Can the government answer that question?

Would it not be logical to have programs now that would be as meaningful as the programs were when other parts of the province were drained? I ask the member for Hastings-Peterborough, does eastern Ontario deserve no less?

Those things have to be addressed. Improvements in the agricultural area are very important, especially in tile drainage. That is the only way the yield will be improved in eastern and northern Ontario so that we can begin to compete not only with the other parts of Ontario that have already been tile-drained but also with those other provinces that are getting far greater benefits than we are in this province. That is going to have to be addressed very soon by this government, but we are very sorry to hear the budget does not address this issue at all.

The government talks about the $135-million young farmer program. Of course, those are empty words, because $9 million is going to be spent this year and that is all. Just the interest on the Suncor purchase is going to be $93 million this year. The interest on 25 per cent of an oil company that produced only one job in this province is $93 million and the help to young farmers is $9 million. All the young farmers together are worth only 10 per cent of the effort that the Premier (Mr. Davis) put into purchasing Suncor, or one quarter of Suncor, in order to have "a window on the oil industry," whatever that means.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Agriculture is not playing a big role.

Mr. Boudria: We can see, as the member for Haldimand-Norfolk states, that agriculture is not playing a very big role in this province. The government extracts more from the agricultural area than it puts back in.

Let me give an example of this. The government's commitment to the whole agriculture sector in the province is $295 million. Do members know how much tax is generated just from tobacco, which is, of course, an agricultural product? The member for Haldimand-Norfolk would know. It was $533 million that was collected in tobacco taxes. Not only is the government not giving anything to the agriculture sector, it is taking it away from the agriculture sector.

Mr. Ruston: They are bleeding it.

Mr. Boudria: As the member for Essex North says, the government is bleeding the agriculture area. That is its effort in the agriculture sector.

Mr. Ruston: Plus all the tax they get on the corn and the booze.

Mr. Rotenberg: We are taking it from smokers, not the farmers, and you know that.

Mr. Boudria: The member for the large agricultural area of Wilson Heights, with all the farms that are there and all the acreage that is in agricultural production in that constituency, would know that whether we are taxing one part or the other it is still a farm product, as the member for Essex North has stated.

I would like to comment very briefly on the youth employment programs of this government.

Mr. Wildman: Where is the member for Brantford?

Mr. Boudria: I would have liked the member for Brantford to be here in his capacity as the parliamentary assistant to the Provincial Secretary for Social Development (Mrs. Birch).

Mr. Ruston: Whatever that means.

Mr. Boudria: Yes, whatever all that means. I guess it means he is responsible for the youth employment or, as some of us would like to say, the youth unemployment in this province.

Mr. Charlton: You mean he is responsible for this mess we have got?

Mr. Boudria: He takes credit for things being fine, so I guess he has to share in the blame for things not working. One should follow with the other. Therefore, if he takes the credit for things being good, I believe he should take part of the blame for things being bad.

Youth unemployment across the province, as we have been saying, is approximately 22 per cent and will rise over the summer months. One out of every four young people in this province will be out of a job this summer, and that is a very sad state of affairs. That is not the kind of treatment we had when we were seeking employment as young people—not that I consider myself that old, but I am still past the age after which one is usually described as qualifying for inclusion in the youth statistics.

The member for Brantford was explaining all the virtues of some of the programs his government has put in place, programs that he says are really helping out the youth of our province. I think the youth programs in this province are an unmitigated disaster.

We have talked about the Ontario youth employment program before, which had, by the way, $6.5 million left over in its kitty last year. Can you imagine having money left in a youth employment program, Mr. Speaker? That is how well they have administered it; they had money left. I am sure the young people of this province who stayed unemployed last year are not impressed by having money left in the program. It is another example of the maladministration of this province by this government.

The Ontario youth employment program was not the only failure. The youth programs last year were supposed to create 93,000 jobs, we were told. But all the information we have to date tells us that only 75,000 positions were achieved. It is ludicrous that in a year when youth employment soared to unprecedented heights, the government fell 18,000 jobs or 20 per cent short of its already inadequate goal.

I was on an open-line radio show the other day with the member for Brantford, and we were discussing youth unemployment. The thing I fail to understand is why it is, if the government programs are so great, we have one quarter of all our young people out of work. If the government is doing such a fine job, why is it that instead of spending some $70 per unemployed youth, as it was three years ago, it is today spending $46? That is not improvement, not matter how one cuts it.

If the government is spending $46 per unemployed youth and it was spending $70 only a few years ago, I think this speaks very sadly to the record of this government in improving the lives of our young people. The young people of this province have been let down by the government.

Last year, along with the member for Essex South (Mr. Mancini) and the member for Kitchener-Wilmot (Mr. Sweeney), I was on a youth employment task force we sent around this province. We spoke to many unemployed youth in this province, and they were not impressed with the record of this government.

Mr. Rotenberg: I am sure they were impressed with you.

Mr. Boudria: I want the member for Wilson Heights to know that when we interviewed the youth of this province, we asked them, "If you had known what it was like, would you have quit school?" In all cases the young people answered, "No, I would not have."

Do members know what that tells us? That tells all of us—and the member for Wilson Heights as well—that we are misleading our young people as a society.

Mr. Rotenberg: Maybe you are.

Mr. Boudria: I think all of us are collectively responsible for this. When we do not provide adequate guidance for our young people, when the average young person goes out of high school having received something like four minutes of guidance, does the member not agree we are collectively misleading those young people? When most of the information they get is from watching television versus getting adequate guidance in school, does the member feel we are not misleading our young people? I do not believe that. I think that we are, as a society, if we have nothing better to tell them.

When one goes into a high school and speaks with students, as I have done on many cases—and I am sure the member for Wilson Heights has—and asks them, "What do you want to do?" and one still hears such occupations as hair-dresser, auto mechanic, airline pilot and cruise stewardesses, we as a society are not telling them everything that has to be said.

When one asks a young person who says he wants to be an airline pilot, "Do you know whether there are any openings for that?" the young person says: "Well, gee, no. I never did think of it that way." Why not?

Is it because instead of having one guidance teacher for every 300 young people, as the professionals state we should have, or one guidance teacher to every 350, as the Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson) says we should have, we are not meeting any of those objectives because we have one guidance teacher for every 410 young people in this province, most guidance teachers being busy filling out forms and doing crisis counselling and all those other kinds of things they have to do and not having any time for career counselling of our young people?

I tell the member for Wilson Heights that yes, as a society, we are misleading our young people if we cannot tell them anything better than what we have done now.

I challenge members to do the same as we have done in our task force to go to schools, go to drop-in centres, go to where the young people are and talk to them individually; to take the few days it takes to do it and go all across the province.

We went to Ottawa, Toronto, Windsor, Thunder Bay, Sudbury and various other areas, and it is the same everywhere. The numbers change but the feeling does not that we, as a society, have not told them what we should have. We have not informed them. We have let them down. This budget and the attitudes of this government towards young people are not making it any better, and that is a very sad reality.

I have just been looking at a newspaper clipping from today's Toronto Star. We have Archbishop Remi De Roo telling us that the government of this province—all governments for that matter—has a wrong set of values: "profits and growth instead of compassionate concern for the weak and the poor." I would add to that the young, because if we are letting down any group in our society, the young have to be included with the weak and the poor.

If there is one good thing that has come out of this budget it is the change of heart that this government finally has had towards the child-rearing drop-out provision. If there is any one member of this Legislature who deserves credit for having that changed because of all his personal effort in that area, it is the member for London Centre (Mr. Peterson), the Leader of the Opposition.

The Leader of the Opposition has been pressing the government on this issue for two or three years now, I guess. Ever since I have been in this Legislature, the member for London Centre has been speaking of the child-rearing drop-out provision and the unreasonable attitude of the Treasurer and the government towards changing that veto and allowing—

Mr. Cassidy: The NDP was making that argument five years before the member for London Centre became leader.

Mr. Boudria: I am not here to argue who said it first. All I know is that I have been a member of this House for a little more than two years and I have not heard an NDP member raise that issue. Maybe they have, but not while I was here. The member for London Centre has raised it, and he still has a resolution on the order paper right now concerning the topic. He has put a lot of effort into that area and he has succeeded in convincing the government finally to do something about it.

This province was the last holdout on dropping the veto. In March 1981, British Columbia finally got around to changing its mind and allowing the child-rearing drop-out provision. But this province, because it has more than a third of the population of the nine provinces participating in the Canada pension plan, had an effective veto since two-thirds consent is necessary to make any change in the Canada pension plan.

This government, by being the last holdout, prevented the enhancement of life of women not only in Ontario but all across this country. Maybe the Premier should have thought about that issue as well before thinking of running for the federal leadership. More than half the population of this country are women, and this particular feature of the Canada pension plan was especially unfair to them. Now it will finally be corrected, and it is not a moment too soon.

If the government attempts to take any credit for having done this, credit is not in order. They were forced to do it. They saw the pressure that was on them. They saw the pressure that other political parties, lobby groups and all other provinces exerted to get them to move.

I have my own theory as to why the government did not move any earlier. This government was holding out on any changes to the Canada pension plan, because it wanted an increase in CPP rates. Why did it want an increase in CPP rates? Because the plan was running dry. Why was it running dry? This government has squandered the money on other things; that is why the plan was running dry.

The government was holding the women of this country hostage to try to get bigger premiums, but it failed and now it has finally dropped that. It is about time the government dropped that ridiculous idea. I am glad the women of this province, and of the whole country for that matter, for the reasons I have previously outlined, finally will be getting an improvement in the Canada pension plan.

Mr. Rotenberg: You're getting your speech material from Grimm's Fairy Tales.

9:10 p.m.

Mr. Boudria: I hope the member for Wilson Heights makes his contribution to the budget debate immediately. I am sure he will have much constructive criticism to offer, and I hope he also indicates to the Treasurer that several things in the budget need to be improved.

It is quite evident to all of us looking at this document that it is a hastily prepared document. That is not only because of the type of paper it is printed on; its contents seem to indicate to us that perhaps it was something that was rushed through in three or four days just to have something to say. But it is not good enough for the people of Prescott-Russell, and it is not good enough for the people of Ontario.

This document, along with the accompanying throne speech, indicates to us that this government cannot keep the promise and that Davis cannot do it, and the sooner we get rid of the government, the better.

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Speaker, as I proceed to participate in this budget debate, I would like to extend my congratulations to you on your success in presiding over this Legislature and to your colleagues who also share the duties in the chair.

As you know, this is the first opportunity I have had to participate at any length in a debate, because I had an unfortunate accident during the winter and have not been in this House as much as other members and as much as I would have liked to have been.

I want to raise with you, Mr. Speaker, and with members of the Legislature a number of concerns that relate to the budget and how it relates to my area. As I said, I have not had the opportunity to participate in many debates recently, and I hope to be able to raise a number of issues that are of concern in my riding and northern Ontario, as well as the whole province, that I have been concerned about and have not been able to express in this forum.

I do regret, though, as I glance across the way, that there is not anyone from the government present. I wonder why the government is not represented in this debate on the budget. There is not one member of the executive council in this chamber. I think that is unfortunate. I suppose it indicates how much of an interest they have in the budget and in the economic affairs of this province and specifically in what the members of the Legislature, whether they be from the New Democratic Party, the Liberal Party or the Conservative back benches, have to say about the economy and the economic affairs of this province. It is most unfortunate, and I hope the chief government whip is able to find where the government has disappeared to.

I note the member for Oxford (Mr. Treleaven) is waving at me. I do hope his aspirations are some day answered, but I have to remind him that at this time he is not a member of the government. He is a member of the party that supports the government but he is not a member of the government.

I notice one of the executive council members now has returned, and I welcome him to the debate.

As we proceed with this budget debate, we are experiencing a crisis in the affairs of this province. As has been noted many times during this debate, we are facing the highest unemployment rates Ontario has seen since the great Depression. In the past year, Ontario has lost 221,000 jobs. I come from an area of the province that is experiencing one of the highest unemployment rates in the country. Sault Ste. Marie and Algoma are experiencing unemployment rates in the neighbourhood of 30 to 35 per cent.

It took a little longer for the unemployment figures to reach these terrible heights in our area than it did in some other areas of the province, mainly because the steel industry in this country and this province has traditionally been somewhat shielded from the cyclical ups and downs of manufacturing in this country. I suppose this is partly because it is mainly Canadian-owned. It has tended to try to keep up with the technical advances in the industry and, as a result, has been able to deal with the changes in the market system better than many of the other manufacturing and primary resource industries in Ontario.

But obviously, if we have a downturn in the auto industry, in appliance manufacturing and in the other manufacturing sectors of southern Ontario, it eventually had to get back to the steel industry. So it did. When it hit, it hit very hard. In Sault Ste. Marie and Algoma now we are experiencing unemployment that has not been seen in that area since 1954. We have a whole generation of workers who have never experienced this kind of situation.

We have people who at this moment are exhausting unemployment insurance after having been laid off for a year or over a year—people who in many cases have never been on unemployment insurance in their lives—and now are having to switch to welfare and are getting the shock of their lives to find that their welfare benefits are about half of what they got on unemployment insurance. It is a very serious situation.

When we hear Liberal and Conservative politicians in this country going around talking about recovery, it has a very hollow ring for those people who are exhausting their unemployment insurance benefits and who have been told by the president of the Algoma Steel Corp. that even when that major company in this province, the main employer in my area, gets back to full production, when it starts utilizing its full capacity, there will be at least 1,500 fewer jobs at Algoma Steel than there were when the layoffs started.

Most of those people who are not going to go back to work are people with up to three or five years' seniority, depending on which department they come from at the Algoma Steel plant. We are talking mainly about young people, a large proportion of whom have trades—skills they now cannot market in the job market in their area because there is not any other employer.

The member for Hamilton East (Mr. MacKenzie) and others from his area have described the problems facing that community, which is dependent on steel, and he has talked about a lot of the smaller plant shutdowns in his area. I would like to point out that in Sault Ste. Marie we do not have any small plants. We never did. Although we have one of the three major steel plants in this country, we have almost no secondary manufacturing and no steel fabrication in our community. There are not any other jobs.

The other jobs in our area are primary resource jobs, mainly in the forestry industry. Then as we get up into Wawa, we are talking about mining and those other areas. Of course, the mining in Wawa is dependent on Algoma Steel. We do have some hope that there will be some expansion of the gold mining in the northern part of my riding. I suppose the tax concessions for the gold Maple Leaf will somehow help the Hemlo operation, but they will not mean a lot in terms of employment in the foreseeable future.

I want to talk generally about the unemployment situation we face in our area and across this province and what I believe the Treasurer should have been doing to respond in the short term. Other members will discuss the long term, and I will refer to it briefly, but my main concern is the crisis we are experiencing in our area right now.

What hope can we give to these people who are facing a tremendous loss of income? It is not just a loss of income, but a loss of the sense of self-worth and a loss of dignity which we cannot put back very easily. I am not trying to overdramatize this situation.

I come to Toronto every week. I travel through southern Ontario and I know that people have experienced major shutdowns and layoffs, but in a large metropolitan community like this the situation, serious as it is, tends to be masked. There is still construction going on in downtown Toronto; there are still jobs, even though a large number of construction workers are out of work. There are people working and there still seems to be development.

However, in our part of the province there is absolutely nothing. If a person is on unemployment insurance and he is supposed to be doing a job search, the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission just tells him to forget it; officers know it is no use going to look for work. He becomes a nuisance to the small businesses that are still in operation, because they do not have any jobs to provide. He is going there over and over again and being a nuisance; so the commission is not even asking for job searches any more.

As I understand it, the welfare department used to ask for 20 job searches a week in good times; now they ask for five. They are still asking for them but they are only asking for five, that is how serious it is. There is just nothing else.

When we talk about the budget projection of an 11.7 per cent unemployment rate for 1983 and realize that is a growth of about two per cent in unemployment from 1982, that is serious enough. It is an indication of the failure of the government to respond to the need to develop employment in this province, but it looks good to someone from Algoma. If we could return to the time when we had 11.7 per cent unemployment, things would look pretty good in our area. When one is experiencing 30 to 35 per cent joblessness, that does not look too bad.

However, I do not suppose that is something the Treasurer should feel good about when and if he ever returns to this debate. Obviously that 11.7 per cent jobless rate he is projecting for this year includes areas like my own which has such a high unemployment rate and that is contributing to it.

When we look at the projection of an average unemployment rate of 535,000 people, we all realize that is the official unemployment rate. The member for Brantford (Mr. Gillies) referred to the fact that there are many other people out of work who have given up and are not looking for jobs. They are not in the job market. They are not eligible for unemployment insurance any more and they are just not counted in the figures.

He tried to argue that if these people come back into the job market and start looking for work because they think there might be new opportunities, in some way they are then increasing unemployment; but they are not increasing unemployment, they are already out of work.

Mr. Boudria: They are increasing statistics.

Mr. Wildman: They are increasing statistics or official unemployment.

We know that as a result of this budget in this province we will have real unemployment in Ontario of about 786,000 people in 1983. We know from the Treasurer's own figures that there will be 93,000 more jobless people in this province this year than there were last year because of the increase in the work force. The Treasurer's own figures project a loss of 37,000 more jobs this year than we had last year. If this is a recovery budget, I would hate to see a recession.

The Treasurer argues that this is a job creation budget and he has introduced a number of measures to try to produce more employment. Some of those things can be welcomed. Certainly the accelerated capital works program is better than nothing. The Treasurer is projecting $246 million in accelerated capital works which will produce 12,000 jobs this year. It is interesting, though, when we look at those figures we understand the job projection for this year of 12,000 is less than the jobs projected from capital works last year. As I said, it is better than nothing.

One of those capital works projects, according to the member for Sault Ste. Marie, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Ramsay), is the long-awaited renovation and expansion of the Sault Ste. Marie Jail. I understand something like $1.6 million will be expended to try to deal with the problems they have been experiencing at the jail for some time. As the members may know, this goes back to 1978 and the by-election in Sault Ste. Marie when the provincial government promised it was going to build a new jail. At least it said it was going to do something about the old jail and everyone understood it was going to build a new one.

Since that time we have had a long series of reports from the public institutions inspection panels, which have said that the jail is overcrowded and is a fire trap and that the section for male prisoners at the jail, which was built to accommodate 38 prisoners, on occasion has between 60 and 70 prisoners located there.

It is interesting that the public institutions inspection panels have indicated there should be a new jail constructed and have criticized the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Leluk) for failing to respond to their repeated requests that he provide the funding for a new jail for our area.

One panel described the Sault jail in November 1982 as "outdated, antiquated and in need of space in all areas." It said, "The jail is periodically overcrowded, a fire trap, poorly lighted and poorly ventilated". It said it needed immediately "a new fire and emergency alarm system to be installed."

I can only say we have been very fortunate there has not been a major emergency, especially during one of the periods when the jail is overcrowded, which would have required an early warning and evacuation of inmates and staff, especially from the third-floor area which houses the prisoners who need less security, since there is no adequate fire escape from that area of the jail.

Apparently we are going to get some kind of expansion and renovation of the jail. I welcome that, but I regret we are not going to get what is obviously required and has been requested by the public institutions inspection panels: a new jail. I wonder why we are not going to get a new jail. I wonder what keeping the promise means in regard to the comments about a new facility made at the time of the by-election.

I recognize the project will produce some short-term jobs and it will alleviate the situation experienced at that facility for so long, but I can only say it is about time. I regret we are apparently not getting what is really required.

9:30 p.m.

In the budget, the Treasurer made a great to-do about the short-term jobs he was producing to deal with the short-term economic situation we face and to help the recovery get started; the recovery he seems to see but that most of us find rather elusive.

He said these accelerated capital works would produce 12,000 jobs, but when one starts looking at equivalents in terms of full-time employment and determines what that means in relation to full-year employment, we find these works will provide only about 2,400 new jobs.

The Treasurer also pointed to the Canada-Ontario employment development program, which is administered by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Ramsay), and argued there were going to be 19,000 short-term jobs created through COED projects across the province. That is infinitesimal when one realizes that 17,000 unemployed workers across Ontario exhaust their unemployment insurance benefits every month, and that COED is mainly set up to assist the "exhaustees," as they are called, to get short-term employment so they can then requalify for unemployment insurance benefits.

So we have 19,000 short-term jobs when we have almost that same number exhausting their unemployment insurance benefits each month in Ontario. How anyone can crow about that kind of program to help exhaustees is beyond me. I find it rather interesting when I look at what this means in terms of full-time employment or full-year jobs. Instead of 19,000, it really means 8,403 jobs across Ontario; I am talking about the equivalent in full-time employment. I am even more disappointed when I realize these jobs are not new jobs, they are jobs that were already announced in November 1982 when the COED program was announced here and in Ottawa.

It appears that in this particular program the Treasurer is trying to parade an old program, one that is already committed, as a new one that is going to produce new employment. He is trying to make jobs that have already been committed look as if they are part of the job creation program resulting from this budget, and it is just not true. When you consider that this COED program will provide the equivalent of 8,400 full-time jobs across Ontario and realize there are over 14,000 people out of work in Sault Ste. Marie and Algoma out of a total work force of somewhere between 35,000 and 40,000, you can see how inadequate that kind of program is.

As I said before, the statements made by Liberal and Conservative politicians to the effect that the economy has begun to recover, that we are at the beginning of a recovery, are really of little comfort to the people who are exhausting their unemployment insurance benefits after having been laid off for a full year. They are now facing having to live on welfare benefits and losing their homes, because that is what is happening to most of them. When one is having to plead with his bank manager to adjust his payment plan for his mortgage so he does not lose his home, it is pretty cold comfort to hear Marc Lalonde or the Treasurer say we are in a recovery and things are turning around and improving.

If one considers the equivalent new jobs—full-time, full-year jobs—that are resulting from the short-term job creation programs announced in this budget, and subtracts from them the COED program which was already announced, one finds the government programs announced in the budget will create 20,783 new jobs. When one considers that we have a real unemployment rate of about 780,000, how this government can talk about a job creation budget is beyond me. At best, these short-term job creation programs will help about 3.7 per cent of the currently unemployed in this province.

We in the New Democratic Party believe it is the right of every Ontarian who wishes to work to have a job. We believe he should have the opportunity to improve himself or herself and that he should have the opportunity to gain the sense of self-worth and dignity that comes with working and improving one's lot in life.

Employment is the only valid definition of a healthy economy. Job creation, in my view, is the only valid definition of an economic recovery. It is not enough to measure so-called economic recovery, as the Treasurer appears to do, and his government along with him, on the basis of profit ledgers. The Treasurer seems to have bought the Reaganite argument that if the profit picture for the major corporations improves, it will somehow trickle down through the economy, lead to expansion and provide jobs.

Considering the debt load that many corporations have been carrying through this recent period of high interest rates, as they get more fiscal room to manoeuvre, most of those corporations are going to take the opportunity to cut their debt loads; they are not going to expand their operations and hire more workers or call back laid-off employees until there is a market for their products. It does not make sense to say that just because the major corporations are facing a better picture financially we are in an economic recovery, when unemployment is increasing.

The Treasurer alluded to this somewhat when he said he hoped for a consumer-led recovery; that what was needed in this province was for the consumers to free up some money and start spending so there would be a market and business would be able to expand. It may sound funny that I would be agreeing with this, but I do agree with it: in the short term we do need to increase consumer spending.

In Canada and in Ontario we have had too much saving. People in this economic situation are very insecure. Those who still have jobs do not know whether they are going to continue to have those jobs, so they are not going to make major purchases, they are not going to commit themselves to long-term expenditures and they certainly are not going to borrow heavily at a bank to buy automobiles, furniture, appliances—the kinds of purchases that must be made in order to stimulate economic growth in the short term. So we need to encourage consumer spending to create jobs; we have to create the market.

In our view, though, the government has to act to put people back to work so they have some money coming in, they have money in their pockets, they have some encouragement and some hope for the future and they have some security, so they will make the purchases that are required to expand the market for manufactured goods in Ontario and in Canada.

The Treasurer had one major proposal for trying to encourage consumer spending, and that was the 90-day sales tax holiday, which would save the consumers of this province approximately $55 million. That kind of approach raises a lot of questions. The Treasurer has done it before. He has done it with automobiles in the short term. These are questions the Treasurer himself has addressed on other occasions. He pointed out at one point that a short-term sales tax holiday really moves purchases around, it does not increase them.

If I am intending to purchase a living-room suite some time in the next few months, obviously I am going to purchase it during the 90-day period, if I can, when the sales tax is no longer in effect. But if I already have a living-room suite and do not need one, I am not going to rush out and purchase one just because the sales tax is off for 90 days.

In my view what that sales tax holiday is going to do is assist retail store owners to move inventory more quickly, and that is a useful effect. It will help the retail merchant to move inventory. But will that retail store owner then replace the inventory? Will he order more living-room suites from the furniture manufacturer? I submit that most of the retail merchants will not order as many living-room suites as they have in the past because of the difficult time they have experienced in carrying inventory, especially with the recent high interest rates.

While this short-term stimulus will help the retail merchants, I very much doubt it will produce the kind of stimulus to the manufacturing sector that will mean laid-off workers will be called back, plants will reopen, unused capacity will be utilized and that will get the economy going again; I very much doubt it.

When one looks at the figures projected in the budget, one realizes that what we are talking about is a growth in retail sales of only one per cent in real terms. A growth of only one per cent in real terms is not going to put all those laid-off workers back to work. It will help the retail stores, and that is good, but it is not going to do what the Treasurer would like us to believe it will do.

Mr. J. M. Johnson: Why not give them 60 to 90 days to find out?

Mr. Wildman: I do not debate that; I agreed with that. I said there was going to be an increase in the number of sales of furniture and appliances. That is going to happen, that is the idea.

The member for Wellington-Dufferin-Peel (Mr. J. M. Johnson) is saying the Treasurer intends this program only to help the retail sector. He does not really expect it is going to help the manufacturing sector. If that is what he is saying, then we are in agreement.

Mr. J. M. Johnson: That is not what he said.

Mr. Wildman: I submit the retail owners in Sault Ste. Marie are not going to reorder when there is 30 per cent unemployment in Sault Ste. Marie. They are going to reorder when the steel plant gets the majority of people back to work in Sault Ste. Marie. Then they are going to reorder. This sales tax holiday is not going to produce a rehiring of the laid-off employees at Algoma Steel.

Mr. J. M. Johnson: Talk about all of Ontario, not one area.

Mr. Wildman: All right: Hamilton, Windsor, whatever area one likes.

The problem with this budget is that it does not do what we believe is necessary in order to have a consumer-led recovery, and that is putting people back to work and earning incomes they can spend.

We have talked this evening about youth unemployment. This budget suggests a great deal of short-term jobs for the youth. The member for Brantford (Mr. Gillies) talked at length about what was going to improve the situation with youth unemployment in this province. He accused the opposition of not knowing or caring about what the government is doing in that area. Yet he could not react to the fact there are going to be 220,000 young people out of work in Ontario.

If the government is doing such a good job in that area, why are there that many people out of work? Why do we have 22 per cent unemployment between the ages of 15 and 25 in this province?

We on this side of the House are accused sometimes of being gloom and doom boys. That is the term the government likes to use. In my view, we often have on the other side of the House a bunch of Pollyannas who believe: "Say everything is wonderful. Do not look at the hard realities. Just wish things were better, and they will be."

I do not think that either the gloom and doom or the Pollyanna approach is going to help anyone in this province. I think we have to talk about what the real situation is, good or bad, and unfortunately in this particular economic period it is more bad than it is good.

Our party proposed a lot of job creation programs we believe this government could have instituted. We have suggested that in the short term there should be summer employment programs for the youth at a cost of about $81 million, which could have produced 89,000 seasonal jobs.

We have not just decided to have short-term make-work projects that do not mean anything, but job creation projects that would respond to the needs of various sectors of the economy in this province while at the same time giving jobs to young people, getting them involved in the work force, and letting them gain skills they will be able to use later when they finish school and enter the permanent work force.

One of the areas we suggested was forest conservation. We have suggested the government could form teams of young people who would be assigned to each Ministry of Natural Resources district, who then could get involved in things such as forest rehabilitation and reforestation. We have suggested allocating $20 million to that program. Over a period of time, it would produce about 14,000 jobs.

This is responding to a serious need, which is of tremendous importance not only to the northern part of the province, to my area, but to the whole economy of Ontario. I think many people in southern Ontario do not realize that forestry and the industries related to forestry are the largest employer in Ontario, and in Canada for that matter.

We have experienced a situation over a period of time where the industry has mined what should be a renewable resource. I know my colleague the member for Lake Nipigon (Mr. Stokes) and other northern members have raised this issue over and over again in this House. We have seen the situation where we have cut far more than we have regenerated. We are in the unbelievable and undesirable situation in this province of facing a shortage of timber within the next 10 years, a renewable resource we should never run out of and that we should farm, yet we are running short of it.

We believe one of the ways of providing jobs is to respond to the real need to increase forest rehabilitation in Ontario. Frankly, we would like to have never reached this situation. We feel the government has failed, as has the industry failed, to respond to this major need of the province. But, since we are now facing this situation, I do not think it does anybody any good just to cry over the situation we have had in the past. We should be doing something about it and what better opportunity than a period of high unemployment when we could be employing people in a useful task like forest rehabilitation.

There have been a number of other short-term work creation projects that we have proposed that would respond to the needs of not only my area but the whole province. One of the problems that we have in northern Ontario, of course, is distance from one community to another. We find that even in areas—Algoma district, for instance—where a particular service is provided, and in northern Ontario we often have fewer services than are taken for granted in the southern part of the province, in many cases the distances between communities make it impossible for people in need of that service to benefit from it, unless they move and leave their family and friends or commute back and forth at great distances.

For my area, ever since I came to this House, I have been raising issues about the need to provide services to the elderly and to the disabled in their own community so they do not have to leave their communities to travel hundreds of miles to the nearest large centre where those services might be provided. In our proposal for work creation, we suggested a homemaker service that could employ 1,000 people at a cost of about $8 million.

This really relates specifically to a need in my riding since we have a situation where the homemaker services are not provided beyond three communities in Algoma district. They are provided in Sault Ste. Marie but the homemaker service goes only 20 miles outside the city limits and if you live even one mile farther you cannot receive it.

In 1980, as a matter of fact, I presented a petition on behalf of the residents of the community of Goulais River, which is just beyond 20 miles outside Sault Ste. Marie, requesting that there be changes made in the home health care program so that an aged or a physically handicapped adult who did not necessarily require medical services, such as nursing or physiotherapy, but was unable to care for himself or herself at home, could get homemaker services in their own communities.

Because of the lack of these services, in many cases these kinds of people have had to have institutional care which they did not really require, and because they needed help they have had to remain in institutions far longer than they should have.

In response, after two years the Minister of Health (Mr. Grossman) eventually did change the program. He brought in six pilot projects across the province for an expanded homemaker service. Ironically, after presenting this petition in this Legislature, one of the areas accepted for the six projects was not Goulais River, not even Algoma district.

I do not really think that had anything to do with partisan politics, I am sure it did not; I welcomed the institution of the pilot projects, hoping this would lead to an expansion of the homemaker service into other areas such as my own. Unfortunately that did not happen. I think one of the more positive proposals made by this caucus in this job creation program was the proposal for a homemaker service that could provide care for people in their own homes, enabling them to stay with family and friends, feel more independent and yet get the kind of care they need, and avoid having them stay in institutional care at a far greater cost and longer than was required.

These are short-term suggestions, but obviously there is a tremendous need for youth training, especially if one considers that in my area 1,500 young people are not going to get back to work when Algoma Steel is in full production. If there are going to be jobs in the 1980s, we have to train the youth for them.

I recognize that in this budget the Treasurer did talk about the institution of training programs for young people, and I welcome that. I look forward to hearing about the changes and proposals that are going to be made by the Minister of Colleges and Universities (Miss Stephenson) in that regard. I understand Sault Ste. Marie is one of three areas that is specifically singled out to benefit from this, so I suppose this means that Sault College is going to get some courses that are required to train the young people of our area.

One of the problems we have now is that if an individual is on unemployment insurance and would qualify according to the manpower regulations of the federal government for a training course that would upgrade his skills so he might be able to take a job when and if jobs become available, he finds that those courses are not provided at Sault College; they just do not have the courses. We have had situations where people have had to go to Kapuskasing, Sudbury, Thunder Bay, Timmins or southern Ontario, in some cases, to take courses.

Mr. Speaker, tell me how an individual who is on unemployment insurance, who has had a major drop in his income, is going to finance travelling hundreds of miles away and living in residence in order to take a course. It just does not work, so most of those people are not taking these courses and are not benefiting from the few that are available.

I hope this program will provide some of the needed courses that will identify the skills that are going to be required in the future, so that people in our area will be able to take these courses while they are on unemployment insurance and thus will be trained when jobs become available.

In that regard I also want to point out one other thing. If an individual who is laid off and on unemployment insurance, or who has exhausted his unemployment insurance and is on welfare, decides he or she wants to take an upgrading course, wants to return to school to take a course that would provide him with some skills that make it possible for him to get back into the employment market, he finds there are impediments in the regulations if that particular course is not recommended to him by Canada Manpower.

I will give an example. If you have a married couple, both of whom are out of work and where the breadwinner, so called, would qualify for welfare benefits, so called, if one of them returns to school to take a course, both of them cannot get welfare unless that course is recommended by Canada Manpower or the welfare department. Under section 6(2) of regulation 441 under the General Welfare Assistance Act, "An unemployable person who is enrolled as a full-time student at an educational institution is not eligible for general assistance."

What we are saying as a society is that we would rather have people sit at home, do nothing and collect welfare benefits than get out and train themselves to qualify for jobs. I just do not understand this, especially when you consider that we supposedly have a small-c conservative government here that believes in the value of work and believes in individual initiatives, getting out and improving oneself.

Why is this government setting up a regulation that says to people, "We do not want you to improve yourselves; we want you to sit home and waste your time so you can get welfare benefits." I just do not understand it.

Not only is an individual who returns to work ineligible for welfare assistance himself, but, as I said, so is a married couple. According to section 3(c) of regulation 441, "A welfare administrator must be satisfied that both husband and wife are available for and willing to take employment in order for the couple to be eligible for welfare benefits."

I have a situation in my area, in the city of Sault Ste. Marie, where a young woman who was laid off a year ago at Algoma Steel along with her husband decided: "I do not want to just sit around. I am going back to university. I am going to Lake Superior State College in Sault Ste. Marie, Michigan, to study nursing so I can get a job at the hospital after I complete my course."

She went without her unemployment insurance benefits because, going back to school, she was not available for employment so she was not eligible for unemployment insurance. Her husband collected unemployment insurance for a year. When his unemployment insurance benefits ran out, he went to the welfare department to apply for welfare and was told, "Sorry, you do not qualify for welfare because your wife is going to school" — not because "you are going to school" but because "your wife is going to school."

When I asked the welfare administrator what on earth he was doing, he said: "It is not us. It is the provincial regulations."

Mr. Allen: The same is true for dependent family benefits kids who want to go to university.

Mr. Wildman: That is right. If this government is serious about youth training and upgrading the skills of young people, I urge it to introduce the legislative and regulatory changes needed to enable employable welfare recipients who have no other means of support to continue receiving income assistance while they are enrolled in full-time education courses.

It does not make sense to me that during a recession, with the high unemployment rates being experienced by so many communities across Ontario, the provincial government would not be encouraging laid-off workers and their spouses to upgrade their skills and knowledge. It is about time we stopped penalizing people for returning to school. If we do change the regulations, perhaps these young people will be able to take advantage of whatever courses the Minister of Colleges and Universities is going to announce for Sault College.

One of the things I had hoped for and asked about in the Legislature was the possibility that communities such as Sault Ste. Marie, Windsor, and others that have experienced enormous increases in their welfare roles because of the exhaustees from unemployment insurance, would receive special assistance from the government to meet the demands of their welfare budgets.

Sault Ste. Marie is going to have an increase in its welfare budget this year of 45 per cent. When I raised this matter with the Treasurer last week, he said, "Well, most of these communities that have been hard hit and have had this increase in welfare budgets have not had to increase their mill rates." That is true, he is quite right, they have not had to increase their mill rates significantly; but the reason they have not had to is they have cut back in other areas.

In Sault Ste. Marie they are not going to maintain their roads this year; not one bit of road maintenance. They have cut out most of their recreation programs and have transferred the people from their recreation programs to the welfare department. They have doubled the size of their welfare department with people who are not qualified social workers. They are giving them a little training and saying, "Now you are going to help us with this tremendous case load increase we have in welfare recipients."

I had hoped this government was going to suggest some assistance for those communities so we could reinstitute some of the other services that have been cut back. If we do not, we will have a very high bill next year. If we do not maintain roads and streets this year, we will have to do a lot more work next year. We are just putting off expenditures that are required; I was disappointed not to see some specific discussion of that in the Treasurer's budget.

It is true the Treasurer did institute the so-called social services maintenance tax, the five per cent surtax on personal income tax. I suppose the Treasurer is suggesting that money might be used to assist the welfare rolls of hard-hit communities; I do not know. If it is, it is a shocking way to finance that kind of assistance. It is very disappointing.

As I said earlier, I support the suggestion for an accelerated capital works program, but I do not support a capital works program like the Treasurer's that produces only 2,400 new jobs. In the job creation program proposed last week by my colleagues the member for Windsor-Riverside (Mr. Cooke) and the member for Port Arthur (Mr. Foulds), it was suggested that instead of $82 million, the government should be prepared to fund capital works programs at a rate of about $300 million. That would really produce 12,000 jobs, rather than 2,400 under the guise of 12,000 as the Treasurer has proposed.

In my region we are lucky; I suppose that is the term we should use. In some areas we are getting some capital works assistance. For instance, after two years of discussion, Ontario Hydro is going ahead with the erosion control project in Iron Bridge on the Mississagi River. There are many others that could be proceeded with.

Certainly, the White River water and sewer project is required and should go ahead in Wawa. We could be building an extended care facility to help elderly and disabled people stay in their own communities even if they are not able to stay in their own homes. The Wawa sewage lagoon system is overtaxed and should be expanded. The Blind River water and sewer works are outdated and need to be upgraded. These are all things that could be done.

In the Sault Ste. Marie area, 75 per cent of the building trades are unemployed; 75 per cent of construction workers in our area are out of work. We should be providing employment for those people. Right now the only thing they have to provide major employment is the Eldorado plant at Blind River and that is winding down. So the few jobs that have been available in construction are disappearing. The Hemlo mining exploration will produce some short-term construction jobs but not very many.

Although people on the other side of this House fail to recognize on most occasions that anyone on this side can represent a farming area, my riding does include a large number of farmers, mainly dairy and beef. We welcome the fact that the government has finally responded to the proposals made by this caucus for assistance to young farmers through interest rate reduction. But I want to point out that kind of program does nothing for established farmers who are facing serious problems with interest rates. There are a lot of them in my area. Even dairy farmers who normally have a more stable income are facing serious difficulties.

The beef industry has always faced ups and downs. There was a sale at the Thessalon stockyards last weekend and the prices for beef cattle were pretty good compared to what they have been in the past. But those farmers who received good prices will face problems, as will the whole economy, if interest rates rise again this summer. Certainly they will have problems as the price for feed continues to rise, especially in the light of the recent announcements of programs in the United States which have made the shortages of certain seeds inevitable in North America.

The member for Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) referred at length to the proposal under the Board of Industrial Leadership and Development program for the expansion of one million acres of farm land in eastern and northern Ontario through tile drainage. With him, I regret very much that this was not dealt with adequately at all in the budget. We propose in our job creation budget that there be a major tile drainage program, which would be funded at an additional $25 million and would produce 2,000 more jobs as well as assist farmers in improving their farm lands and their production.

If we are really going to assist the farmers we have got to make it possible for them to borrow at reasonable rates so they can continue to operate with some hope of stability in interest rates. Certainly interest rates have dropped recently, but there is no guarantee that we are not going to see an increase in them again. We believe interest rates should be provided at eight per cent by this government for loans up to $50,000 over 10 years, and we believe the government should be prepared to provide $25 million for this kind of program. We also estimate it would produce about 1,600 new jobs.

One of the other proposals in our job creation program was for small-scale hydroelectric developments. Ontario Hydro has recognized that there are 17 small sites that could be developed for hydraulic electricity generation, but we all know the bias of Ontario Hydro. That corporation is controlled by the massive numbers of people in the nuclear program, and the two or three people who are left in the hydraulic program are pretty well voices in the wilderness in that corporation.

Unless there is a government program—a government will to go ahead with hydraulic generation—Ontario Hydro will never do it. Even the three sites of the 17 they have identified as the most likely ones to proceed with will not go ahead unless the government tells Ontario Hydro this is the route it wants them to go.

This would produce a number of jobs in our area. We believe that in the first year we could produce up to 5,000 jobs if the government were serious about the hydraulic generation program.

As well, the Minister of Northern Affairs (Mr. Bernier) has made a lot of to-do about the availability of peat resources in northern Ontario and the fact we have such a wealth of this resource in the province, one of the highest amounts of peat in the world. We have had reports from the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Pope) and a lot of talk from the Minister of Northern Affairs, but they have not come up with anything.

We believe we should emulate Finland, Ireland and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. We have 26 million hectares of peat, the equivalent of 24 billion barrels of oil, and if we were to institute a program of $20 million, we could produce jobs and perhaps assist small northern communities, at least initially, to generate power for themselves and become self-sufficient in power along the Finnish example. I wonder why this government is not plugging into the proposals that have been made by the Finns, which could apply to northern Ontario and provide for this kind of generation.

My colleague the member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Charlton) raised an issue this afternoon, along with other members of this caucus, regarding the cutbacks in the Ministry of the Environment's budget at a time when acid rain is a major problem in this province and in North America. We have had studies that have shown that if we continue at the present rate of destruction of our lakes, we will lose about 6,000 jobs in the tourist industry alone as a result of the effects of acid rain on our northern lakes.

It is obvious that if Inco and Falconbridge were to be required by this government to cut their emissions, we could produce many jobs; we estimate about 3,000. We would be preserving jobs in the future in the tourist industry and we would be preserving the recreation for the people of this province. Obviously Ontario Hydro is not concerned with this issue in that it has cancelled its scrubbers program, one we believe should be going ahead and be expanded, and which would provide jobs at the same time.

For the life of me, I have never been able to understand why this government does not realize there are jobs in environmental protection. At the very time Algoma Steel is laying off employees and cutting back, it applies to the Ministry of the Environment for a one-year postponement in its pollution abatement program for the St. Marys River and the smoke-stack emissions.

It appears the Ministry of the Environment is going to grant the postponement because of the economic situation of Algoma Steel. The program for pollution abatement was related to a modernization program at that plant, and if Algoma Steel were going to proceed with that kind of program, there would be construction jobs for some of the 75 per cent of construction workers who are out of work in our area and we would be providing a future for Sault Ste. Marie and Algoma.

But this government feels that in a period of recession we should be cutting back, that we should not be expanding our environmental protection.

Another area that is obviously one of the most effective and least expensive ways of stimulating the economy and producing construction jobs is in housing. Obviously, in our area, this is very important not only for the construction industry but also for the lumber industry.

In my riding, in places such as White River and in the Sault Ste. Marie area as well, many cutters and millworkers have been laid off for a long period. Some of them are just now getting back to work as the housing market seems to be improving in the United States. In the budget, the Treasurer projects 53,000 new housing starts this year. We know he was off by a substantial amount last year, and that if he is off by as much this year it will only be about 41,000.

I fail to understand why this government would cancel one of the most successful programs it has had, the Ontario home renewal program, which provides employment and rehabilitation of housing in the small and large communities of Ontario at the very time we have unemployment at these levels. We believe we should be getting into rehabilitation in construction of homes in a big way. We would propose a $50-million improvement in OHRP rather than cancelling it, so that it could provide at least 2,000 jobs.

Also, we believe we should be responding to the needs of senior citizens for the more than 9,500 units required across Ontario. In my riding we need senior citizens' housing in Thessalon, Blind River, Bruce Mines and the Echo Bay-Desbarats area. Why is this government not doing all it can to provide the senior citizens housing and the employment that would accrue from that in a period of high unemployment in the construction industry?

We believe there could be a two-year program that would provide 10,000 units over those two years, for a cost of $223 million, and we could employ over 11,000 people across Ontario.

On a local issue, we hope this government will move and have an agreement with the federal government for retrofitting homes that have high radiation levels in Blind River. I understand from the Minister of Labour (Mr. Ramsay) that he will have a meeting with the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing (Mr. Bennett) and the mayor of Blind River to discuss that on Monday, May 16, 1983. The Minister of Labour would have liked me to come, but for some reason the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing does not want an opposition member present.

I will of course be meeting with the mayor and the Minister of Labour after that meeting, and I will encourage them to proceed. If the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing can find it in his budget to provide the funding that is required, I will be thankful and I will not in any way misunderstand his inability to talk to people from the other side of the House.

One of the other major needs we have as a result of distance is in the provision of health care—not just the homemakers that I was referring to, but real outpatient care in the communities where the people live. With the distances we have in northern Ontario we need to have health care clinics established.

In one community in my area, Dubreuilville, we have been fighting for a clinic for a number of years, but the Ministry of Northern Affairs has been very slow, as has the Ministry of Health, to allocate the funding. We believe we could provide 75 centres in a concerted effort to provide health care in small communities and neighbourhoods.

In this regard too, I want to point out that one of the findings of the occupational health and safety task force that my colleague from Sudbury

East (Mr. Martel) chaired was the great benefit of workers' clinics, such as the one that was in operation in Hamilton and hopefully will be in operation again soon, for providing workers with protection and assistance.

I would encourage the government and the Minister of Labour to respond to recommendation 47 for the establishment of independent occupational health clinics in every major industrial city. They would be funded collectively by employers but would remain under worker control. These are the kinds of things that are necessary if we are going to provide workers with the protection they need.

I want to emphasize that I cannot accept the argument that has been made time and again by the Minister of Labour that in a period of recession we cannot improve protection for workers; that in a bad economic climate we cannot enforce the Occupational Health and Safety Act, we cannot ensure that workers are given the protection they deserve.

I find it particularly distasteful that a Mr. Cohen, from the Minister of Labour's office, would be quoted on the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. in northern Ontario just this week as stating there was nothing in the health and safety task force that was new, and that people realized the ministry could not employ more inspectors at this time of recession, even if more inspectors were needed to enforce the act. He stated it was really up to the unions to protect their membership in terms of health and safety.

That is an example of what the Ministry of Labour and what this government believe about health and safety in the work place. It is a most unfortunate belief.

I have already mentioned the homemakers service that I believe should be expanded. I want to say, though, that in some cases the government obviously is not going to be able to provide the kind of acute care that is needed by people in the smaller communities of northern Ontario. I have to admit that; it would be nice if we could provide it, but it is not economically feasible and it also is very difficult to attract the professionals to any of the smaller northern communities.

In that regard I think it is imperative that the government expand the northern air ambulance service. I know the government has done so in the past, but I am talking about helicopters, heliports, and so on.

Mr. Boudria: What about jets?

Mr. Wildman: No. These are beneficial, but it is not going to help very much as long as there is a regulation that requires that a person be transferred from one hospital to another before he or she gets OHIP coverage for transportation, if the person is not on a stretcher.

As long as there is a situation where people have to pay their transportation unless they are lying on a stretcher, or they have to be in a hospital before they can qualify to be transferred to another hospital, people who need ongoing specialist care and specialized care in the large communities of this province are not going to have the same access to it that people have in southern Ontario and the larger communities in the north.

All of us in this province pay the same OHIP premiums. We, all of us, pay taxation to the health care system. We all are paying for the specialized services, and the specialized facilities that are available in the large communities. We all have a right to have access to them and OHIP should cover the cost of transportation to those services.

I have gone on at length talking about short-term employment, the need for job creation programs and the failure of this budget to respond to those needs. I do not make any apologies for concentrating on short-term employment because I said at the beginning of my participation in this debate that we have a major short-term problem in Sault Ste. Marie and Algoma, one that has to be responded to and one that has not been adequately dealt with by the Treasurer.

I have been asked a number of times by reporters since the so-called budget leak of last week whether I thought the Treasurer should resign. Initially I said that if the leak were as serious as it appeared to be, perhaps he should resign according to parliamentary tradition. But after seeing the substance of the budget, I can only say I do not care what the Treasurer does.

What we have is a Conservative budget presented by a Conservative Treasurer representing a Conservative government. I mean conservative both in the capital-C and small-c aspects. If we trade this Treasurer for another Conservative Treasurer from the same Conservative government, we will end up with a similar Conservative budget.

Mr. Boudria: We need a Liberal government, that is what we need.

Mr. Wildman: If we have a Liberal government, we will have an even more conservative budget such as Marc Lalonde's at the federal level.

I will conclude by dealing shortly with the question that is always legitimately raised when we talk about job creation, and that is how does one pay for it.

We believe the total cost of creating 150,000 new jobs in 1983-84 would be approximately $2 billion. Of that, $700 million could be raised through increased tax revenues and progressive taxes such as succession duty and corporation taxes. Then $1 billion would be raised through borrowing, similar to what the Treasurer is doing. The difference is the borrowing we would be doing would be for productive measures producing jobs. It would not be what this Treasurer is doing in failing to respond to the need for job creation in Ontario.

We are quite upfront about the fact we would be increasing the deficit by $1 billion and we make no apologies for that proposal at a time of recession. Cutting back when people are out of work does not make any sense. It is the same kind of thing R. B. Bennett did in the 1930s and we know what kind of situation that produced for the unemployed of this country.

Also, the Treasurer is not willing to be as honest with the public as we are. He wants to play games with his deficit. He says he has a deficit of $2.7 billion. Then he says he wants to take $300 million out of what has already been proposed for the various programs in the budget and he is not counting that as part of his deficit. In fact, he has a deficit of $3 billion and he does not want to tell the people that. Why is he so afraid?

This is a cutback budget. It takes $21 million from municipalities and housing programs at a time when we should be expanding and assisting in those areas. Instead of putting money into the pockets of consumers, it takes money from them. It means a cutback in services. We not only have an increase of five per cent surtax on personal income tax, but we have a five per cent increase in OHIP premiums. We have the so-called sin tax increases.

For every $1 put in the pockets of consumers through the sales tax holiday, we are taking about $7 out of their pockets for the provincial Treasurer. Whatever stimulus is proposed by the sales tax holiday is more than cancelled out by the other tax changes of the Treasurer.

We propose a short-term job creation program of 150,000 jobs; the Treasurer projects 93,000 more jobless. This is not a job creation budget, it is not an economic-growth stimulation budget. It is a stand-pat budget at best. It does nothing about the unemployment rate we have in this province. At worst, it is a cutback budget, which will cut programs and services that are needed at the very time we are in a heavy recession.

10:30 p.m.

The Treasurer is doing the exact opposite of what he should be doing. He is not responding to the challenge of the 1980s; he is not going to get the economy moving; he is not providing new jobs; he is not going to pull this province out of the recession. At best, it is just going to continue as it is; at worst, it is going to make the whole situation much worse.

I am very disappointed in this budget, and I hope that over the next few weeks we will be able to persuade the government not to change the Treasurer but to change its budgetary program.

On motion by Mr. Treleaven, the debate was adjourned.

INCOME TAX SURCHARGE

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to standing order 28(b), the member for Scarborough West has given notice of his dissatisfaction with the answer to his question given by the Treasurer and Minister of Economics (Mr. F. S. Miller) concerning the social service maintenance tax, and I shall be prepared to listen to him for up to five minutes.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, the reason I asked for this late show was because of the arrogance of the way in which the Treasurer replied to my question, and I see he is following through tonight by not respecting the rules of this House and not appearing for this small debate. I would suggest it is an indication of the attitude of this government.

The Treasurer has made a great point of saying he uses this surtax to get some of the money out there for purchasing power; that people have too much money in savings, etc. I raised questions about how this was going to hurt people on low incomes.

On page 17 of his budget he says lower income Ontarians will be protected from this surtax. I asked whether he thought people who earned $3.70 an hour are wealthy people, whether they have an awful lot of money sitting around in their savings accounts that they need to get out and spend. Those people are earning $148 a week, and those people are going to be subject to this tax. A family of four earning $12,500 will be subject to this surtax.

I am saying his line that lower-income people will be protected is so much balderdash and that he needs to rethink his surtax.

He also says on page 17, "those citizens of Ontario who have jobs will contribute a modest additional amount to ensure that decent public programs and job creation initiatives are paid for without undue increases in our deficit." He is talking about citizens with jobs.

I asked him a question as to whether or not people on unemployment insurance benefits would be forced to pay this surtax. I indicated to him that the average unemployment insurance claim at the moment in Ontario is $155.93 a week; that puts those people over the minimum amount that he has talked about.

If he wants it to be people who are employed who are paying this, then surely he should be exempting those who are on unemployment insurance. These are people who are in need of those decent public programs he is talking about. These are people who are in need of the job initiatives he says the government needs to create, yet he is asking them to pay for the programs. It is just ludicrous.

I got no answer. I got a one-word "no" as he said this was not regressive, and then he had the nerve to sit down. Now he has the nerve not to appear here tonight to indicate why that kind of regressive action is necessary at this time.

In my supplementary I raised the ludicrous inconsistency of saying that people who are too poor to be expected to pay their Ontario health insurance plan premiums are not too poor to pay this surtax, and I got no satisfaction on that answer either. One can have a taxable income of $3,500 in this province and supposedly be eligible for the assistance program for the premiums, yet the Treasurer's cutoff is $2,178 taxable income for his surtax. That is totally inconsistent.

How is it that people can be too poor to pay the OHIP premiums, which the government has boosted again, and yet are supposedly going to carry job creation programs and more social services projects on their backs? It is a total farce, Mr. Speaker. If he had any guts or any sense, he would do as we suggested, which was to put a surtax on those who can pay.

People with incomes over $30,000 net should be picking up these costs, not people who are earning $3.70 an hour, not people who are on unemployment insurance, not people who happen to be on UIC and have a partner who has a part-time job.

He would not even respond to that and again, he is not here tonight to respond to it. I am basically giving notice tonight that he is going to hear an awful lot more about this. This kind of unjust increase on the backs of people who cannot afford it is not the way we should be funding social programs. If he is really just adding a tax increase for the vast majority of people in Ontario, he should say so and not pretend it is some surtax upon the wealthy.

In my question today, I pointed out to him that it is not only the wealthy who are paying for this, it is the poor as well. If this minister and this government had any respect for the poor and the unemployed in Ontario, they would not levy this tax against them. I regret again that this Legislature and our process are being ignored by a minister of the crown and that he does not feel he should come here tonight and explain why he did not give me a fuller answer this afternoon.

Mr. Di Santo: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I can use the 10 minutes that the minister should have used and report—

Mr. Speaker: I think not.

The House adjourned at 10:37 p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

Friday, May 13, 1983

The House met at 10 a.m.

Prayers.

DEATH OF WILLIAM GOODFELLOW

Mr. Sheppard: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order: I would like to bring to the attention of the House the fact that Bill Goodfellow died in his sleep on Tuesday morning. He was the member for Northumberland for 20 years, from 1943 to 1963, and a cabinet minister for 18 years, holding four portfolios. I am just bringing it to the attention of the House and to the members and friends he knew over those good many years that he represented the great riding of Northumberland.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Cousens): I thank the honourable member. On behalf of all members, I ask that the House express our sympathy to the Goodfellow family and acknowledge the gracious words of the member for Northumberland and certainly the great service of Mr. Goodfellow to this province and to the people of this country.

SIMILARITY OF BILLS

Mr. Philip: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order: I would ask you to consider this and perhaps bring back a ruling to the House as early as next week on it. It may have already come to your attention that the recent actions of the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) may well be in violation of standing order 39. I refer you to the fact that on May 10 this minister introduced Bill 32, which, with respect, is a duplication of Bill 11, which I had introduced on April 19. The purpose of standing order 39 is to prevent unnecessary repetition.

Notwithstanding the fact that in introducing Bill 32 the Attorney General credited three Tory back-benchers with bringing this to his attention, even though the Federation of Metro Tenants' Associations had met with him and pleaded that he pass the bill I had introduced, and notwithstanding that this is not the first time the Attorney General has plagiarized bills from the opposition and taken personal credit without having the grace to acknowledge the opposition for having introduced them, I would like to advise you that if it is your opinion that the Attorney General is in violation of standing order 39 I would be happy to withdraw my bill, because it is terribly important that this legislation pass forthwith, be it under my name or that of the Attorney General.

The Acting Speaker: I thank the honourable member and I will refer his point to the Speaker, who can then deal with it.

ADJOURNMENT DEBATE

Mr. R. F. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order: Yesterday, you may remember, I expressed my dissatisfaction with an answer given to a question under standing order 28(a) by the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller). The question was about the fact that the tax that is being imposed is also going to affect a number of very poor people in this province.

As a result we had what is known as the late show last night, but lately the late show has been turning into a no show with respect to the ministers coming to participate in that debate.

The Acting Speaker: I do not see that your privilege has been abrogated or—

Mr. R. F. Johnston: I understand that under standing order 28(b) it is a matter of the right of the minister to reply if he so wishes, I understand that; but surely in the spirit of those sections of our standing orders the idea is to give the opposition an opportunity to have a debate, not speak to an empty chair.

I would ask the Speaker to perhaps refer this matter back to the standing committee on procedural affairs so that we can look at this again, because it is not serving as another opportunity for members of the opposition to have a debate on a matter they think has been brusquely put aside, instead it is being used as a chance for us to talk to empty chairs on the other side.

The Acting Speaker: I thank the honourable member for raising this point. Your rights are clearly defined in the standing orders and I will take no further action on it.

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak to the same point of order, if I might.

The Acting Speaker: I have already listened at some length on it. Are you going to say anything different?

Mr. Laughren: I would like to suggest to the Speaker that he at least ask the procedural affairs committee to look into this, because the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Drea) decided the same way the Treasurer did this week, not to bother to appear to provide for what we think are important rights of the opposition in this House.

The Acting Speaker: May the honourable members all realize that the standing committee on procedural affairs is looking at all the rules of the House, and I am sure those who are here this morning can be advised of the comments made.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, the problem with my nonappearance was that I was not informed about the matter.

Mr. Laughren: Nonsense.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY DEVELOPMENTALLY HANDICAPPED PEOPLE

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, in keeping with my commitment to provide satisfactory support services and training opportunities for those developmentally handicapped people who are returning to the community, I am today tabling five documents prepared by my ministry in co-operation with associations for the mentally retarded and a number of other charitable and private organizations. These documents will serve to demonstrate that, contrary to some assumptions that have been made in this House and elsewhere, the transfer of developmentally handicapped people from institutions to community living settings is being accomplished through the most careful planning.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, my ministry is determined to provide as many developmentally handicapped individuals as possible with the opportunity for a richer life in the community. To achieve this we have, first, developed comprehensive tests to assess the ability of each resident of an institution to function in the larger community. We have gone on to identify the individual needs of those residents returning to the community for support services and training in occupational and life skills.

The documents before the House today are a result of a year of joint effort between officials of my ministry and representatives of those charitable organizations working with the developmentally handicapped in the community. This material has already been mailed to local associations for the mentally retarded, other nonprofit organizations serving the developmentally handicapped and operators of training workshops.

Volume 1 is a compendium of assessment services available throughout Ontario.

Volume 2 reviews various methods of assessment to assist those working with the developmentally handicapped in determining which of those methods are appropriate for the individuals concerned.

Volume 3 sets out proposed standards and guidelines for individual program planning, in which it is envisaged that the developmentally handicapped themselves and their families will take part. The need for standards and guidelines was identified in the report of the Task Force on Individual Program Planning, a body with representation from the Ontario Association for the Mentally Retarded as well as the ministry.

The proposals in volume 3 formalize and build on the expertise gained through practical experience over the last decade in Ontario and elsewhere. We have invited the organizations that serve the developmentally handicapped to provide written submissions on these proposals by July 29 of this year. A series of meetings starting next Monday, has been arranged to facilitate this process.

Volume 4 deals with community residential services for the developmentally handicapped. It proposes ways to resolve problems that have arisen in the operation of community residences in the past and ways to improve future planning of these residences. It also sets out a range of options for community living settings and services, particularly for the more severely handicapped.

Volume 5 contains issues raised in a review of workshop programs in Ontario and presents the views of the ministry regarding workshops in the future. It is concerned with ways to revitalize workshops, including the improvement of training programs, plant and equipment.

We are inviting written submissions on volumes 4 and 5 of the series by the end of September this year.

What all these documents amount to is a three-stage plan—for each of the individuals concerned—to make the transition from the institution to the community a trouble-free and, indeed, a rewarding experience. That plan provides for comprehensive assessment, the setting of goals and the achievement of those goals.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank all those who have worked so hard with my ministry in the development of these documents and in the larger task of helping thousands of our developmentally handicapped fellow citizens to realize their desire for a happier and more fruitful life.

FRENCH-LANGUAGE SERVICES

Hon. Mr. Wells: M. le Président, à titre de ministre responsable des services en français du gouvernement de l'Ontario, il m'a fait plaisir de déposer aujourd'hui le quatrième rapport annuel du bureau du coordinateur provincial des services en français.

For the first time this year, I am also tabling a separate directory of French-language services which previously formed part of the office's annual report. This is an indication of the extent to which these services have expanded over the past year.

May I share with all members that today we are very close to achieving our goal of ensuring that the great majority of francophones living in Ontario have access to the government's French-language services and may I also offer my congratulations to all ministries for their support in implementing these services.

The government of Ontario is now able to provide across-the-board service in French in designated areas of the province where the majority of its French-speaking residents reside.

In other areas, where there are fewer francophone residents, we are steadily working to improve the quality of service so that French-speaking citizens can obtain information or access to government services in French.

To facilitate this access, the office of the government co-ordinator provides a toll-free telephone service, Renseignements Ontario, which enables the province's francophones to obtain information on government programs and services in their own language.

One of the major highlights of the past year, was the extension of the use of French to the county, district and surrogate courts in all designated areas of the province and to the Supreme Court in three of these areas. Changes in legislation were also made to allow court cases to be heard in French in individual locations across the province. French-speaking citizens of Ontario now also have the right to register legal documents, in designated areas, in their own language.

At present, we have full-time French-language services co-ordinators in 13 ministries, who are in constant contact with the public. Most of the ministries have a formal action plan for the implementation and delivery of French-language services.

One of our major priorities in this past year has been to expand the application of the French-language services policy to various government agencies, boards and commissions, many of which have direct impact on the daily lives of Ontarians.

In recent months we in Ontario have developed a particularly close relationship with Manitoba and New Brunswick, exchanging experiences, expertise and proposals for the most effective improvement in the delivery of services to our respective French-speaking minorities. In many instances, the practices and structures we have in Ontario have served as models to governments in these other provinces.

I would also like to mention again and emphasize the recent announcements in the speech from the throne relating to my colleague the Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson). Later this year the minister will be introducing legislation to provide for an unqualified right to a French-language elementary and secondary education for any French-speaking student in Ontario. The legislation will also provide for the strengthening of the Languages of Instruction Commission and the election of minority-language school trustees who will be responsible for many of the decisions affecting French-language education in Ontario. I mention this again because I believe it to be a significant step forward for francophone rights in Ontario.

I believe the annual report I am presenting today demonstrates the very real commitment this government has towards the implementation of French-language policy and the delivery of French-language services throughout this province.

GRAIN ELEVATOR STORAGE BILL

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, today I will be introducing a bill for first reading which will revise and update the Grain Elevator Storage Act. The purpose of this bill is to safeguard the property rights of producers who deliver grain to an elevator for storage. The proposed legislation makes it clear that farm produce held in an elevator for storage remains the property of the producer even when subject to a written agreement to sell.

In past years, once grain was in the elevators and a contract for sale had been signed, confusion sometimes arose as to who owned the farm produce in question, the producer or the elevator operator, especially when creditors took over the business operation. This confusion was compounded by the tickets and forms used in the actual transactions between the parties. When elevator operations fell into financial difficulties, financial institutions would seize all the contents in the elevators, including stored farm produce. Legal battles ensued as the rightful owners tried to regain or be compensated for their property.

The bill before the House would guarantee that all grain delivered to an elevator would be deemed intended for storage, unless the contrary is established in writing or before a court. Further, the forms used in the transactions would be separated and clarified under the revised legislation. It would further clarify the position of the producer in sales transactions by declaring that the owner retains title to the grain until he receives his money.

The chief inspector would have appropriate powers to implement these provisions, including the authority to seal bins and seize, remove and sell stored grain. Such powers are deemed necessary to safeguard the interests of the owners of farm produce. These powers are also necessary because of the perishable nature of the produce and could be invoked, for example, if the elevator operator becomes insolvent or abandons the facility.

This bill responds to representations by the producer marketing boards involved and by the chief inspector, Mr. Bill Taylor, who is a highly respected figure in the grain industry. The contents have also been discussed with the Ontario Grain and Feed Dealers Association. Those concerned appear to be supportive of these measures in their present form, given the recent responses we have received from the industry. Therefore, I am introducing this legislation for first reading in the hope of revising existing legislation as expeditiously as possible.

ORAL QUESTIONS

JOB CREATION

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Treasurer. Is he aware that when he nets out the figures from his budget he is creating only 9,000 new jobs this year over the growth in the work force? By that rate of job creation, it is going to take until 2037 to put people back to work. Surely he would agree that is a totally inadequate response, given the amount of unemployment in this province.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I do not think one should be projecting to 2037 when it is hard to project to the next year.

Mr. Peterson: The Treasurer does not have the world's greatest record as a projector of anything.

Let me quote his own words in the Globe and Mail this morning, "You don't suddenly recreate all the lost jobs, but we are doing so at a fairly good rate." Is he telling us that 9,000 jobs a year is a good rate? Is he aware that for an unemployed 19-year-old today it would take until he is 73 to get a job at this rate of job creation? Surely the Treasurer would agree that is not a good enough response.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I do not know how the honourable member does his arithmetic. I said, and I do not think the member challenged me, that the number of people who would be at work in December this year would be 65,000 more than the number of people at work in December last year.

Mr. Peterson: But look at the growth of the work force. Does the Treasurer not understand his own budget?

Hon. F. S. Miller: The member asked how many more people were at work. I am responding to him.

10:20 a.m.

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact there are about 17,000 people who are running out of unemployment insurance and having to go on the welfare rolls every month in this province, does the Treasurer really believe his figures—whether it be of 9,000 jobs created by this province or even the other figures he has thrown out in the last couple of days—are adequate to meet the need in this province?

When the Treasurer said the other day that he might bring down a mini-budget in the fall, was that an indication that it took him only 24 hours to come to the same conclusion we came to, that this budget was inadequate?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, let me clarify that comment on the mini-budget. I think the press reported it fairly. Sometimes the headline above a story indicates more than the content of the story.

I was asked whether or not I could find the $300 million shown in the budget and, if so, where. I said I expected to be working through transfer payments and other ways with Management Board to try to find that $300 million. The next question was: "What would happen if you did not? If by fall those moneys were not discovered, would it be necessary to have another budget?"

I said I had noticed on the federal scene in the last couple of years that, with a volatile economy, it was necessary for them to have at least one budget statement and one budget a year. I could not rule that out, but I certainly was not predicting it either. The world could be going much better in the fall or much worse than currently presumed. Only then would one make that decision. Do not rule out things, but do not predict them; that is all I was trying to say.

Mr. Peterson: I am going to remind the Treasurer of the figures in his own budget. He predicted 65,000 new jobs. According to his budget, there are 56,000 new entrants to the work force; net 9,000 new jobs. That is all that comes out of this budget when it happens.

Mr. Rotenberg: That's nonsense; 65,000 new jobs.

Mr. Peterson: It is net 9,000 new jobs. Those are his figures and he should understand them. He is of course aware we have lost some 489,000 jobs since August 1981. Those are the figures. Surely his response to this most critical problem is not adequate. Why did he not choose to make a more active attack on this most important problem?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Even by my befuddled arithmetic, if 56,000 more people are added to the work force, and I agree that is very likely, and if 65,000 more people are at work, I do not see that I have 9,000 new jobs. I have 65,000 new jobs.

Mr. Peterson: The Treasurer had better understand the difference between net and gross and how these figures are worked out or he will be in serious trouble.

RENTAL HOUSING

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, let me go on to a new question that does relate to employment. I think it was a year ago tomorrow the Treasurer's colleague announced, with his complicity, the great Challenge 2000 program whereby the government promised to spend $58 million earmarked for rental housing stimulation programs. Not one penny of that was spent.

Now in the budget, the Treasurer has said he will spend $16 million this fiscal year on rental housing stimulation programs. Of that, $10 million is earmarked for two or three small pilot projects and another $6 million for rental subsidies.

How can he claim he is attacking that most serious problem of lack of accommodation in this province, and on the other hand attacking with it the unemployment problem, with such an inadequate response in an area that has the capacity to create so many jobs?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, in the prebudget meetings, I met with the housing industry, the Housing and Urban Development Association of Canada and the Urban Development Institute on the same day. I will be addressing UDI at lunch today.

At the time they came in, they said words to this effect to me: "If we were giving you advice, we would suggest the housing industry in general is recovering reasonably well. There must be better ways for government to spend its money this year. However, if you choose to do some pump-priming, of course we would appreciate some extension of programs such as the renter-buy program last year because it was so outstandingly successful."

My friend may not wish to admit it, but I think we had some 16,000 applications under the renter-buy program where a $5,000 interest-free loan was given for 10 years. It seems to have had the desired effect, not only of stimulating the creation of housing but also of freeing up apartments, because about half the people who qualified moved out of apartments. I would have argued we covered both bases with one program.

At present, we estimate 55,000 starts in Ontario this year, up from 38,000-odd last year. That would seem to be a dramatic increase. Surely the member would also agree that when an industry seems to be recovering by itself it is not the time to add more to it.

Also, registered home ownership savings plan programs at the federal level were quite generous, giving, I am told, a tax benefit of up to $5,000 by themselves this year. Surely, again, I should not duplicate something the federal government is doing which will have the same desired effect.

Mr. Peterson: I understand the crisis is not in the single-family housing area in that sense; it is in the rental area. Surely the minister will recognize there is still a problem. I would like him to address himself to that part of the problems we are facing.

The minister is aware we have 178,000 unemployed in Toronto yet the vacancy rate is 1.2 per cent. In Oshawa there are 8,000 unemployed and the vacancy rate is 1.3 per cent; Ottawa 36,000 unemployed, vacancy rate 0.3 per cent; Hamilton 39,000 out of work, vacancy rate 1.2

per cent; Thunder Bay 9,000 out of work, vacancy rate 1.3 per cent.

These are all very low vacancy rates. Surely the minister could have directed funds into the rental area—I am not talking about the single-family area—that would have immediately created jobs. That area is very responsive to any kind of stimulation. Would that not have been a reasonable area for the Treasurer to attack in his budget?

Hon. F. S. Miller: The $6 million the member alluded to as rental supplement is not rental supplement. I think the ministry will be describing exactly what it is later on. It has the net effect of many more dollars. In the year before last when rental housing was assisted it was by interest-free loans of some considerable size. This year the subsidy will be in another form with the same net effect.

Let me go back to that point. If people in apartments have the ability and the desire to buy homes, they will be freeing up an apartment by doing so. Does the member not accept the fact that the two objectives—the employment of people and the freeing up of apartments through the sale of homes—are achieved at one time?

Mr. Rae: Mr. Speaker, I think the Treasurer is to be congratulated. He announced today he expected housing starts to be 55,000 and in the budget he said it was going to be only 53,000. That is an increase of 2,000 in two days. That is a demonstration of just how remarkable this Treasurer has been in terms of his predictive capacity. We should all congratulate him.

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: Does the member have a question?

Mr. Rae: There are 2,000 new starts in two days. This truly is a real miracle worker we have over there on the other side. Absolutely.

The Acting Speaker: The member will ask his question.

Mr. Rae: In two days he is able to produce 2,000 new starts. I think we should all congratulate the Treasurer.

The Acting Speaker: The honourable member will ask his question.

Mr. Rae: The Treasurer said he talked with what he called the housing industry and that he spoke to HUDAC and UDI in one day. Does the Treasurer really regard HUDAC and UDI as spokesmen for those 6,000 or 7,000 seniors and 17,000 families who are on waiting lists for social housing in this province?

Hon. F. S. Miller: No, Mr. Speaker, but they are pretty familiar with it. By the way, on the 2,000 difference it was my mistake—something I do from time to time. It is something the honourable member has never learned to admit when he makes one.

Mr. Rae: I do it all the time.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Not ever. I realize the member does make mistakes, but I never hear him admit it.

Mr. Rae: You don't hear very much.

Hon. F. S. Miller: One might also look at the government with the major responsibility in that area, the federal government, which has been cutting back on its assistance in that area. I am sure my colleague when he is here will explain that.

Mr. Peterson: I will remind the Treasurer he said in the lockup that the $6 million would be for rental subsidies. He may have some magic new program he wants to announce through his colleague which may turn out like the last one—to amount to nought.

The point I am trying to get the Treasurer to address his mind to is the question of the rental accommodation crisis. Is he happy with those vacancy rates? Does he think those are adequate to let the market forces respond? Does he think that is enough rental housing?

Does the Treasurer not feel we could have actively attacked the twin problems of lack of rental housing and unemployment by the creative approach in his budget rather than his $16-million response this year? Even in last year's terms that is inadequate. Why did the Treasurer choose not to make an active attack in that area?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I could be wrong. I may have used the term "rental subsidy" in the lockup. I think I used the term "interest subsidy." We could argue forever and I could not prove it, but I think that is the area where we are going.

10:30 a.m.

We recognize that market forces are not giving an adequate return on new rental accommodation, because I suppose rent control has kept the bulk of the older apartments at a level of rent below that which a new apartment has to have to justify being built. So it has given us a major problem: Even though those new ones are not subject to rent control, they have to be somewhere in the same marketplace; and for that reason, as my colleague knows, we have had to find various ways of lowering the net cost of his investment to a builder so that rental accommodation will be built.

We have had some very interesting chats before the budget, which, I guess sadly enough, did not materialize in time to be in the budget. But one thing I have learned about this business is that this government, at least, has learned in between budgets to take whatever actions are necessary to meet the problems head on and to reallocate our priorities. If we have to, we will.

Mr. Rae: Mr. Speaker, the Treasurer will find no argument in our party that the Liberal Party and the Liberal government in Ottawa have betrayed their obligations with respect to social housing.

The Acting Speaker: Is this the question?

Mr. Rae: Given the fact that the Treasurer has known for a long time about the policies of the Liberal government in Ottawa, why has his government not recognized the fact that the government of Ontario has an obligation with respect to social housing? Can he tell us why there was no commitment in his budget with respect to social housing?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I have learned always to let the minister who is more expert provide the answer. He is not here today. I think the honourable member should wait for an answer from him.

Mr. Rae: With great respect, the Treasurer is responsible for the policies of this government. He did not hesitate to announce a program with respect to rental housing in his budget, and he did not hesitate to take all the credit in the world for those great programs he is so proud of with respect to rental housing. So if there is nothing in social housing, he is going to have to take responsibility for that too, and he is going to have to answer to this Legislature with respect to the total absence on the social housing front.

The Treasurer stated in his comments to the Globe and Mail on May 11, when he was referring to this phantom $300 million that he now has to cut out of his budget, that the cuts will be made in the money transferred from the province to the ministries in charge of health, education and municipalities, which, if transferred, according to the budget figures, would mean a cut of roughly $21 million in the budget for municipalities and housing.

Can the Treasurer tell us whether he has any plans for further cutbacks in housing and in other transfer payments to the municipalities that could be used in the construction of social housing in Ontario?

Hon. F. S. Miller: My friend assumes that all cuts will be prorated equally across all parts of government. I do not think that is fair with respect to transfer payments.

I did make the comment that it was my belief that municipal governments probably were among the more efficient spenders of money and that probably they had been living with more constraints of their own making than some other recipients of provincial grants have been doing. I suggested, too, that this government has shown the way since 1975, making some internal efficiency moves almost every year to improve productivity, to eliminate excess management levels and to speed up the flow of business in government. Those have worked.

We have not always insisted on that same attention to management efficiency in all the recipients of grants. We believe they can do some of that; we believe they need to share that job with us. We believe we can save taxpayers money by doing so, and that is why there is $300 million allocated in a general way.

I would also point out that there is a thing called a program review going on in government. It is referred to in the budget. That program review may be the source of all that $300 million. If so, I will be happy.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, would the Treasurer not agree with me that his method of budgeting, promising to spend in various areas and then saying, "We are going to go back and find $300 million," is about the strangest way of budgeting one could possibly find? What he is admitting is that there is fat in his own system, which his party has been running for 40 years. Surely he should have identified it by now.

How can he in conscience maintain this threat of further cuts over people's heads as he goes around and looks for a further $300 million in his budget? Would he not agree that any other corporate treasurer or head of a household in this province who did the same trick would be fired forthwith because he did not know what he was doing? It has never been done before in the history of budgeting in this province. Why did the Treasurer choose such a strange way to present the accounts of this province?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, it just shows how little my friend has ever had to do with saving a buck.

Mr. Kerrio: It has nothing to do with saving a buck—nothing.

The Acting Speaker: Order.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I want to tell him, there are very few corporate places that do not have to do that kind of fast move on a daily basis.

Mr. Kerrio: That's why we've got a $2.7-billion deficit.

The Acting Speaker: Order.

Mr. Rae: Can the Treasurer confirm that the 5,000 units he is so quick to take credit for on page 13 of his budget with respect to rental accommodation would restore building levels to 1981 levels, which would mean there would still be half as many as were started in the late 1970s, in 1977 and 1978 as typical years? This would still be half the level with respect to rental accommodation in Ontario.

Given the proof of requests and pressures over the past year, not only from the co-operative movement but also from many municipalities that have nonprofit housing corporations, as well as the immense pressure on the Ontario Housing Corp. and all the other public housing corporations with respect to waiting lists in this province, how can the Treasurer justify the absence of a specific program with respect to social housing?

Does the Treasurer not recognize this absence means there are going to be thousands of people in this province who will be more poorly housed than they could have been if he had taken action?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I am sure that my colleague, given his way, would never have a privately owned home or apartment in the province; it would all have to be social, nonprofit or co-operative. It happens that the great bulk of the housing in this province is made by people who buy their own homes, rent their own apartments or build their own business.

Mr. Rae: That kind of theology is going to come as no help to those people who are looking for a decent place to live in this province, and the minister clearly does not give a damn about those people.

NIAGARA RIVER POLLUTION

Mr. Rae: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of the Environment. Can the minister confirm that eight of the 12 major industries discharging on the Canadian side of the Niagara River or of its tributaries are not currently meeting the Ministry of the Environment's objectives for discharge into natural watercourses? Can he confirm that information with respect to two thirds of the companies on the Canadian side? If so, how does the minister feel about the major cutbacks which the Treasurer has imposed on his ministry with respect to capital investment?

I have an additional question. How does he—

The Acting Speaker: One question. The honourable member is going on.

Mr. Rae: All right. I will let it go at that.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, I think it is important for the honourable member to understand what this is in reference to. It is correct that, given the stringency of our control orders, there are several companies on the Canadian side—I believe the correct number is seven—where the suspended solids in the discharge at the moment are not meeting the requirements of the ministry. However, the companies, with the advice and supervision of our staff, are in the process of modifying their processes to achieve the standards we have established.

I think it is important for the member, in communicating with the public, to make a very clear distinction between suspended solids and the biological oxygen demand and, most important, the chemical contaminants that may exist in the discharges. The suspended solids are something very different. He ought to make that distinction so as not to mislead any people on either the Canadian or the American side of the border. We are talking about something very different from the threat that exists from discharges on the American side.

With respect to the question of the budgetary allocations, I can assure the member that for the work we are doing in the Niagara River area there has been a substantial increase within our budget allocated towards that priority. The reductions that are reflected in the overall budgetary allocations and are part of the overall program of restraint within the government have been very carefully examined by me and by my staff in the course of the development of this year's budget. I can assure the member they are not in any way going to impact negatively upon the work we are doing.

It has obviously required some very careful examination of our priorities, but the reductions will be primarily in those areas of directly constructed and operated ministry facilities; that is, for water and sewage treatment. They will not impact on the areas of municipally constructed and operated facilities, whose funding we will continue, as we have in the past, to participate in. We will be able to meet, if my recollection is correct, all the requests for such facilities that are currently before us this fiscal year.

Mr. Rae: Can the minister confirm that while there are objectives of his ministry with respect to biochemical oxygen demand and phosphorus and suspended solids, as he has mentioned, there are as yet no objectives from his ministry for hundreds of industrial organic chemicals, such as trichloroethylene or methylene chloride? Does the minister not feel that the absence of these clear objectives in Canada and in Ontario acts as a deterrent when we in Ontario are making representations to New York state and to the American authorities with respect to chemical discharges on the American side?

Hon. Mr. Norton: I can confirm the first part of the member's question. Yes, there are and I am sure will continue to be for some time into the future, not only in this jurisdiction but also within any industrial jurisdiction, some chemicals for which we do not yet have agreed standards.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: Some?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Certainly, some. I am not pretending that is not the case, nor would the honourable member find any other responsible individual in any other jurisdiction pretending that is not the case. However, our ministry has embarked on a major effort to establish standards and to review existing standards as they relate to chemicals in our environment. I will be announcing shortly the composition of an environmental standards advisory body which will allow, as I indicated on an earlier occasion, an opportunity for public input. In the process I hope to establish public confidence in the standards we do have and will be establishing.

The Acting Speaker: I thank the minister. I think you have answered the question.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Are you sure you do not want to hear more? It is a very interesting area, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: There is only an hour for question period.

Hon. Mr. Norton: That was just the introduction. I am sure the leader of the third party would be delighted to hear in detail about each of the standards we already have in place.

Mr. Kerrio: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the leader of the New Democratic Party is joining forces with us to fight the problems on the Niagara River. I welcome anybody who is willing to help us in that fight.

Considering all the evidence that has been put before the minister on some of the plants discharging from the Canadian side, and more particularly those discharging from the US side, I wonder whether he would consider something I am putting in the form of a resolution, which would put a pilot plant in the city of Niagara Falls, which takes its water from the Niagara River.

Realizing the time is getting nearer when those toxics and contaminants might reach levels that are dangerous, will he consider Ontario's doing something meaningful to upgrade the research and development of a pilot plant at Niagara Falls to find out how we can best cope with the toxics in that major waterway? Would it not be in the best interests of all people across Ontario and in other jurisdictions to do that kind of research at Niagara Falls? There will be 100 per cent support from this side.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, the only incredible part of that question was the last sentence, that I would ever get 100 per cent support from that side on anything.

The Acting Speaker: The minister will answer the question.

Hon. Mr. Norton: The honourable member himself should bear in mind and constantly remind his constituents of the vigilance, testing and monitoring we are doing in the Niagara River to ensure there is no threat to the health of his constituents or any other persons depending upon that as their source of drinking water.

With regard to a pilot project, I sometimes wonder whether the member does not have a pipeline into my ministry. In fact, one of the things that—

The Acting Speaker: The minister should give us the answer to the question. He is getting diverted to a pipeline.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Or worse still, a mole. At the moment, we are looking at a proposal developed by the staff at my request for the possible development of such a pilot project. As I told the member earlier, we already have in place a system for treatment of water in another location in Ontario dealing with a situation we know is emergent.

The site of any such pilot project, if we do decide to proceed with it, has yet to be determined. Obviously, Niagara Falls and any other community in Ontario that might be faced with similar potential problems would be given consideration as a possible location.

Mr. Charlton: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister of environmental bafflebag. I am sure the minister would not want unintentionally to misinform the people of Ontario by leaving the implication that there are no toxic chemicals involved in those discharges by the companies we are talking about, because there are some.

Can the minister tell us, first, in the case of the two companies currently under control orders, which have been extended on a number of occasions, is he going to prosecute those companies if they have not met the conditions in the control orders when they expire? Second, can he tell us when he will proceed to put in place control orders on the other five companies where there has been little or no improvement and, to this point, he has taken no action at all?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, I did not at any time suggest that in the discharges there was not material present in sufficient concentration to be cause for concern. The question was raised with me as to whether they were meeting the requirements. The honourable member should not put words into my mouth.

By the way, it is not bafflebag; it is just information. I know the member does not ask questions with the hope of eliciting information; he asks questions with the hope of embarrassing somebody on this side.

The Acting Speaker: I thank the honourable minister.

Hon. Mr. Norton: If he continues to ask me questions, I am going to continue to give him information whether he likes it or not.

TREASURER'S WEDDING ANNIVERSARY

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, on a point of personal privilege, if the honourable members will allow: My privileges as a member of the House were modestly abused over the past few days in terms of a report appearing in the press that the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) was celebrating his wedding anniversary last Thursday evening.

I would like to set the record straight so my privileges would then be in order by extending on behalf of all members of the House our congratulations to the Treasurer, who is on this date celebrating his 33rd wedding anniversary and who tomorrow will be celebrating the 33rd anniversary of his 23rd year of being born. In other words, he will be 56 years old tomorrow. I would like to extend our congratulations to him.

The Acting Speaker: We all congratulate the Treasurer.

10:40 a.m.

OHIP PREMIUMS

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I have a new question for the birthday boy.

Hon. Mr. Ashe: It's tomorrow.

Ms. Copps: Just a boy; that is it. I am surprised he has survived as long as he has around this place. It says a lot for the Treasurer.

That being said, is the Treasurer aware that as a result of his refusal in the last two budgets to increase the rate of Ontario health insurance plan premium assistance levels, more than 2,000 families in Ontario who were eligible for premium assistance in 1981 are no longer eligible? Does he feel this is a just measure in view of the five per cent personal income tax surcharge?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, since the honourable member called me a birthday boy, let me just say, a Miller by any other name is just as sweet.

The Acting Speaker: Please answer the question.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Each year we continue to review the limits for assistance for OHIP, and I suggest they are succeeding in one way that is important. Apparently a greater number of people are taking advantage of the exemptions as they exist today. We looked at them again this year and we felt they were still relevant and fair. I suggest that has to be done each year as long as we have full to partial exemptions on OHIP premiums available.

Ms. Copps: With respect, the reason more people are taking advantage of the exemptions is that finally the government is beginning to let people know they are available. Certainly we are happy that people know they are available, but when a family with a 1981 income of between $9,779 and $10,630 is no longer eligible for premium assistance, it would seem to me that the Treasurer should have used his very extensive clout in cabinet—

The Acting Speaker: Supplementary?

Ms. Copps: The supplementary is coming. Why did the Treasurer not use his extensive clout in cabinet to bring the doctors in under the legislation in the spirit of the wage restraint legislation? He would have had $82 million available for programs that are needed for people at an income level of $10,000.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Just for the record, it is interesting to see that 259,000 policy holders were receiving full premium assistance in January 1982, and 398,000 were this year. That is an increase of almost 140,000. I think the program has been reasonably—

Mr. Bradley: Free advertising.

Hon. F. S. Miller: That is interesting. Of course we have advertised it, and the member for St. Catharines (Mr. Bradley) keeps telling us we should not do that. One would have to say the advertising in this kind of case, the availability of a government program, is only understood through conscientious, carefully spent money, to let the public know what programs they are entitled to.

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, is it not true that to get around the Inflation Restraint Act, under which he was restricted to increasing OHIP premiums by only five per cent, the Treasurer decided instead to bring in a five per cent surcharge on income tax? Is that not another example of the dishonesty of the budget he presented last Tuesday?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I guess I see honesty perhaps differently from the way the honourable member does. I believe it was a very honest budget.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege: It was brought to my attention that before my arrival in the House this morning the member for Etobicoke (Mr. Philip) rose on a point of personal privilege and suggested the Attorney General was guilty of some plagiarism with respect to the introduction of a bill—

The Acting Speaker: Could I ask the Attorney General to make this point following question period? The point of personal privilege was made before question period.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I thought it could be made at the first opportunity.

The Acting Speaker: No, it was not during question period. I will call upon you immediately following question period for this point of privilege.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Treasurer another question on the Ontario health insurance plan and premium assistance.

Now that we have the Peterson increase of five per cent in OHIP premiums, which has raised premiums to $680 a year—and the Treasurer will surely acknowledge that is a crushing burden for many low-income workers, in particular for people on unemployment insurance who are not eligible for premium assistance—I would like to ask the Treasurer why so many recipients of unemployment insurance are not receiving premium assistance.

Can the Treasurer tell us his estimate of how many of the 427,000 unemployment insurance recipients in Ontario are receiving premium assistance? Our calculation, based on conversations with officials in the Ministry of Health, is that in the vicinity of 20 per cent of unemployment insurance recipients are getting premium assistance.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, in January there was a total of 1,786,092 policyholders receiving full or partial assistance; on municipal welfare, on which some of those people exist, there are 112,347, and 71,885 are on temporary assistance.

The honourable member knows assistance is based on the gross annual income of the recipient, just as income tax is. If unemployment insurance happens to come along at a time that fills in a trough but still leaves a person with a taxable income in the year, I cannot for the life of me see why he would be any different from a person who had an average annual income of the same total amount and is required to pay those things.

Mr. McClellan: I do not know whether the Treasurer is doing it deliberately, but he is avoiding the question I am asking. I am not talking about senior citizens who get free premium coverage or about welfare recipients, and the Treasurer knows that. I am talking about low-income working people who are not on welfare and about unemployment insurance recipients. Neither of these groups is covered by his flimsy and flaccid premium assistance program.

Why does the Treasurer continue to dodge this question? Why does he not acknowledge that there are tens of thousands of low-income working people and tens of thousands of unemployment insurance recipients in Ontario who are ineligible for premium assistance and who face the crushing burden of $680 a year in OHIP premiums? When is he going to scrap this useless premium assistance program and replace it with a tax credit?

Hon. F. S. Miller: About 900,000 policyholders who are under 65 do not think it so useless.

Less than 20 per cent of the health care system is paid for by it.

I do not know what kind of world the member thinks exists out there where $7.5 billion can be spent on health care and only $1.5 billion—

Mr. R. F. Johnston: What are the other provinces doing? This is just so much garbage.

The Acting Speaker: Order.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Every time the honourable member starts losing he starts yacking.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, if the Treasurer looks at his 1982 budget and this one, it is clear from his figures in this budget that more than 2,000 families who were eligible for premium assistance in 1981 are no longer eligible. If he were to take a look at the economic climate in 1983, he might think people are more in need. With a sense of fair play, could he not introduce an increase in the premium assistance level at least to cover those families who were covered in 1981?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, in my response to the original question I said we would review it each year, and we did so this year. The five per cent increase in OHIP premiums is less than inflation. I think the honourable member will accept that. It is also about 12 per cent less than the increase in the cost of the health care system last year, as I recall it. It did not even continue to maintain OHIP at the level it previously did.

I suggest to the member that each year we will continue that threshold level at which we cut in with assistance. It will be done next year again.

BUDGET SECURITY

Mr. Pollock: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General. Last week, we were discussing at this time the alleged budget leaks and it was reported in one local paper that a reporter from the Globe and Mail allegedly had taken documents from a Toronto printing firm. Did that reporter take that information from the premises of a printing firm?

Mr. Wildman: Did you just hear about that?

Mr. Peterson: When did you find out about it?
11 a.m.

Hon. G. W. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure I heard the last part of the honourable member's question. Could he repeat it?

Mr. Pollock: Did that reporter take information from that Toronto printing firm?

Hon. G. W. Taylor: I thought I heard that, but I was not sure.

Mr. Peterson: George, don't start thinking about it; you'll get in trouble. Just read what you have in front of you.

The Acting Speaker: Order.

Hon. G. W. Taylor: I am very interested in the member's question. It is a very good one. I am not sure the content and the facts are totally as I would like to answer them.

A police investigation into this matter is proceeding. As all members know, as one is doing an investigation on this matter, it is not the process and the procedure of the Solicitor General to comment on the investigation. I will just assure the honourable members that the investigation is proceeding. When there is a culmination of that investigation, we will follow the normal procedure of consulting with the law officers of the crown and come to some conclusion.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, when does the Solicitor General expect his investigation will be concluded? Does he have any indication?

Hon. G. W. Taylor: No, Mr. Speaker, I have no indication to give this House as to when the investigation will be completed. Naturally, it will be a thorough, comprehensive, total investigation and when the matter is completed, I shall inform the members. I do not have a time frame for that now.

FARM ADJUSTMENT ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Mr. Riddell: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture and Food. I thought the minister would be attending the Centralia College graduation today. I hope the announcement by the Premier (Mr. Davis) has not dampened his spirits, because I still think the minister is the front runner.

My question pertains to the shortcomings of the budget as it affects the agricultural industry. In view of the fact that the amount spent to date under the Ontario farm adjustment assistance program, commonly referred to as OFAAP, is $18.8 million out of a total allocation of $80 million, and since falling interest rates have made the five per cent subsidy portion of the program practically useless to farmers and figures in the budget state that $20 million of this program was underspent in 1982-83 and transferred to the following year, why does the minister not change this program as the major farm organizations have asked and subsidize the interest rate down to eight per cent from the current 12 per cent?

Will the minister not agree that this change is not likely to put OFAAP over budget, since the present allocation of funds is likely to remain unspent?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to tell the honourable member that my very well-qualified assistant deputy minister, Dr. Clare Rennie, is attending the graduation at Centralia today. I checked first to see whether the local member was going to attend, and I figured if it was not important enough for him to be there—

Mr. Riddell: I'll be there. As soon as you answer my question, I am gone.

Mr. Peterson: Would you like him to drive you down in his car, Dennis?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: No. Yours.

Mr. Wrye: Come on. Get on with it and answer the question.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Do you want a long answer?

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: The minister will answer the question.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: As the member knows, when the farm adjustment assistance program was developed in late 1981 by a task force embracing government and industry representation and when it was introduced in 1982, it was originally intended to be a short-term program, in fact, only a one-year program. At the time it was developed the primary concern to be addressed was to be that of very high interest rates and, as a result, in 1982, through both the initial announcement of the program and the broadened criteria that I announced in this House on March 11 last year, we were able to assist something like 3,500 people, most of whom applied for interest rate reduction grants.

As 1982 wore on, the interest rates came down, so this was not as much of a problem. It had been the view of the task force and, I think, the widely held view of the industry in late 1981 or early 1982 that a 12 per cent interest rate was a tolerable level with which to work. It was not ideal, obviously; we would all like to see it lower than that, whether we are farmers, residential mortgage holders or whatever.

But as the rates came down there were still problems, particularly with respect to certain commodity prices, some of which had not improved any from 1981 and others of which deteriorated in 1982. I am thinking particularly of the cash crops.

So the program was extended and at the time I announced the extension of the program I indicated we fully anticipated that, with interest rates having come down, option B, as it is known in the program, would be a less attractive feature—it would be useful to some, but not to nearly as many as in 1982—but option C, under which the government provides guarantees of new lines of operating credit, would be used more extensively in 1983. In fact, it is option C that is being requested more often this year. The intention is that the program will terminate on December 31, 1983.

With respect, I think what the honourable member is talking about is a suggestion, which is certainly advanced by some people, that the government should have a program that permanently subsidizes interest rates below current levels. We do not have any plans to do that.

Mr. Riddell: If the minister had ever tried his hand at farming, he would know that one cannot produce at any kind of profit with interest rates at 12 per cent. The farmers have no control over their commodity prices—he should know that; therefore, they have to be helped at the other end.

But in view of the total lack of direction given in the budget to the agricultural industry at a time when it is facing its greatest uncertainty, would the minister not agree that his own argument—that we cannot compare this year's decrease in the overall agriculture budget to last year's or even to that of two years ago because of extraordinary expenses for emergency assistance in those years—is a clear indication of the government's failed ad hoc approach to agriculture?

The minister cannot use the $45 million he put into the tobacco crop last year because he knows that $15 million of that is federal money and the other $15 million was put out by way of loans. So he cannot use that bogymen.

Would the minister further agree that Ontario farmers cannot hope to survive if they are left to plan on a year-to-year basis without focus? Why does the minister not act on the recommendation of the government's action committee in 1981, which included his own deputy minister and which stated that the provincial government should implement a long-term strategy for agriculture? When will we see that kind of strategy?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I take it that, if I were to put a resolution before this House supporting the government's initiatives with respect to the development of a national stabilization program, the member would second it and would say to his colleague, his friend in Ottawa: "Get off the pot. Work with the provinces; work with the producers; stop talking about some better idea that you have never presented."

The fact is that it is this ministry and this government that have taken a leadership position in respect of several important initiatives in agriculture in this country, not the least of them being stabilization, and I am sure the member would support what we are doing 100 per cent because that is in the long-term interests of agriculture.

The Acting Speaker: Supplementary, member for Welland-Thorold.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Do you support the resolution?

Mr. Riddell: You know I support it.

The Acting Speaker: Order.

Interjections.

11:10 a.m.

The Acting Speaker: The Minister of Agriculture and Food has stirred the pot. The member for Welland-Thorold.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, when I questioned the minister during estimates last year on how much additional money the province would be willing to put into this three-part program, he intimated he did not expect there would be any additional money required. What good is it going to be to the farmers if no more money is put in by the government? He is just using this program as a red herring.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: I suggest the member examines the record of what we discussed during estimates, and the record of anything I have ever said in public on that question.

Mr. Laughren: Answer the question. It is not a point of order.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I am sure the member will find I have said repeatedly that compared to the ad hoc approach, which in my view has characterized support among all the provinces in recent years because of the insufficiency of the existing Agricultural Stabilization Act of Canada, the cost to governments will be little more, if any, than what it has cost us with the ad hoc approach. It will cost more than a base budget, but not in comparison to ad hocking our way through.

Mr. Wildman: That is the answer to the question.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: That is not a point of order.

The Acting Speaker: I would ask the member for Welland-Thorold to clarify his supplementary question. I am asking him to repeat it so that at least the Speaker can hear it.

Mr. Swart: I have a supplementary question but it should be pointed out to the minister, in reply to his point of order, that his ad hoc program is totally inadequate now and will continue to be totally inadequate in the future.

The Acting Speaker: You are responding to the original question. Do you have a supplementary?

Mr. Swart: Is the minister aware the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) stated in his comments that the programs in force would be continued with something like a 9.3 per cent increase this year? Will he, therefore, give a guarantee to this House that there will be a 9.3 per cent increase in the $18 million that was paid out under OFAAP last year? If it is necessary to broaden that program, as should be done, to have a minimum requirement of eight per cent or 10 per cent for the farmers to get assistance, will he change the program so that money is paid out this year?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: There are almost 4,000 farmers in Ontario who are living testaments that OFAAP does work, and that it has provided very meaningful assistance to a number of people. There is sufficient money budgeted that the program will be able to run to the end of 1983 to assist those who meet the criteria of the program. That will not be a problem.

CONSUMER CONFIDENCE

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Treasurer. On page 9 of the budget tabled on Tuesday the Treasurer states, "The pace of our economic recovery will depend a great deal on the strength of consumer demand." With this in mind, I would like to ask the Treasurer, how can he state that his budget has stimulated consumer demand? On the one hand, he gives $55 million in sales tax breaks, and on the other hand, through the five per cent increase in OHIP premiums, the five per cent surcharge on Ontario taxes and the $135-million increase in taxes on tobacco and alcohol, a total of $365 million is taken out of the economy. That is a ratio of $7 taken out of the economy for every $1 stimulation of consumer demand. How will this possibly stimulate consumer demand in this province?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, first, my friend assumes all of the consumer demand was in the sales tax package. That is not so. There are other measures that will stimulate consumer demand, not the least of which is our employment package which will get more people back to work, and not the least of which either is the confidence people have in this government because this is a government that has had a good track record.

I think the member will see the taxes we used are either on items like liquor where our tax rate remains considerably lower than in most neighbouring provinces or on income where we have an example of a fairly high savings rate at the present time. The tax that was most likely to affect consumption would have been a sales tax increase. That was deemed to be unwise in the present economy. I hope the member will agree with that.

The small reduction on two selected items has, as far as I can see, been pretty well received by the public. On the few radio shows I have done that are live, phone-in ones, I have found quite a few people have decided to purchase a product made in Ontario. I believe this will create jobs.

Mr. Cooke: The Treasurer points out our tax on tobacco and alcohol in Ontario is much lower than in other provinces. However, for those people on low incomes in Ontario we have the distinction of Ontario health insurance plan premiums that are about double those of either of the two other provinces that charge OHIP premiums. Now we have this five per cent surtax, the so-called social services maintenance tax.

The Acting Speaker: Supplementary?

Mr. Cooke: I am getting to it, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: Get to it.

Mr. Cooke: Will the Treasurer at least not admit or consider that the five per cent surtax was a mistake? It hits those people on low incomes who are likely to stimulate consumer demand the most because they spend every cent they have. Would he at least go the way the other three provinces—British Columbia, Manitoba and Saskatchewan—have gone with surtax, and charge that tax only on incomes of over $40,000?

Hon. F. S. Miller: No, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: There is just over a minute remaining in question period.

Mr. Wrye: Mr. Speaker, in reaching his decision to offer a short-term stimulus to the furniture and appliance businesses, the Treasurer will be aware he ran entirely counter to the views of the Ontario Chamber of Commerce.

I want to read a portion of its brief to him. The chamber said, "Such a program would serve to reduce inventory rather than to create jobs." Why did the Treasurer reject that advice? Can he tell us, if he believes it is going to create jobs, how many jobs will this short-term stimulus create? It is going to cost the taxpayers $55 million, about the same amount as the OHIP increase.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I assume the member is against the tax decrease. I assume he is against the people in his riding who will be buying those appliances. I hope he will tell them he opposes that tax decrease. I hope he will tell them he did not believe there should be jobs and that the $700 million of appliances bought really did not create any jobs in the province.

SIMILARITY OF BILLS

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege: As I said earlier, it was brought to my attention just before I entered the House that the member for Etobicoke (Mr. Philip) stood on a point of order and stated that the Attorney General, among other things, had been guilty of plagiarism with respect to our Bill 32, An Act to amend the Landlord and Tenant Act.

His comments are very interesting. I invite the members of the House to look at the Residential Tenancies Act, Revised Statutes of Ontario 1980, chapter 452, which legislation I believe was passed in 1979. The members will recall there were some sections that were not proclaimed because of a constitutional issue that was raised.

In the honourable member's private member's bill, the two sections are taken directly from this government legislation. I refer all members of the House to subsection 51(2) of that legislation and subsection 52(2) of the same legislation. Also, Bill 32 does contain some important features that are not contained in this private member's bill.

In view of the fact it is quite clear the member for Etobicoke has engaged in plagiarism, of which he has accused the Attorney General, I think he owes both the Attorney General and all the members of this House an apology.

11:20 a.m.

The Acting Speaker: We are not about to enter into a debate on this matter. You have raised a question of personal privilege. We now come to petitions.

Mr. Philip: On a point of order—

The Acting Speaker: Is this the same point of order?

Mr. Philip: No, on the Attorney General's point of order.

The Acting Speaker: We are not about to enter into a long debate. If the member has a quick point of order different from what has already been raised then he should make it.

Mr. Philip: Mr. Speaker, that section of the legislation which was not proclaimed came from the general government committee and not from the government. If one compares the two bills that are here—

The Acting Speaker: The honourable member has raised—

Mr. Philip: Mr. Speaker, you heard out the Attorney General; the least you can do is hear me out.

The fact is the minister stole my bill. Even an unbiased observer, Orland French, uses the word "steal." He does not say plagiarize, he says the minister stole the bill.

Mr. McClellan: Get one of your lawyers to draft an apology.

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: Order. The honourable member will take his seat. There is nothing of the order of stealing or anything else. We are here in an honourable House with honourable members. The member asked for a point of clarification. The Attorney General has sought to clarify it further. We are now at the point of petitions.

Mr. Bradley: Mr. Speaker, I have a new point of order. Because he is such a modest individual I would like to point out that the former Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Drea) is a person who could possibly claim credit for this piece of legislation.

The Acting Speaker: I do not think you are leading to a point of order. Please proceed with petitions.

Mr. Riddell: I agree, Mr. Speaker; I must get to this Centralia College graduation.

PETITIONS

MARIPOSA BROOK

Mr. Riddell: Mr. Speaker, I wish to table a petition containing 171 signatures. It reads as follows:

"We, the undersigned, wish to indicate by signing the within petition that we consider any further drainage works on Mariposa Brook and tributaries to be contrary to our best interests. Our concerns relate to the following: (1) water supply and effects on our water supply and wells; (2) natural features of the area, adverse affect on wetlands, fish and wildlife would be contrary to proposed wetlands policy for the province; (3) cost of any project at difficult economic times with little or no benefit perceived."

CERTIFICATION OF HAIRDRESSERS, BARBERS AND HAIR STYLISTS

Mr. Ruston: Mr. Speaker, I wish to table a petition with 3,200 signatures. They are in support of the certified trade of hairdressers, barbers and hair stylists, and object to the government removing that.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

GRAIN ELEVATOR STORAGE ACT

Hon. Mr. Timbrell moved, seconded by Hon. Mr. McCague, first reading of Bill 40, An Act to revise the Grain Elevator Storage Act.

Motion agreed to.

DEGREE GRANTING ACT

Hon. Miss Stephenson moved, seconded by Hon. Mr. Wells, first reading of Bill 41, An Act to regulate the Granting of Degrees.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, in reintroducing this bill entitled An Act to regulate the Granting of Degrees I would note that there are some changes in the wording of the bill but it is essentially the same one I introduced last year.

My conviction regarding the absolute need for this legislation was reinforced earlier this week and again this morning by the United States Federal Bureau of Investigation's announcement that it is investigating a number of mail order colleges for allegedly issuing phoney degrees. Some of these institutions—in fact, four of them—are operating from post office boxes in Ontario.

Mr. Laughren: Do they supply the law degrees to Osgoode Hall?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: The majority of provinces in this country have at this time some form of legislative control over the granting of degrees or the use of the term "university." The absence of legislative control in Ontario constitutes a significant exception, and the Association of Universities and Colleges of Canada is concerned that the universal acceptance of the Canadian university degree will be jeopardized by the absence of appropriate provincial legislation in this province. The association, AUCC, has urged that this bill be enacted as soon as possible.

Mr. Laughren: Even Richard Treleaven has a law degree. Can you imagine?

ORDERS OF THE DAY

Resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment to the motion that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government.

Mr. Treleaven: Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to rise to speak in favour of the budget. First, this pile of Revised Statutes of Ontario really is not to be referred to, it is simply to help out my bifocals.

In reply to the interjections made by the member for Nickel Belt as the Minister of Education introduced her bill, I do not think Osgoode Hall will be unduly affected by that bill. I think most solicitors who received their call to the bar from Osgoode Hall and their legal training there are safe and their degrees and their calls will stay in place.

This budget not only exemplifies responsible financial management but also provides for direct job creation and other stimulative measures at a time when they are needed. I am sure there were many temptations facing the Treasurer in the preparation of the budget, and just as many pitfalls. Fortunately for us, he was able to avoid them. It would no doubt have been easy to invent all sorts of schemes for creating jobs in the public sector, and it appears the third party has done just that, but well-intentioned as such ideas might have been they would have been irresponsible.

The other morning as I was travelling along the highway to the riding of Oxford I had the pleasure of hearing the two opposition critics interviewed on the Canadian Broadcasting Corp. Each of them was hard pressed. They were like the little boy who, on the television commercial, comes up with an empty bowl and asks for more.

Their approach was less than credible. Both the Liberal and the NDP critics were asking for more goodies, asking for the government to provide more services. However, they did not state on the radio whether they wanted a larger deficit or more taxes. I submit that when one is suggesting more services must be provided, it is only credible and reasonable and mature to suggest where the money is going to come from: a larger deficit or more tax.

I will get to the comments that were made last night by the member for Algoma (Mr. Wildman). He did face the issue, but the two critics did not. If one wants services, it is only credible to fess up to what one is going to tax; to stand right in front of the public and say, "I am going to tax A, B, or C." Do not hide behind just "more" and duck the issues.

Last night the member for Algoma did stand more credibly than his party's critic. He did say he wanted to raise $2 billion more for job creation, $1 billion of which he wanted to raise by an increased deficit. I will deal with deficits later in my remarks.

He was also going to raise $1 billion through the reinstitution of succession duties and through corporation taxes. If I may review the history of succession duties in Ontario, in fact in Canada, both the federal and provincial governments got out of the field of death duties because, quite frankly, they were not raising enough taxes. The federal government got out and instituted capital gains in 1971 and the province got out of succession duties after that.

I was not a member of this House, but I was a solicitor with a major part of my practice in estates. I was certainly aware of death duties; a good part of my day was spent in estate planning dealing with succession duties, something I am sure the Speaker in the chair was also doing.

There is no possible way that $750 million is going to be raised by the reinstitution of succession duties in Ontario.

Mr. Laughren: Do not mislead the House; $100 million.

Mr. Treleaven: The member for Algoma was suggesting that last night. The member for Nickel Belt is now suggesting it was $100 million in succession duties. Does that mean, therefore, that the other $900 million was to be an increase in corporation taxes, because the member for Algoma was going to raise his $1 billion by those two means?

Mr. Laughren: Why does the member not pay attention?

Mr. Treleaven: I thought I was paying attention. I suspect the member for Nickel Belt was not listening properly to his friend. He was in anticipatory high dudgeon for the member for Scarborough West (Mr. R. F. Johnston) and his late show. I suspect he was distracted from the matter of death duties.

Getting back to the budget per se, huge expenditures without matching revenues never serve the public interest and such expenditures by government would only slow down the recovery which has just begun.

Of course, there really have not been many other serious suggestions made that differ much from the approach taken by the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) in his budget. That approach has been an eminently sensible one.

The budget which the Treasurer presented illustrates a number of points. It illustrates the government has Ontario's economic prosperity and future health in mind and is not willing to sacrifice those for short-term gains. The budget also illustrates the concern of this government for those individuals who do not have jobs. I will get to that a little later.

In addition to its other programs, special provisions have been made for youth employment: a spending increase of more than 30 per cent over last year's budget figures.

Mr. Gillies: Hear, hear.

Mr. Treleaven: Yes, and certainly the member for Brantford last night extolled that move. Youth employment is his area and I am sure he convinced the member for Nickel Belt of the additional jobs that are forthcoming in the youth area.

These provisions, according to the budget presentation, are expected to create over 100,000 jobs for our youth. We should not forget as well that the other job creation and manpower training measures will also help many young people in that 15 to 24 age group.

Third, this budget clearly illustrates the government's commitment to our economic and social programs. Rather than chopping back on programs in a time of economic adversity, these programs are being maintained and will be sustained, partly by the social services maintenance tax which is also mentioned in the budget. Might I say it is also temporary.

In addition to normal ongoing processes to improve our programs, the government has moved to establish a formal program review process. I think we are all in agreement privately, if not publicly, that the best way to improve government programs is to ensure they work better rather than using the socialist solution of throwing someone else's money at them.

It is my hope the program review process will be successful. Not only will its success be of help in the near future where spending flexibility will continue to be limited, but the lessons learned from this process will be with us for a good many years. We will therefore be able to allocate our resources wisely for various measures and at the same time reduce our provincial deficit.

The word "deficit" is used by all and sundry in this House and in the newspapers. I suspect a good many people who are not very attuned to our political meanderings in the county of Oxford and many other ridings need to focus on the word. In Oxford county deficit means debt, it means the borrowing of money.

The New Democratic Party critic on that same radio interview last Wednesday morning was attempting to castigate this government because Ontario has the lowest per capita deficit in Canada, not only per capita but also according to gross provincial product. He was stating this and implying it was bad that we had the lowest deficit. Even though I cannot speak for the people in other ridings, I believe the people of Oxford still have their feet on the ground sufficiently to understand that debt is not inherently good. Debt is something to be kept away from.

Mr. Cassidy: What about unemployment? Is unemployment fine?

Mr. Treleaven: Unemployment is not what we are dealing with. Let us stay on one subject at a time.

Debt is not inherently good. Borrowing money is not something one chases after. It is a necessary evil but it is not good in itself. Deficits are not good in themselves. Oxford county common sense says that. Perhaps socialist philosophy has lost sight of what the average person in Ontario understands as debt and borrowing of money.

I realize that Ontario with its deficit comes across very well compared with other jurisdictions in this country; but while it might be tempting to leave it at that we should consider how serious things are in other jurisdictions rather than how well things are here. One had only to listen to the news last night and read the newspapers this morning about the difficulties in our adjacent jurisdictions to see the comparison as to how well, relatively speaking, things are going in Ontario.

Whether some members on the other side like it or not, we must start making plans to eliminate that section of the Treasurer's chart that shows 11 cents of every expenditure dollar being spent on interest. The great majority of the farmers in difficulty today have interest rates as a primary concern and a primary reason for their problems. The second problem is poor prices for their products.

I referred to the 11 per cent of the budget being spent on interest. The benefits of dealing with this 11 per cent interest rate are obvious. They have been discussed both inside and outside the chamber for years. Nevertheless, every time I look at the pie chart at the back of the budget I cannot help wondering what we could do if that money was freed up and available for other uses. One could look at the pie the federal government has and only dream of what could be done with those funds, the 30 or 40 per cent interest charges or carrying charges which we and future generations are going to carry.

The possibility of fewer and lower taxes in the future is there but we have to start planning for it now.

11:40 a.m.

The Treasurer's statement included the phrase "sound financial stewardship." All members on this side of the House certainly agree with that. The newspapers have given us many words such as "reasonable" and "moderate." The chambers of commerce in the county of Oxford have called it that. It is certainly an endorsement when the local chambers of commerce support their local Tory government.

Any administration that can ensure revenues and expenditures over a year-long period will remain within 0.7 per cent of original budget estimates is demonstrating its understanding and ability to control the revenue and expenditure process. It also is demonstrating an ability to react in a flexible manner to changing situations.

I am particularly happy this government will be providing assistance to beginning farmers. High startup costs mean virtually everyone interested in going into farming must borrow money. The high interest rates of recent years have probably been the greatest factor behind farm bankruptcies, though high production costs combined with low returns have also caused difficulties.

For those already in the business with financially viable operations, the Ontario farm adjustment assistance program has been able to help. I will refer to that as OFAAP in the rest of my remarks.

In view of the continuing financial difficulties facing farmers, the government extended OFAAP for an additional year in December. Yesterday in his budget address the Liberal critic referred to the criteria of OFAAP. He wanted those extended. Then in the balance of his remarks he implied that he wanted the equity base to go from 10 per cent to zero per cent.

I wish to address the upper limits of the equity—the 60 per cent. I would hope the government could find its way clear to increase the 60 per cent equity. Several farmers in Oxford county with equities well over 60 per cent have been and are, as of this day, in severe trouble. In an average farm in Oxford county with perhaps 100 to 150 acres, a normal barn, a normal low-moisture silo, a normal range of implements, equipment and animals, there is certainly $500,000 or $600,000 involved. If a person had 66 or 67 per cent equity it would still mean he is in debt for more than $200,000.

In the ordinary types of farming it is very difficult for a person on that 100-plus acres farm to carry charges of $200,000 plus. Depending on interest rates we are talking about $25,000 or $30,000 a year in carrying charges.

Many farmers are in difficulty. Yesterday I was in touch with the Farm Credit Corp. trying to obtain assistance for a man who has had a farm for 10 years and whose equity is certainly well above 60 per cent—probably about 70 per cent. However, with simple economic facts of life such as cash flow and decreases in the rent per acre cash croppers are willing to pay, it appears this man, in ploughing all his money back into his farm and getting systematic tileage done, is going to lose it. He simply cannot raise funds. Yet he does not qualify for OFAAP assistance.

I would like to see this government give first priority to increasing the top end of that 60 per cent equity figure rather than reacting to the lower side. I think it certainly should give the upper side the priority.

With the Treasurer's budget statement, we can now begin to look forward to assistance for beginner farmers. I am glad financial resources could be found for this program, given the current revenue-expenditure situation. I am very much looking forward to the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. Timbrell) providing us with the particulars of these programs.

From the details made available in the budget statement, the subsidy of up to five percentage points of interest on eligible loans for a five-year period will be of considerable assistance to beginning farmers. Because the importance of agriculture is not reflected in the number of producers involved, the potential of helping as many as 1,000 new farmers per year is very significant.

As the details are expanded upon by the Minister of Agriculture and Food, I hope they include the family farm situation where a son wishes to buy into the farm on a gradual basis, so that he can get a loan at the bank that will qualify under the criteria of acceptable loans and he can get his interest subsidy on that.

I do not think members will find this program having many people start from scratch and go into farming from nothing with no help from the family. What we will find is that it will accelerate and assist younger members of the family entering into the farming business, probably by way of incorporating the family farm and the purchasing of equity shares, perhaps in excess of the proportion which they get from the bank as a loan.

I do hope it assists this to come about. I have had numerous requests for this over the last several years. In fact, long before I was a member here I dealt with this problem of family planning in the corporate farming sphere and the younger generations attempting to buy in and increase their equity, leaving the older generation with the security they deserve from their many years on the farm. I do hope this new program does assist the family farming unit in itself.

Combined with OFAAP, the Ontario Ministry of Agriculture and Food's other programs and help received through the Board of Industrial Leadership and Development, the results of this program may well contribute to increased food sufficiency and a further reduction of food trade deficit.

One other small area this budget had in it that does not really show up and is not too relevant to most people is the unfairness which we have had in the past to implement dealers. They have been required to carry on their books, as inventory, implements, extremely valuable and expensive machinery with the turnback provision to the manufacturers whereby if it was not sold within a certain length of time it could be sent back to the manufacturer.

Yet when reporting time came on corporate tax the dealer was required to include that inventory as if it were his, paid for and non-returnable. I believe now the implement dealers get relief up to $2 million for that inventory on the floor.

It has been a sore point with various implement dealers who have been in touch with me over the last year. I have written to the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Ashe) several times on that and maybe, just maybe, letters from a person in the back bench here have had some little bit of influence on something like this coming about. I would like to think so.

In one other particular area, I was glad to see an additional $80 million funded into the Canada-Ontario employment development program. My remarks may be a little contrary to some of the remarks we have heard here, even contrary to some of the remarks of the person who assisted me in putting together these written remarks.

If the federal government matches the amount we are putting up in this budget as we did in the original letter of understanding, we will see just under 40,000 additional COED jobs created. Each of us by now has constituents who are benefiting from the COED program. One of its main strengths is that the programs get delivered to individual communities and organizations all across the province.

I have been particularly pleased at the projects undertaken in my own constituency. In Oxford, we have received well over $2 million under the COED program, well over 200 jobs have been created and they average over six months each. They are not 12, 13 or 14 weeks on the average; they are six months.

11:50 a.m.

About a week ago the latest statistics on unemployment for the Woodstock unemployment office reporting area were reported in the Woodstock-Ingersoll Sentinel Review. It does not include all of the riding or county of Oxford; however, it covers the great majority of it. There was a fall in unemployment. Thirty per cent of that decrease in unemployment was attributable directly to COED and 70 per cent to other factory callbacks.

We have not heard that type of endorsement in this House over the last couple of days. I do want to emphasize that 30 per cent was directly attributable to COED. Even yesterday morning in the town of Ingersoll, one of the larger municipalities of Oxford, a project was announced where COED was putting in $40,000, which created seven jobs for 118 weeks of work. These are coming along weekly. I do not think the riding of Oxford has failed to have at least one project approved in every weekly bulletin that comes out from COED.

The way COED works and the way it is able to get people to work is in a large way a tribute to the officials involved. In fact, the reason for that goes back to my earlier comments about the government's good management practices. We all know that one half of the COED program deals with municipalities; and if one of us had gone back earlier and told the average person in the street, certainly in Oxford, that three levels of government, three levels of bureaucracy—municipal, provincial and federal—were getting together to provide for the delivery of a program, then more often than not the average person could have been expected to express some doubts about the program's effectiveness.

In spite of that initial disadvantage, COED has been made to work. It is creating jobs, the earlier problems have been overcome and, even though the paper flow is not as fast as it was under the Ontario employment incentive program created in last year's budget, the joint federal funding has made it possible to create many more jobs.

As I noted earlier, the person who assisted me in forming these remarks and placing them on paper was not as optimistic, nor, obviously, has his information about the good working of this COED program been as much as mine.

I have absolutely nothing but compliments to give to people under the COED program. I find that they are going far beyond the usual bureaucratic degree to assist me in my announcements and to get messages to me early about which municipalities or which clubs are getting projects approved, the number of jobs and the amounts. They have been in the very front line of the bureaucratic endeavours that I have seen over the last two years from my perspective.

In closing, I would like to comment as well on our increased commitment to manpower training. The discussion paper on research and development presented with the budget is also timely and important. While specific details are not yet available, we all realize the importance of and need for a more skilled work force.

Approximately a month ago I had the pleasure of attending a banquet for 70 young people in Oxford county under what we call the Oxford industrial training group. The Minister of Colleges and Universities (Miss Stephenson) was there and was the guest speaker. My predecessor, the then Honourable Harry Parrott, now Harry Parrott of Oxford, was also there and a great evening was had by all.

I understand that other parts of Ontario tend to call this program the community industrial training committee. We in Oxford have had 70 people involved in it. The program is going extremely well. It replaces, may I say, some of the factory experience with classroom experience. This has been funded by this Ontario government. It came to the rescue when the federal government fell down on the job last September.

When it looked as if funding would not come through for this program and the people in the apprenticeship program would not be able to start back at Fanshawe in September, this government came to the rescue, took a chance, provided the immediate funding and said, "Go ahead and we will anticipate the federal government coming in after." It did, but this government is the driving force behind that successful program.

New technologies will bring changes to our work place. I think we are justified in showing concern over what those changes will be. But rather than get carried away in the name of irrational fear, we should also continue to be aware of the job losses which will result if our economy does not keep up with change, and balance this with plain, rural Ontario common sense.

I heard yesterday, and we have heard constantly since I came to this House, reference to a 40-year-old government; then it was 38, now it is 40. That is a red herring. To be correct and true, that would mean all of us over here would have to have sat here for 40 years.

If one looks at the seating plan and checks through the years of first election of the various members to this House, and it is constant through all three parties, one will find that approximately one third of the members were elected in 1981, one third were elected in 1975 or 1977 and only one third of the members were here prior to 1975. That means this is a young government. This is a young group; I will not say it is an inexperienced group, I will say it is a young group.

It is not a 40-year-old government. The average says it is about a five-year-old government. Mr. Speaker, I intend to hoot and holler as much as you will permit each time I hear this "40-year-old government" term in the House over the next several years.

In ending, I think our budget places Ontario in a good position to take advantage of the coming economic recovery. I would like to congratulate the Treasurer on the presentation of a sound, reasonable, responsible, sensible and moderate document of which we and all Ontarians can be proud.

The Deputy Speaker: I thank the member for Oxford for his remarks. At this time I would like to recognize the member for Parkdale.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: Do you have to?

Mr. Ruprecht: Mr. Speaker, I am indeed happy to participate in this debate. I would like to divide my presentation into two aspects: one, the budget as a whole in its overall aspect, and two, specifically what it means for the residents of Parkdale riding.

Undoubtedly every member of the House, including the member for Scarborough West (Mr. R. F. Johnston), even the member for Bellwoods (Mr. McClellan) and even the member for High Park-Swansea (Mr. Shymko), knows this budget affects every person in Ontario. That is why it is so crucial.

Mr. Shymko: Very positive.

[Applause]

Mr. Ruprecht: I only wish I could applaud this particular budget. I wish we could say something very positive about this budget, but let me say this budget in its overall design lacks one thing; it lacks vision.

It lacks vision because a budget is a response by the government to introduce new and imaginative programs. This budget does not do that. A budget is also supposed to indicate which way this province is going to move in the future. This budget says nothing about the future of Ontario, about which way the province is going to move or which way we want our children, who are our future, to move.

12 noon

There are various ways a government can persuade a population. Moral suasion is one way, but that is lacking in this government. Just think about the Rosenberg fiasco. How can this government, with this budget, try to persuade the people of Ontario to follow a new program when behind this persuasion people have to think what happened to Morley Rosenberg? What is the moral authority of this government to persuade the public of Ontario when they have to think about those kinds of decisions?

What is the moral persuasion of this government when we see no consistency—

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order: I appreciate that you recognized me in the middle of that stirring address. I want to know whether you can find out for us, as a point of information, whether it was Morley or Lennie Rosenberg who was at David Peterson's fund-raising dinner in Toronto.

The Deputy Speaker: That is not a point of order or of privilege.

Mr. Ruprecht: Mr. Speaker, I am simply saying this budget really goes nowhere in leading the people of Ontario towards a new horizon; in showing where we should go for the future. I do not want to condemn the government too much. It does some things right occasionally. A blind chicken finds a kernel of corn occasionally, and that is how the government occasionally does something right: blindly falling over something.

Mr. Shymko: At least we are not turkeys.

Mr. Ruprecht: But I do not want to talk about blind chickens or blind turkeys or blind Tories who occasionally do good things. I want to talk about the future of Ontario and how this budget does nothing to provide new programs or a new vision for Ontario. It simply plods along with no imagination and creates a feeling of uncertainty about the future among Ontario residents.

How can anyone plan his or her future or the future of the children if the uncertainty of these budget proposals continues? There is no long-term strategy here. I would like any member of the government to tell me where its long-term economic strategy is for Ontario. The answer is silence, just as I expected it to be. This budgetary document says absolutely nothing about the future of Ontario and how its citizens are to develop and show themselves and in which way they can tell their children to go.

One way this government has an influence over the people of Ontario, one way it can indicate to people which way they can go and what they can expect in the future, is through a budget statement. A budget is an economic statement about the future of Ontario. But there is absolutely nothing in here that talks about a strategy or a vision of the future. That is a problem we all have to think about.

People come into my constituency office and say, "Above everything else, Tony, we need a job." They need jobs. When we look at this budget and at the job creation programs it is supposed to talk about—of course, we on this side of the House think there is a total lack of any new imaginative policies and programs to create jobs—we can only sadly conclude that again there is no thought given to the future of Ontario.

What the people of Ontario want is to work. So let them work. Let us work together and let us build. This budget and this government do not let the people of Ontario build and create for the future. That is part of the problem of this budget.

The people who come to my office say: "Provide jobs. Create employment. Do something, but let our kids work." They are 18, 19, 20, 21 years old. They come to my office and they say, "We have looked out there for weeks and we cannot find anything." It is no excuse at all simply to say, as I hear many members say, that all people have to do, if they really want a job, is find a job.

The sad fact is that there are no jobs. So the whole argument in saying, "Let these people find jobs; some of them are not trying hard enough and some of them are really lazy" is a bogymen and a straw man. The people of Ontario, I am confident, want to work. The people of Ontario want to build. I am sure your own constituents, Mr. Speaker, come to you with the same problem and say: "Let us get on with the business of the future. Let us get on with finding employment for our children."

What is the answer of members on the other side of the House when they go to their constituency offices and they are asked those questions? Perhaps the answer is, as my friend the member for Bellwoods indicated, that there might be a job for those who go and see members of the government party. Perhaps I should ask that question, because one person might know another person. I hope that is not the case.

Mr. McClellan: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker: I did not indicate that. Let the record show I did not say government members can find anybody a job.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Cousens): That was not much of a point. Carry on.

Mr. Ruprecht: That is right, Mr. Speaker.

In any case, I am simply saying the people of Ontario are coming to all of us and saying, "Please, give us something; Give us work," and we cannot find it for them. Where are we going to send them? Do we send them to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Ramsay)? He cannot provide jobs. Do we send them to the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Drea)? He cannot find jobs.

Mr. Hodgson: I can find them jobs in agriculture.

Mr. Ruprecht: Do we send them to the member for York North (Mr. Hodgson)? Can he find jobs for them out there?

Mr. Hodgson: There is work there.

Mr. Ruprecht: Okay. We will send them to him.

That is precisely what I indicated earlier. I have stood here and said they are going to come up with a straw man, and there is the response. The response of the government is, "If the people want to work, we can find them jobs." I challenge them to come to my office. I can give them hundreds of people in Parkdale who want work and who cannot find it. They go to the employment and manpower offices. They cannot produce jobs over there. The member for York North is saying that if they want jobs they can go to him and he can provide them. I will send him the people.

Mr. Hodgson: In agriculture I can provide the jobs.

The Acting Speaker: Order.

Mr. Ruprecht: That is a real straw man. That is precisely the kind of Neanderthal thinking I would not expect the member to use. As I had said earlier, some people indicate there are jobs when really there are none.

With this budget the government has squandered our resources and consequently has squandered the future of Ontario. How has it done that? It is so serious that this government has spent more than $300 million on the Suncor purchase, which is the antithesis of Progressive Conservative Party philosophy. They are even inconsistent with their own political party. How can we ask them to be consistent with the people of Ontario when they cannot even be consistent with their own party philosophy? I say to the members, "Shame."

12:10 p.m.

Not only are they squandering our resources by spending more than $300 million for a Suncor purchase, but also they have tried to squander our resources, millions of them, to buy the Premier (Mr. Davis) a jet.

Interjections.

The Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Ruprecht: Had it not been for the opposition members here, had it not been for the strong opposition on this side of the House, the Premier today would have had his jet and he would have squandered more than $20 million or $23 million on that item alone. But through our conscience and the activities we have produced on this side of the House, we stopped the Premier from purchasing his jet and consequently prevented this province from squandering many more millions, as this government wanted to do. Consequently, we should stand here and condemn them for wanting to spend even more money.

They have squandered millions of dollars in advertising. What has this advertising done to create jobs? This government spends millions of dollars every year with its friends, advertising its own programs, which are the old trodden-path programs we have seen in the past. I am thinking specifically of the Board of Industrial Leadership and Development program, which produces nothing new; it is simply a rehash, a warming-over of the old omelettes of economic stagnation and economic unproductivity.

We on this side of the House would have funnelled the resources that the government has squandered in such purchases as I have indicated—not only on the purchase of Suncor but also on the jet and the millions in government advertising—into establishing a productivity centre and employment growth; and, of course, that should be jointly operated.

That is what we would have done. Make no mistake, Mr. Speaker, we would have established an industrial research assistance program for small and medium-sized businesses. With the money to create jobs alone we would have created a program to increase joint university and industry research and technological efforts.

With the money that was squandered we would have conducted research in telecommunications, space technology and computer sciences. With the money that was squandered we would have implemented an Ontario biotechnology strategy to improve resource use and industrial development.

With the money that was squandered we would have created a program to establish a university-based, computer-linked microelectronics design network. Just as we would have used this money to build for the vision and the future of this province, we would have taken that money and funnelled it into those kinds of programs that would be future-oriented and would show some imagination.

Above all, the kinds of specific programs I have outlined would have provided for you, Mr. Speaker, for me and for every person in Ontario a vision that a government is concerned about them and about the future of Ontario. Future vision is what is important, and this is what we have sorely neglected and what we see neglected in the budget.

The watchwords here are co-ordination and co-operation. Just as Ontario cannot act alone with these programs, it sometimes should act in co-operation with the other levels of government and specifically with the federal government. We must work hand in hand to create programs of this nature within the educational policies in our schools.

Above all, especially on this item, we must never be in a position to import labour. Just as we have imported labour from various countries, especially in the areas of technology and future-oriented issues and programs, we must now work with the Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson) so that we will never again be in a position to import labour.

Since the Minister of Education is here, and I am very happy she is here and listening very attentively, let me say to her that this importation of labour, especially technological labour, is an indictment of the Minister of Education. What it means is that she is found to be sleeping at the switch of the future. Any time we import labour we have an indictment of the minister. It means she has not been future-oriented, and it means this government has not produced educational programs that are future-oriented and can provide jobs.

Think about the anomaly. Think of the inconsistency. On the one hand there are thousands of Ontarians who are unemployed, looking for programs and jobs so their children can create career opportunities and possibilities, and on the other hand we have people going to other countries in the world and saying, "Come to Ontario, because we are inadequately trained; we are not able to find the labour necessary for our own factories."

Mr. Speaker, I know that in your fair-mindedness you would be the first one to admit the blatant incongruity of this kind of a position.

I say to the Minister of Education that, especially when we examine this budget, we see that she is found to be asleep on the future switch of Ontario. We request her to go back to her ministry and immediately provide educational opportunities and programs that will leave no doubt whatsoever about where our children will find jobs in the future and so that we will never be in a position to import labour from other countries, especially the kind of future-oriented labour this government ought to have programs for.

There is no future orientation in this budget. There is not even future orientation in the Ministry of Education. That is an example of how this government, in this budget specifically, does not do the job the people of Ontario are expecting to find so they can think forward for their own future.

Let me touch briefly on some things that are especially important for Toronto and the riding of Parkdale and that could have been addressed through the funnelling of funds into certain ministries, which then would have been more sensitive to the needs of the Metropolitan Toronto ridings.

Since I am more familiar with the city of Toronto than with the other municipalities, I will use that as an example. Many members of Toronto city council came to Queen's Park not too long ago and indicated to us that the province, and specifically the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing (Mr. Bennett), had made a commitment to Toronto that money would be made available so the city could go ahead to create subsidized housing and build new apartments for people who are in great need.

Mr. Speaker, you will be the first to admit that there are thousands of poor, working-class people on the rolls who have worked all their lives and who, through some accident or some design not of their own, are not able to maintain adequate homes.

The city was made a promise by the ministry that it could go ahead and make some purchases and some commitments to contractors to create this new housing, and that money would become available. Yet when it came down to the crunch, the expectations of some city councillors that money would come forward, specifically for the creation of homes for working-class people and the poor, were not met. When it came to the final crux of putting a name and signature on a contract, that money was not available. Indeed, they could expect a cut.

Not only is that unfair and inconsistent but, when we consider the whole thing, this means short-sightedness in terms of job creation for the future of Ontario. The minister has a beautiful opportunity to create not only short-term employment but also long-term manufacturing gains, because when we create housing, homes and apartment complexes, not only do we create short-term employment in terms of building those apartment houses and complexes but also we gain in the long run in terms of secondary manufacturing.

That is where this government has fallen short in creating housing in those municipalities and metropolitan areas that are suffering because of the low vacancy rate. In most metropolitan areas in Ontario, the vacancy rate is less than one per cent. Imagine that, Mr. Speaker. One talks about competition and the survival of the fittest; that is what one must talk about when one looks at the vacancy rate, because there is no place one can go once one has been let go.

That brings me to an important item, one I personally fought for. We have not yet received assurances from the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Elgie) that he will see to it that conversion of certain apartments to hotel-like accommodation is going to be stopped. In my own area, as well as in Scarborough, Etobicoke and North York, there are owners of apartments who are saying to tenants: "Here is your notice. You have to move out because we need this accommodation for a change in accommodation status."

What happens is that hundreds of solid tenants—they do not come for one night; they have a yearly contract—are being asked to move so one or two greedy persons can make a giant killing and a giant profit. What they do not know is that when they ask these tenants to move, especially on Jameson Avenue in my riding and in other places, they are not only making a killing in the real sense of the word because they are making a giant profit by upping the rent five or six times, but they are also killing a whole community and the stability of that community, including the school system.

Hundreds of tenants are being asked to move so an owner can change the apartment to hotel-like accommodation that will attract people for one, two or three nights or maybe even as much as a week. The people who come into a neighbourhood for one, two or three nights or in terms of a short-term commitment do not have it in mind to stay for a long time and to make a commitment to the stability of a community, to its school, to its transportation system, to its cleanliness. No commitment is made by people who come into a neighbourhood for one, two or three days to maintain good schools and clean streets.

That is a good indication of what happens to a whole community when this kind of conversion process takes place. Just as I accuse the Minister of Education of sleeping at the switch of future educational programs and possibilities, so must I accuse the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations of sleeping at the switch and destroying community stability.

It is easy to see what will take place in a situation such as that. I, for one, cannot be quiet when my own community is being destroyed. It is not necessarily through malice. That is not the accusation; I am not saying the government is doing this on purpose and by design. I do not think the Minister of Education or the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Leluk)—the only two ministers listening today—would consciously plan to create programs that would hurt the people of Ontario.

They are honourable ministers and their intentions are great, but those ministers are tired. The government is tired, and I would be too if I had been there for 40 years.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Speak for yourself. I am not in any way tired.

Mr. Ruprecht: If the minister had been in the government for 40 years she would be tired and would admit it.

Mr. Ruston: Stale.

Mr. Ruprecht: Tired, stale and unimaginative. Of course, it gets that way after 40 years. Let the fresh winds of change and imagination blow in the direction of creating programs and possibilities for the future of Ontario.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: The fresh winds of change do not encompass the hot air from you.

Mr. Ruprecht: Mr. Speaker, I will disregard the personal remarks, because I know I have been a little critical of the minister, telling her she has been found sleeping. But she has the opportunity either to condemn the budget because it is unimaginative, as I do, or to praise it for whatever good she can find in it.

I would think she would not find very much to praise, since she herself is in the position of not providing educational opportunities for our children. Instead, her government has to go abroad to hire people from other countries. They are doing that—

Hon. Miss Stephenson: To do what?

Mr. Ruprecht: To operate the minister's computers. She hired 20 people just last year to operate her computers. She can check it out. It is a shame. It is her government that went over to find out—

Mr. R. F. Johnston: You never told us this before, Bette.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: He has not yet produced one fact in this House that can be verified.

Mr. Ruprecht: The minister should inform herself of what really takes place in her own government. If she were to do that she might be creating educational programs that are future-oriented and might be teaching our kids the right things. The minister's response is the typical response of a tired and unimaginative government.

In Parkdale riding, the community is being destroyed because the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations has not plugged this loophole which will prevent some of the owners from destroying a neighbourhood. I leave it at that; I will only say I hope the minister will act soon. There will be hundreds of petitions going through, asking him to stop the possibility of conversions so that a person could not come into a community, raise hell and then leave without making a commitment to that community.

12:30 p.m.

A second point is also important for the Toronto area, especially for the west end of Toronto, and very specifically detrimental to the member for High Park-Swansea (Mr. Shymko).

Mr. Barlow: Get ready for a point of privilege.

Mr. Ruprecht: He can get up on a point of privilege. I think maybe he should if he first of all listens to what I have to say.

Mr. Shymko: Worry about your own riding for a moment.

Mr. Ruprecht: I am very worried about my own riding. I have just stood here and told the government what they ought to do, what programs they ought to institute and where they have been found to be sleeping. There is one more area that should have been addressed in this budget that has not been addressed specifically, and this is why I would say that other ministers are sleeping, too. In fact, I think when we have finished this whole program and when we have finished the budget debate, members might come to the same conclusion: the whole government is sleeping. That is what worries me.

But to get back to the issue specifically, the government has a program that is called deinstitutionalization. This means that because of the new drugs that have come out in the last decade, a person who has been admitted to a mental health centre or a hospital is simply given some of these drugs and within a very short period of time is pushed out of the hospital to wander the streets. Of course, what happens—in my riding, in the ridings of Bellwoods, Dovercourt and High Park-Swansea—is that many of those unfortunate people have to find a place they can call a home, which is really not a home but simply a room they might even have to share with two or three other people.

So the Minister of Health (Mr. Grossman) said last year: "Wait a minute. I hear so much from the west end of Toronto. I should go down there and have a look, because I want to inform myself personally to see what takes place." I must say, though, that the minister's riding is not very far from the west end; it would be central west in the first place, so he does not have very far to go.

He went in there to try to inform himself of what really takes place. When he came back he was shocked. He said, "By God, the situation there is so terrible that I have to try to do something about it."

Just as I am ready to talk about High Park-Swansea the member seems to be leaving. But now he has changed his mind and is sitting down. That's terrific.

The minister said: "We have to do something. Let's quickly put in some money." What was the result of that? The result was not substantial. But it could have been very substantial if we had had the right programs in this budget, the right financial response to those kinds of needs. We would have been in a much better position to help those unfortunate people; but we are not.

Then, just last week, another minister said: "I have to go down to see what really takes place. I have read so much in newspapers; I have heard so much on the radio; I have heard so much in this Legislature that there is a real, crying need on the part of ex-psychiatric patients and those who are mentally handicapped. I have to go down there to inform myself, to find out personally what takes place in these homes."

Of course, as members know, it was reported widely in the press. In fact, the Toronto Star had a front-page picture of the minister and his assistant. He went into these homes and when he came out he said the same thing as the Minister of Health: "By God, there is a crying need, and we should produce some programs that will help."

We want to find out where the programs and the budget allocations are that will substantially help those people in need. I am not talking about a whitewash; I am not talking about a few cents and a few dollars here and there, scattered widely all over the place. I am speaking about specific programs in a co-ordinated effort between the Ministry of Health and the Ministry of Community and Social Services that is designed directly and significantly—that is the catchword and the key word—to help those kinds of unfortunate people. Co-ordination is what is important.

When we look at page 17 of the budget we see there is now a social services maintenance tax.

Can someone tell me what this social services maintenance tax is? Does it mean the money now collected through this special tax will go into a special fund to help the needy?

I would think so if I were an Ontario resident who was normally informed of what takes place in this province. When I saw "social services maintenance tax," I would think this money I am now being asked to pay would be specifically oriented for those people who are of special concern and who have special needs. Of course, that includes a wide variety of Ontario residents, especially in the metropolitan area I am most familiar with.

There is no such fund. There is no such allocation that will be specifically oriented towards the needy and those who have worked all their lives who are now in great need of some financial incentives and help. The money this minister will be getting from this social services maintenance tax—and it will be in the millions—will not go directly into a special fund to pay for the needy; it will go into the general fund where it can be syphoned off to other kinds of programs.

I for one am very upset that this money which Ontario residents will pay, called the social services maintenance tax, may be used for further purposes and purchases such as Suncor. That is my great concern. If this government were straight with us, it would set up a special fund to help those with special needs. In that case, if we had such a fund, we would not have to go through the charade we must go through when we talk about support services for West Metro Senior Citizens Services.

The Speaker will remember precisely what happened here, as he was in this House; at least I hope he will remember. The Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Drea) was asked when he would support West Metro Senior Citizens Services and when he would help them to establish a program, because the program of West Metro Senior Citizens Services is going down the tube. Beth Hoaster-Walsh, the program director of this specific senior citizens group, told me personally at a luncheon where they tried to raise some funds that if they did not get any help, they would have to fold the supply services to those needy senior citizens whom, at that specific point, they were keeping in their homes.

The reason they were really helped was because a great fuss was being made, because petitions were being handed in to the minister, and because the opposition parties talked to him personally about this specific organization.

I am not sure what would have happened if we had not stood here and questioned him, called him personally, or written letters about it. I know I did. If we had not done that, I do not know what the minister's decision would have been.

That is neither here nor there. What is important is it took so long. It took a great deal of time to convince him to provide the $15,000 that was necessary to maintain the program to maintain senior citizens in their homes.

Think about the short-sightedness here. On the one hand, we lack hospital beds, and we lack beds and programs for senior citizens who can no longer look after themselves. On the other hand, we cannot provide between $15,000 and $30,000 to a senior citizens organization whose goal it is to maintain senior citizens in their homes so they will not be dependent totally on government. There is an incongruity here. On the one hand is the shortage of housing and beds. We cannot look after senior citizens properly when they leave their homes. On the other hand is government insensitivity in throwing them only a few thousand dollars to maintain those programs and projects so that they may have a decent life and will not be a burden to us.

The key word here is "burden." If that money had been withdrawn, here is what would have happened. If $15,000 had not been forthcoming from the minister, the program that helps hundreds of senior citizens to stay in their homes would have been destroyed. Consequently, hundreds of senior citizens might have ended up on the government's doorstep and on the doorsteps of the hospitals waiting for some services. The taxpayer would have had to pay. I only wish that in this budget the Treasurer had addressed himself more specifically and in more detail to programs that would be effective and proper.

Finally, let me address myself very briefly to another major problem: pollution. I have in front of me a great deal of research that talks about the possibility that the quality of drinking water in Toronto is not what it used to be. When I look at reports in newspapers—and I am looking at the editorial page on February 26, 1983, in the Toronto Star, where there is a long article called "The Fear of Dioxin." It says: "Last week we looked at chemicals in the Niagara River. Now we examine the most deadly pollutant of all—dioxin." They examined the water supply.

The issue of pollution is not only addressed in this research report of our drinking water. The issue of pollution is so vast that it affects life in the lakes; it affects life here, how people live in their homes, how children grow up and the kinds of diseases that might be spreading. The pollution of drinking water is such that it really affects life itself on this planet.

The Minister of the Environment (Mr. Norton), who is well intentioned, tries through his ministry to help out. But what has happened here over the last 20 years? In the Junction triangle area in the west end of Toronto, which is right next to residential homes and where children play, the pressure of criticism has grown so strong and the danger has been so great to people's lives and health that we are seeing at least some steps being taken to try to clean up a bit of the environment.

I am more experienced about the Junction triangle area than the Niagara River. I know, for example, after repeated chemical spills in that area, the health of people has been affected very directly. That is why we have to look at it. We have to see how much has been allocated. We have to see what statements in this budget address the allocation for cleaning up the environment.

When I say we must clean up the environment everywhere, I am speaking fairly broadly. We want to see a much tougher policy, much tougher legislation and a commitment by the Treasurer to supply funds, allocations and programs, which should then be worked out by the Minister of the Environment, and will speak directly to pollution not only in that area—obviously I am very concerned about it—but to pollution everywhere.

As members know, for instance, in the Junction triangle area there have been consistent chemical spills, and toxic substances that have been found are going through the sewer system and are consequently affecting every house on that sewer line. Some members may be asking: "Wait a minute. If a toxic chemical is spilled into the sewer system, how can it possibly get into the homes of the people who are complaining?"

That is a real puzzle, isn't it, because, as members know, before a smell can reach the inside of a home or the inside of a basement, it must go through the safety mechanisms of the sewer pipes. There is a certain amount of water in there, so a smell cannot go directly into a home; it must go through the sewers. Consequently it must go through the water that is there as a safety mechanism. Just like the water that is found in an ordinary washroom, the water that is found in the elbow of the sewer system should act as a safety mechanism.

The toxic chemicals are so strong—and we have proof of this—that they go right through the water and emerge as bubbles on the other side inside the homes of the people who are being affected. Thus, in this specific way we have chemical spills being directly responsible for the health and safety of every person who has a home on that sewer line, and it goes right through at least two or three ridings that are represented by members here. So it is important that we crack down on those people who are starting to pollute the environment because it is also important for the future.

In one way I am happy that the ministers saw fit, through the co-operation of the ministries of Health, Environment and Labour, to spend $147,000 on a health study that is supposed to take place in the Junction triangle area. This is one step in the right direction. It shows, at least, that the government is willing to spend this kind of money to find out what the health effects are in that area. Even though when I look at this budget and the policies of this government I cannot find very much good to say about them, in this situation I would say that they have taken one step in the right direction.

I think this step was also probably somewhat initiated not by the ministries I have just mentioned but by the city of Toronto. So even though I did praise them and say, "Yes, you have taken a step in the right direction," let me simply say that the initiative for this kind of program has also not come from the government.

So again, even though some of these steps are correct and fine, the situations I outlined before still stand: namely, that sleepiness is the order of the day and that the initiative, the imagination and the programs of the future have not been addressed in this Legislature by this government.

I would like to see more emphasis in this specific budget on cleaning up our environment, because pollution-related equipment, the cleaning up of the environment, can be a giant business. It can create a lot of jobs. But again, we are not in the forefront of creating the mechanism that will deliver those kinds of pollution-free feeding equipment. We are again found to be on the back burner and we are waiting for the United States and other countries and even other provinces to take the first step. But we want to see the leadership that is essential for the future of Ontario.

12:50 p.m.

In closing, let me simply say—

Some hon. members: Oh, no.

Mr. Ruprecht: Mr. Speaker, I am very flattered members of this Legislature would like me to keep going. That is very interesting. Thank you very much.

Let me then quickly sum up. I said at the beginning of my speech that no specific leadership had been provided by this government. I indicated that leadership was sorely lacking in various fields and what kinds of things we would do if we formed the government.

I indicated there has been no vision whatsoever of the future and no imagination used. There is no major improvement or influence to create jobs and to create confidence in the people of Ontario. I said there was no future for our children with this government and with the programs the government has outlined in this budget. I also indicated we should be creating jobs and that the people of Ontario wanted to build. I said this government has been squandering our resources.

Instead of squandering we expect leadership. We expect the government to produce an industrial strategy in the next budget that will give the people of Ontario confidence, not only in themselves but in the future of this province.

Unless that is done—and it certainly has not been done in this budget—the people of Ontario will lose confidence in this government and I predict they will. After 40 years of floundering, after 40 years of the inactivity that has been shown in this budget, after 40 years of being fairly sleepy I think the people of Ontario will be ready for a change. I personally hope, Mr. Speaker, you will not be involved in the change that takes place, because I think you are sensitive and you do have some sense of leadership.

The Deputy Speaker: Let Hansard show he is speaking to the Deputy Speaker, the member for Durham East (Mr. Cureatz).

Mr. Ruprecht: In fact, I would say there is hope for all of the four members on the government side, because their intentions are probably good. But I am talking about the 70-odd members who are missing—and who probably are not producing the kinds of programs that are necessary.

It is important that the people of Ontario have leadership for the future. If this government cannot provide the leadership, we are willing, ready and able—in co-operation with others, if that is necessary—to form the government. We can provide the future policies and programs that will re-establish confidence in the people of Ontario. Once this government is gone we can say the people will again have confidence in themselves and we shall build together, we shall grow together and we shall work together. I say let them work.

The Deputy Speaker: First, we would like to thank the member for Parkdale for his comments. I am sure at this point, the member for Oshawa (Mr. Breough) is going to—

Mr. Breough: I know you would not want me to call a quorum, Mr. Speaker.

On motion by Mr. Breough, the debate was adjourned.

The House adjourned at 12:55 p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

Monday, May 16, 1983

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

OSHAWA GENERALS

Mr. Breagh: Mr. Speaker, I know all honourable members would like to join me in offering congratulations to Canada's number one junior hockey team, the Oshawa Generals. I just wanted to point out that rumour has it they did lose one game someplace in Oregon, but in Oshawa that does not count. This team is the best in the nation. Being from Peterborough, Mr. Speaker, you can attest to that fact.

I wanted to invite all members here to come to Oshawa this afternoon at about 5 p.m. At the Oshawa city hall there will be the beginning of a rather large party. If members do come, they should know that in Oshawa we like to do things right, and this may take some time. We will be back around Thursday or Friday.

Hon. Mr. Ramsay: Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak to that point in that one of the teams Oshawa eliminated along the way was the Sault Ste. Marie Greyhounds, which had finished first in the same league that Oshawa occupies.

But I want to echo the words of the honourable member and say that we should all be extremely proud of the team from Oshawa, particularly so because they had to reach into Sault Ste. Marie to obtain their coach. He is a native of our community.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure we are all very pleased and will extend our congratulations to the players and staff of the Oshawa Generals for doing such a wonderful job.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, today I will be reintroducing the bill entitled An Act to amend the Ministry of Colleges and Universities Act, which has been referred to as the university deficits bill.

Since I originally introduced this bill in December 1982, ministry staff have been engaged in discussions with representatives of the universities pertaining to the application of the legislation. I am pleased to note that we have agreed to a number of changes in the reporting requirements and procedures, which will apply when the bill becomes law, and that these changes are reflected in the policy compendium which is being tabled in conjunction with the bill. Our discussions with the university community with respect to the bill and its applications, however, are continuing.

I would like to reiterate that we are taking legislative action to address the problem of university deficit financing on the basis of advice the government has received from the Ontario Council on University Affairs.

DEATH OF DONALD G. DAVIS

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, it is with regret that I must inform members of the Legislature of the sudden accidental death this morning of Dr. Donald G. Davis, director of the animal industry branch of the Ministry of Agriculture and Food. A native of Huron county and a 1948 graduate of the Ontario Veterinary College, Dr. Davis served his profession and the agricultural industry of this province with dedication and integrity.

He was recently named director of the animal industry branch after having served 10 years as cattle diseases consultant for the province. His career with the ministry spanned 17 years, beginning as a regional veterinarian supervising meat inspection in the west central region in 1966.

His professional accomplishments have included being president of the Ontario Veterinary Association in 1970 and co-author of the Bruce county beef study that investigated feeder cattle diseases and led to greater emphasis on preventive herd health programs.

Dr. Davis also worked closely with the Ontario Veterinary College over the years as a member of several committees, including the curriculum committee for the new doctorate of veterinary medicine program.

In addition to his contributions to his profession, Dr. Davis also generously served his community. From 1952 to 1956 he served as a councillor and mayor of Uxbridge, Ontario, where he operated a large animal practice for 18 years prior to joining the government.

Dr. Davis enjoyed his leisure time too. He was an avid horseman, but in his characteristic humour he would say the activities he enjoyed most were fishing on Lake Simcoe in the summer and inhabiting hockey arenas in the winter.

I ask that all members join me and all those in the Ministry of Agriculture and Food in expressing sympathy to Dr. Davis's wife, Irene, their five children and their granddaughter.

BUDGET SECURITY

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, in the last few days I have considered long and carefully my responsibilities as Treasurer of the province. I have the greatest respect for parliamentary tradition and I have never tried to avoid my obligations, however difficult they may be. I had decided that, whatever the outcome, my conscience was clear since both I and my staff in Treasury and Economics had taken every reasonable measure including specific contractual agreements to ensure confidentiality.

I have reviewed the legal and constitutional precedents with the solicitors from the Ministry of the Attorney General who are assigned to work with my ministry. I am tabling their memoranda today. They have informed me that the three ingredients which traditionally have required a minister's resignation were not present: first, the minister himself was not in any way responsible; second, all reasonable precautions had been taken; third, no tax measures were involved, prior knowledge of which could have permitted unfair gain.

Regarding the question of ministerial responsibility and accountability in the parliamentary tradition, Mr. Graham Stoodley, QC, after an extensive review of the history, advised as follows: "The rhetoric about resignation is not supported by the facts. Indeed, if the Treasurer were to resign over the issue it would be contrary to the parliamentary tradition evidenced in the Parliaments of Canada and the United Kingdom."

I have discussed the matter with the Premier (Mr. Davis) and we have agreed that, given the facts in this matter, there is no reason for a resignation.

My decision was also affected by the kind support of my colleagues and by so many hundreds of people who have been encouraging—in particular, the media. I plan to remain as Treasurer of Ontario as long as my Premier requires my services.

2:10 p.m.

ORAL QUESTIONS

FRENCH-LANGUAGE SERVICES

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Education. Is the minister going to respond directly to the requests of a group from Iroquois Falls who are asking that a French-language secondary instructional entity be established there? Has she met the delegations that are at Queen's Park today, and can she tell the House what her response to that request is going to be?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I met, informally and I think not entirely by accident, a group of students with M. Serge Plouffe outside the entrance to the east annex on my way into the Legislature this afternoon.

During my absence due to illness, a request was received in my office which was responded to by the arranging of a meeting this morning in my office with the assistant deputy minister responsible for French-language services. That meeting, I believe, did take place; that meeting, having occurred, will of course be reported to me.

The honourable member obviously knows that under current legislation the responsibility for this decision rests primarily with the local board of education. When there is dispute or discomfiture about that decision, the services of the Languages of Instruction Commission of Ontario may be requested.

That has been done. The LIC has made a recommendation that has not at this point been accepted by the board responsible in that area but it is my understanding that there is a significant number of citizens within the area who are attempting to provide an equitable and reasonable solution to the difficulty which apparently lies in that area at this point.

The member also knows we had made a proposal about four weeks ago regarding a modification of the responses to the languages of instruction commission, which, if accepted, could be introduced as legislation as early as this spring. We are considering that modification right now.

Mr. Nixon: We are all aware that these decisions do not come readily or easily; but with the reference that the minister has made to the announcement about four weeks ago, which certainly captured the attention of people right across Canada, that Ontario was prepared to provide French-language education for each individual who was basically a French-language student, surely the minister is in a position to indicate to the House now what her intention is in this regard, whether the appropriate legislation will be forthcoming and what we as members of this House can expect during the remainder of this session to come to grips with the problem.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: As I said, the proposal has been widely announced. It would appear to have received reasonable support, and we are in the process of drafting legislation right at this point, which must, of course, proceed through the usual processes before it can come to the House. That has not been completed as yet. I do not think it is going to take very long, I am sure the honourable members will see the results of it in the not very distant future.

I would remind the honourable member that the proposal specifically, as introduced four weeks ago, ensures that instruction is available for children within this province in either English or French where those children are in a minority. It is not limited only, as I am sure the member realizes, to francophone education; it also applies to anglophone education.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, is the minister aware that, because of illness, Mr. Kipp did not meet with the students from Iroquois Falls this morning? My understanding is that therefore they have not been able to have official contact with the ministry.

Given this situation, will the minister agree to meet with these students, who travelled for eight hours in a yellow school bus yesterday in order to meet with the legislators of the province because of their desire to see the creation of a French-language entity at the Iroquois Falls high school?

Will the minister also agree that ministry officials will go to Iroquois Falls to explain to the community, which is very confused, just what an entity would involve and how an entity can be introduced into the community without the disruption that some people in the area feel?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, in response to the final question of the honourable member first, may I say that the representatives of the regional office have already done that significantly within that area and will continue to do so.

It is my understanding there was a problem this morning with the meeting which had been arranged with the assistant deputy minister and it has been postponed until this afternoon, I believe, at 3:30 p.m., and will be with senior officials of the ministry.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, this minister will recall her own immortal words of October 5, 1979, when she said her government took it as a matter of principle to offer, wherever numbers or other circumstances warranted, French-language entities. Would the minister not admit that program has been and will continue to be a failure until she gives quasi-judicial status to the languages of instruction commission so the decisions can then be implemented properly instead of being a popularity contest? This will be the case even with her new white paper, assuming that it is ever approved.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, unlike the member for Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria), I have no presumption that my words are immortal at any time.

Mr. Wrye: That is about the only thing we would agree with you on.

Mr. McClellan: Simply infallible.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: The minister certainly is not immortal.

The content of that statement of October 5, 1979, was a very important statement on the part of this government. It is a statement which has been carried forward and has been successful in a significant number of areas the honourable member, of course, deliberately chooses to ignore. There are some areas in which there are difficulties and we have been continuing to try to find solutions to those difficult situations.

There is no policy in this government in the area of instruction or education which is totally static, nor should it be, because it is a progressive kind of activity and we continue to be progressive in our attempts to solve the problems associated with it.

MINAKI LODGE

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Tourism and Recreation, dealing with his publication entitled, Your Complete Travel Guide to All the Places Where the World Comes to Play, which was perhaps even in the Peterborough Examiner over the weekend and in the Brantford Expositor and in all the other dailies in this province and in many American publications as well. It contains not only the minister's name but of course the Premier's (Mr. Davis) name—but not his picture, unless he is in one of the crowd scenes at Ontario Place.

My question to the minister is how could he have undertaken the publication of this with the approval of the Premier himself, when the only reference to Minaki is on page 45? This is the only reference at all and it says Minaki is "a small picturesque village situated on the Winnipeg River." There is no reference whatsoever to the Taj Mahal that has been built in honour of the minister and his colleagues.

How could he possibly have overlooked an investment of $45 million? He is expecting to entice American and Canadian guests there and perhaps to pay at least part of the overdue interest on that establishment, yet he does not advertise this in his major publication.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased the acting Leader of the Opposition raises the question about this highly successful encyclopaedia. I am glad to hear he recognizes it is a very highly successful publication. In fact we do distribute it to over eight million households in Ontario and in our neighbouring states. It is a very popular and effective publication.

Mr. Kerrio: Minaki will never pay.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Will the member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Kerrio) hold it; Niagara Falls is mentioned.

There is a very simple explanation to the question the member has raised which is that, as he goes through it, he will note we do not advertise individual lodges, hotels, motels and so on. In fairness to the private sector, which constitutes the background of our whole tourism inventory, we would not give special treatment to our own wonderful Minaki Lodge. Minaki Lodge is being advertised through Radisson Hotels.

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, since I am on my feet, that the bookings are going ahead extremely well. If you want to go up there, I would advise you to book early.

2:20 p.m.

Mr. Nixon: I am sure the minister is aware that under our present status of indemnity it would not be possible for my wife and me and my little family even to consider going up there at $135 a day. Unlike the ministers, who fly up there in their own aircraft and get free provision of service, the rest of us just have to press our noses against the shiny glass of Minaki Lodge and see what all the rich people are doing.

Mr. Speaker: Question, please.

Mr. Nixon: This leads me to my supplementary. The minister has helped me with this, because we are told that 8.5 million copies were distributed in Ontario and the United States—nowhere else in Canada—at a cost of $2,264,781, and I was wondering if perhaps the only reference to Minaki was under the item "Sunset Country," where they advertise "Millionaire Days."

Is that the reference to Minaki? And as the minister in charge of this main thrust of job development in northwestern Ontario, why would he equate it with "Mosquito Bite Lodge" and those other places that are privately owned in the area, trying their best to make a living in competition with the millions of dollars that the minister puts forward against them rather than in favour of them? Surely this is an oversight that the minister cannot explain.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I do not really see the question there, but obviously the acting Leader of the Opposition has once again illustrated that his party simply does not understand northern Ontario or northwestern Ontario.

I will personally send him the statistics to show him he has missed many thousands of man-days of work that we have created up there and how much this means to the economy of that wonderful northwest—the "Sunset Country," as he quite correctly refers to it. It is a brilliant place, a wonderful place, and this lodge has meant an enormous input into the economy there. I will send him the statistics personally because he has some difficulty over there understanding what Minaki Lodge really means to the north.

Mr. Philip: Mr. Speaker, the minister will understand that with an expenditure of $44 million this has worked out to $300,000 per job for 150 jobs, of which only 30 are permanent. Can the minister tell us exactly how many local jobs have been created and how many are permanent for northern Ontario as a result of this very large expenditure of the taxpayers' money?

Mr. Speaker: I do not think that is a supplementary question.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, there is some one else there who apparently does not have the information or chooses not to see the impact of Minaki Lodge both through its renovation period and now particularly in long-range terms. Some 140 people will be working there for six or seven months of the year, quite a few of them year-round, so the impact there with respect to creating jobs is something tremendous.

One of the honourable member's earlier leaders also did not believe it, and when I was up at Minaki the last time they showed me the exact spot on the road where they said: "Here is where we stopped Stephen Lewis. We wouldn't let him get any closer to the place."

Minaki Lodge is making a real impact on the employment situation in that area of the world.

Mr. O'Neil: Mr. Speaker, I notice the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) has gone out, but maybe I could ask the minister whether or not he might give the Treasurer a minute to give us the rates at his lodge, which are likely to be a little cheaper.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order: I feel it is imperative that I read you a note I received, signed by somebody named Frank, while I was asking the question. It says: "You'll like the rates at our lodge. In addition, you get a member's 25 per cent discount."

Mr. Speaker: That sounds like a commercial.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker: I just want to say here and now that Minaki Lodge is competitive with any lodge in this province, including the Treasurer's.

[Later]

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to correct the record before the Minister of Tourism and Recreation gets on my back. On page 38 of his publication Minaki is referred to, but the hotel of the Treasurer is not. The rates of Minaki—$130 a day—are not listed, nor is it stated how to get there. I thought perhaps I should bring this to the minister's further attention.

INSPECTION OF NURSING HOMES

Mr. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Health about nursing homes. By way of preface, the minister will recall that on February 21 and February 22 I identified four nursing homes and asked him to give a full report to us about their record of compliance or noncompliance with the act and the regulations. The minister has not had either the courage or the courtesy to reply to those questions.

Specifically, today I want to ask about one of those nursing homes, the Country Place Nursing Home in Richmond Hill. Is he aware that his chief inspector has verified violations of the regulations at that nursing home that include, as preposterous as this seems, the nursing home closing down its kitchen as a cost-saving measure in January 1983? The meals are now prepared in another building on other premises and are delivered to the residents in a golf cart. Is the minister aware of that?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, there are 340 nursing homes. If the member wants to have an intelligent discussion about any of the 340 nursing homes in this province, all he has to do is call my office in the morning and tell me which one he wants to discuss in question period.

Mr. McClellan: How many times should I raise it? This is the third time.

Mr. Speaker: Order

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Do not get nervous. We have recently sent out several notices to nursing homes in the province pursuant to the crack-down on inspections. I talked about that here several months ago. That may well be one of them. If the member wants a list of them I will be happy to provide it.

Mr. McClellan: The minister has a nerve. This is the third time I have brought this particular nursing home to his attention and asked for a report. He has continued to stonewall.

Is he aware that the same chief inspector, Mr. Gould, verified that food at the Country Place Nursing Home frequently consists of left-over food that is puréed and served the subsequent day? Is he aware that the residents are receiving baby foods? Is he aware that there is a shortage of supplies, including a shortage of linen? How many times, and on what occasions prior to March 1983, have his inspectors found violations of the Nursing Homes Act and regulations at the Country Place Nursing Home?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The member knows very well in his experience in this House that if he wants an answer to that sort of question he should put it in Orders and Notices and we will be pleased to provide it.

If there are two or three matters the member is still awaiting information on, then I must say I understood, in regard to the two or three homes in question, all that information had been forwarded to him by now. I will find out why it has not been forwarded to him and he will have it forthwith.

Might I also say that if the member wants to get into the business of discussing the state of affairs in nursing homes, I hope he will be a little more cautious and a little better researched than his leader was in a quite outrageous display the day he made his vaunted speech in this House at the opening of the session. As we reviewed the accusations he made here without prior notice and without doing sufficient research, we found he was inaccurate in so many cases that I have been waiting for him to stand up and take another crack at it during question period so that I might review, for the members of this House, what a hideous exercise he did in doing his research.

Perhaps the member will invite him, when he returns from Dallas, to stand up and discuss nursing homes with me, and we will review the thoroughness of his research. It is all here; let us see who has the information.

Ms. Capps: Mr. Speaker, when the minister talks about having a full and responsible discussion, I think what we need to look at is not simply isolating three or four nursing homes; we need to have a look at the inspection service and at the situation that faces every nursing home across Ontario.

I know the minister promised in the last session that we would be getting access to inspection reports that would be made public. Can he give us any indication when this information will be available for all nursing homes so that we can have a responsible discussion and not simply point a finger at one nursing home without having facts?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: July 1, Mr. Speaker.
2:30 p.m.

Mr. McClellan: We will see how the minister's bravado stands up as we deal with these cases one at a time. Does the minister not understand that his enforcement of the Nursing Homes Act and regulations in this province is a joke and, instead of making smart-alec replies, will he make a serious commitment to table the answers to the question I raised here February 21, February 22 and again today?

So that the minister understands it and so there is no weaseling out, specifically how many times and on what occasions have his inspectors found violations of the Nursing Homes Act and regulations at each of the following nursing homes: The Good Samaritan Nursing Home in Alliston, Barton Place Nursing Home in Toronto, Country Place Nursing Home in Richmond Hill and the Lakewood Nursing Home in Huntsville?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Again, I can say in all seriousness I did think that was provided to the member. I thought it was. I do not like—

Mr. McClellan: Maybe while you were bouncing around in Switzerland somebody forgot to send it over.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Maybe when the member for York South (Mr. Rae) gets back from Dallas we will find out whether he wants to try nursing homes again.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Is he staying at the Radisson Hotel?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is right. He is staying at the Radisson Hotel in Dallas, the same chain that is operating Minaki Lodge. I presume he will come back with glowing reviews over the future of Minaki.

Mr. Foulds: Better get them to run the nursing homes as well.

Mr. Martel: You can get anything for $45 million.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Hold it, troops. In any case, the member will have that information by six o'clock this evening.

SECURICOR INVESTIGATION AND SECURITY LTD.

Mr. Mackenzie: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General. Given the stinging condemnation of Securicor in the Ontario Labour Relations Board decision of this Friday past, what is the minister's response to the decision, which indicates, and I give him two short quotes, "In addition, these actions would be illegal apart altogether from the Labour Relations Act," and "We consider the unlawful conduct of Securicor to constitute flagrant and [shocking] violations of section 64"?

What action is the minister prepared to take with respect to the licensing of David Ivers in particular and with respect to the principals of Securicor who counselled illegal activities and actually engaged in improper conduct?

Hon. G. W. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, we have just received the decision in printed form from the Ontario Labour Relations Board and members of the ministry are reviewing the content of it. When they have reviewed it, I will be able to make a further comment as to the direction in which we may go on the material contained in that decision.

Mr. Mackenzie: It is almost a year since I first started asking the minister questions on this. Or page 32, paragraph 41 clearly states that part of Securicor's defence was that its actions "were known and condoned by two sets of police" in the province. Since when have the police in Ontario been silent bystanders in dirty, illegal and covert activities designed to undermine the laws of the province, and what action will the minister be taking?

Hon. G. W. Taylor: The honourable member has suggested and alleged that the police are condoning this, or possibly are part of this, by reading part of the decision out of context. In no way do I accept that the police in this province condone or accept any of the type of activities that possibly have taken place in this regard. The police do an excellent job in the service of the people of Ontario, and in no way will I accept the comment that those actions have been condoned by the police in this province or by the Ontario Provincial Police.

Mr. Wrye: Mr. Speaker, surely that is a totally inadequate answer. The Metropolitan Toronto Police and the Ontario Provincial Police knew for some period of time that Mr. Ivers was involved as an agent provocateur with that company. Yet they did not go to the Steelworkers union until February, until the point had come when the actions of Mr. Ivers were becoming suspicious to the Steelworkers themselves.

Does the minister believe it is acceptable behaviour for the police to condone the actions of this kind of agent provocateur in the first place, and does he not agree with me that the actions of the police in this case will do absolutely nothing to convince the labour movement in this province that the police are neutral in labour disputes?

Hon. G. W. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, the police are neutral in these matters. I challenge the honourable member to show instances where they are not. They perform their duties under the law of this province and do an admirable job in the situations they encounter.

Mr. Mackenzie: I am not sure whether the Solicitor General is aware of it, but the police knew as early as October 4 that Ivers was lying when he said he was not a security employee. That means they were aware, not just since the time at which they first reported it to the union but as far back as October.

On page 50, section 63 of the OLRB decision, the following comments are made: "The board views this aspect of Mr. Ivers' activities with deep concern because in our experience strike situations are volatile enough without the introduction of this type of outside influence. It is one thing to report upon disorder on the picket line; it is quite another to be part of it. The remedies for this aspect of the respondent's activities lie largely in other forums, but to the extent that they contravene the Labour Relations Act they are a matter of serious concern to this board."

What is the minister prepared to do in terms of criminal charges against those who counsel theft and other illegal activities?

Hon. G. W. Taylor: As I mentioned before, the time we would consider any charges would be after we have reviewed the material: the transcript, the decision. If there are any facts that come out of that review, if any laws of the province have been transgressed, naturally there will be consultation as to whether criminal proceedings should follow.

CURRICULUM GUIDELINES

Mr. Bradley: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Education. Is the minister aware of the concerns being expressed by administrators, department heads and classroom teachers about the ramifications of implementing the Ontario Schools: Intermediate/Senior draft curriculum guidelines? If she is, will she inform the House as to the manner in which she is addressing these concerns within the somewhat narrow time frame she is permitted for a response to the OSIS draft proposal? Is she glad I asked?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I would doubt that even the honourable member could suggest the time frame is narrow for a response to OSIS. I would also remind the member that is the first draft of OSIS. It was written deliberately in a relatively provocative manner to elicit as many responses as possible, and we are succeeding in that. I am certainly delighted to know that is happening.

Hon. Mr. Welch: He's a teacher, you know.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Of course, yes.

I am sure the member will be responding himself, personally, as a former teacher in the system, along with his colleague the member for Kitchener-Wilmot (Mr. Sweeney), who is a former director of education, principal and teacher. They might consult with at least five or six of their colleagues in the New Democratic Party caucus who were also teachers. I forgot about the member for London North (Mr. Van Horne), who is a former director of education in that area.

Hon. Mr. Welch: And not to overlook the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk (Mr. Nixon).

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Oh, but it is so long since he taught it does not really matter any more.

Mr. Nixon: About as long as you have been away from medicine.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Oh, it is far longer since the honourable member taught than it is that I practised medicine.

Mr. Speaker: Now to the question, please.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: The responses have certainly been fulsome. Some of them have expressed a very real concern based upon strange interpretations of both the Renewal of Secondary Education report and OSIS. I must say we have been attempting to overcome some of the groundless fears that have been expressed, because they have been fostered rather deliberately by certain individuals. None the less, we believe the final draft of OSIS will be ready for fall publication and distribution. It will have had the benefit of a great deal of response from the public as well as from the educational system.

2:40 p.m.

Mr. Bradley: I am glad that in her initial answer the minister did not ruin the supplementary I have written out here.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I tried.

Mr. Bradley: I know she tried.

Genuine concerns are being conveyed to the Ministry of Education about the financial implications of the provisions of the OSIS document and about the impact of some of the proposals on the general level or basic level students in the system, many of whom might best be served by, let us call it a modification of the stipulations in the present OSIS report—this is coming directly from classroom teachers, who are on the front line—in a different way, for instance, from those who might be university-bound or more academically oriented.

Taking that into consideration, will the minister consider delaying implementation of the OSIS provisions for an additional year or at least give thought to implementing them on an incremental basis—I think that is the way we refer to it—starting in grade 7, if indeed the ministry can meet the curriculum problems that exist?

Is the minister prepared to delay for one year the full implementation so she can make everybody in the education system happy?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I gather that one of the great deficiencies in response to OSIS has been the lack of careful reading of ROSE on the part of many of those who responded. If the honourable members have carefully read both the recommendations of the secondary education review project and ROSE, they will recognize that for the very first time concentration upon the curriculum specifically for basic level and general level students is to be demonstrated in the renewal of secondary education in this province. Their curriculum will not be simply a watered-down advanced student curriculum. They will have specific curriculum for their own needs, meeting their own educational requirements for the purposes for which they determine their educational process will be used.

In that light, those respondees to OSIS might modify some of their statements about OSIS if they really and truly understood, or indeed had read, the documents that were developed to provide the foundation for OSIS in the first place.

We are considering all options. I am not sure that any one is closed. But the honourable member demonstrates that he is one of those who really does not understand the basis of the renewal of secondary education when he makes the statement that he did, even though he quoted it from someone else's letter.

Mr. Grande: Mr. Speaker, in that the SERP report talked about the particular sets of criteria within OSIS and said the problem in secondary schools is primarily for the general level students, will the the Minister of Education admit that the report is silent, at least in the first draft, in regard to general level students and the courses for general level students?

Given the compulsory nature of the courses and that more than 50 per cent of the courses in secondary school would be compulsory, will the minister admit that it will be more difficult for the general level students to graduate, that it will increase the dropout rate and that in effect accessibility to post-secondary education will be denied to a lot of students in this province?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, the member for Oakwood is barking up the wrong tree as usual. He has not read the hymn book properly, the one he is trying to sing from.

Mr. Cooke: You're the only one who barks around here.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: He barks and sings at the same time. You cannot tell the difference.

Hon. Mr. Welch: You are feeling better, aren't you?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Yes, I am. It is obvious there are specific problems which must be addressed in secondary school education for the general level students. It was because of our concern about those students that we appointed the secondary education review project in the first place, and it was on the basis of their concern about the way in which the secondary education should be organized for those students specifically that their report was drafted and our response was drafted.

It is our intent to ensure that none of the actions we take will increase the dropout rate but will encourage students, particularly at the general level, to remain longer within the school system because they will recognize that the courses they are taking are of value to them in their career choices and will provide them with the appropriate background for their lifespan as well as for their careers.

That is our intention. That is the direction in which we are moving and that, unfortunately, is what the member does not see.

SPEAKER'S WEDDING ANNIVERSARY

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, on a very quick perusal of the rules I find nothing in them that precludes a minister of the crown asking a question. I have a question and I would like a precise yes or no. Is it true that 36 years ago today you married your wife, June?

Mr. Speaker: It is indeed true.

[Applause]

SECURICOR INVESTIGATION AND SECURITY LTD.

Mr. Mackenzie: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Labour.

Given the seriousness with which the Ontario Labour Relations Board views the illegal and incredibly damaging involvement of security firms like Securicor in employee-employer relationships and the clear statement by the board that disclosure laws are a necessary addition to tough labour board policing, what is the minister prepared to do in terms of legislative action to deal with this industrial relations cancer we seem to have growing in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Ramsay: Mr. Speaker, from my preliminary perusal of the decision and listening to some of the senior leaders in the trade union movement, I certainly get the impression that the Ontario Labour Relations Board was well able to address the matter of Securicor.

Mr. Mackenzie: The minister's answer never varies and it does not deal with the question. He knows full well that covert actions can cause serious harm to employees, whether or not they are aware of a spy in their midst.

The decision of the OLRB clearly recognizes this fact in arguing for disclosure laws, citing the Landrum-Griffin Act in the United States, which seems to have been successful in this particular situation, infiltration of picket lines.

Will the minister comment on the reference to the need for such legislation recommended by the board and the very clear indication that they need this kind of action over and above the policing of the board?

Hon. Mr. Ramsay: I was in the company of the member for Hamilton East in Collingwood on Saturday afternoon. At that time he asked me the question. I gave him the answer that I just gave. I wanted to be sure my answer was consistent.

As far as the answer to his second question is concerned, senior officials of my minister and I will be meeting first thing tomorrow morning to study in depth the decision by the Ontario Labour Relations Board in regard to Securicor. I think it would be inappropriate for me to make any comment until I have had an opportunity to discuss the matter.

Mr. Wrye: Mr. Speaker, given that Mr. Ivers testified that he routinely infiltrates companies posing as a worker and reports to companies about drug use, alcoholism, theft and a whole variety of other things, some of which may be fact, some of which may be fiction and all of which in a sense violate civil liberties, and in view of the fact that the Ontario Labour Relations Board has given a clear statement on the unacceptability of industrial espionage within the framework of collective bargaining, why will the minister not give us a commitment now to introduce legislation that would prohibit such offensive practices in equally clear terms?

2:50 p.m.

Hon. Mr. Ramsay: Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat what I said a few moments ago. Certainly the possibilities will be thoroughly studied, but I do not think the honourable member opposite expects me to make some sort of a commitment just two days after a decision has been handed down. If I did make a decision within two days of a decision of that nature, of that seriousness, of that complexity, the member would be standing up here in the House and criticizing me for over-reacting.

MASSEY-FERGUSON

Mr. Barlow: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry and Trade. A few days ago, I received a phone call at my home. I might add that this call really disturbed me. In view of the fact that this government has a very substantial investment in Massey-Ferguson, I would like the minister to verify for me whether it is true that two weeks ago today, on May 1, the complete combine line had to close down because a large percentage of the shift had phoned in sick but, in fact, they went fishing at the opening of the trout season.

Hon. Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, I do not know the answer to the question, but I have heard the rumour as well and I think it is something we might inquire about. On the other hand, if the employees chose to take the day off for whatever reason, I suppose that is their choice and they are the ones who are diminished in income. Maybe there is fisherman's flu going around or something. Sixty-nine per cent of the line, when there are 3,000 people working there, is quite an extensive turnout. Whatever the case, I will be glad to look into the question.

ONTARIO HOME RENEWAL PROGRAM FUNDS

Mr. Wrye: Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing, and it concerns the Ontario home renewal program. In reply to questions put to the minister by my colleague the member for Waterloo North (Mr. Epp) and myself last month, he indicated he had not excluded the possibility of replacing the Ontario home renewal program with some other renovation or rehabilitation program.

The minister is aware that last week's budget promises no relief and represents no new initiatives for the low-income families that are in desperate need of such a program, despite the fact that it contains a very positive job creation component. Now that the budget has destroyed the hopes of hundreds of municipalities and thousands of low-income families that they might have housing that meets minimum standards, where does the minister suggest they look for money?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, if the honourable member goes back and looks at my answer of the day, I believe I also indicated very clearly that the federal government had implemented a program to allow for refurbishing, renovation and rehabilitation of units. I very clearly said at the time that there appeared to be another complication that had been thrown into the situation, in that the feds had come along and attempted to duplicate the program. If he will recall, I said I believed that is the direction we will go in the ministry. Those people who inquire of the ministry, and indeed the municipalities, will be referred to the federal agency.

Mr. Wrye: If the minister is referring to the Canada home renovation plan, he will be aware that it provides only 30 per cent and people on welfare cannot afford to find the rest of the money. Since apparently the minister has not done any checking with the municipalities, perhaps he is unaware of what large and small municipalities all over the province are telling us about cancellation of the program.

The town of Penetanguishene—and I am quoting from letters—says, "This is an old town and we are concerned that the province may not reinstitute the OHRP and it would certainly be detrimental in the long run." The town of Goderich says, "Fifty jobs funded by OHRP over the past three years certainly contributed to the wellbeing of local contractors, whether they hired new staff or were able to maintain present staff levels in slow economic times."

My colleague the member for St. Catharines (Mr. Bradley) is well aware that there are 81 applications outstanding in the town of St. Catharines.

The town of Welland says, "The program is very worth while and without adequate funding much of the existing housing, which is below minimum standards, will not be upgraded. But it is imperative that it be reintroduced."

Mr. Speaker: Question, please.

Mr. Wrye: In the town of North Bay, the cancellation of this program will have a substantial effect on the ability of that town to bring its housing up to standards. Even the little township of Elderslie says, "We have approximately 12 names on our waiting list at this time and, working through a repayment of moneys, we could only fund two applications a year." So 10 more people will have to be told they are out of luck.

Given that demonstrated need and given the ability of the program to create jobs, rehabilitate older homes and save the province money by reducing the need for the government to build new low-income housing, will the minister make a commitment to review the cancellation of the program once again and see whether we cannot get this program, which is so popular with municipalities and the low-income people who have benefited from it, back on track?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I said at the time that we would continue to review the program. Let me do an analysis of the remarks made by the member first on the number of applications that are outstanding in the various municipalities throughout Ontario. If one looks at the applications that have been outstanding each and every year the program has been under operation—obviously we never funded the program, nor was it even within our expectations to fund the program, to the full extent of maximum applications or 100 per cent of the applications each year; very clearly that was not our expectation.

The member will recall the program was 100 per cent provincially funded. Most municipalities have operated very effectively and efficiently under the program. They have lent some of the money and have written some of it off. They had that option. They were able to charge interest rates on some of the moneys they lent and now have developed, to some degree, a revolving account. The member can shake his head. The whole funding was by the province and the basis of it was laid down very carefully and clearly as to how it would function.

The member made one statement that is not applicable. He indicated a person on welfare was eligible. If he goes back and checks the terms of reference, he will see there had to be the ability to repay some portion of the loan. If the member checks on that, he will find there were none, to the best of my knowledge. I cannot say everyone operated 100 per cent by the rules. Obviously, as the member knows, some municipalities did a little configuration of their own.

We continue to review all our programs. They do have a true application. This is not to be the exception.

FRENCH-LANGUAGE SERVICES

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Education with respect to the French school situation in Iroquois Falls. I was there nine days ago and want to share with her the sense of frustration people there feel.

Is the minister aware that last year there were repeated requests by the French-language advisory committee for the creation of a French-language entity and that those requests led to a survey paid for by the board of education and carried out by the Ontario Institute of Studies in Education, which is certainly a reputable body? That study, which surveyed all the francophone ratepayers in the area served by the secondary school, showed that 58 per cent of the parents wanted to have the French-language entity.

In view of the minister's commitments to this French-language entity and her commitment in March to a guarantee of the right to French-language education, is 58 per cent support not sufficient for the ministry to go to Iroquois Falls and find a way to create the entity?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that there has been some concern expressed about this; we have looked at that. All of this is being taken into consideration in our activities related to the solution of the problem in that area.

Mr. Cassidy: When I was in Iroquois Falls, I also met with a group of parents who were opposed to the creation of the entity. Their prime concern was the understanding they had that their children would be forced to take all their education in French if an entity were created and their children were in the French-language entity. These were Franco-Ontarians.

Will the minister give this House and those parents reassurance that if the entity is created and their children wish to take a certain number of courses in English while they are part of the entity, that will be their option and that should not be an obstacle to the creation of a French-language entity at the school in Iroquois Falls?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I am sorry; I was interrupted during the midst of the question expounded by the member for Ottawa East—

Mr. Cassidy: Ottawa Centre.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Ottawa Centre. Pardon me. Forgive me.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: One and the same.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: The Tuesday and Friday member is the member for Ottawa East (Mr. Roy). Right? Could the member repeat the latter part of his question?

Mr. Speaker: Briefly, please.

Mr. Cassidy: Given the concern of the French-speaking parents who have opposed the entity because they believe the creation of it in Iroquois Falls would compel their children to take courses in French only and they would not be able to take enough courses in English to become bilingual, will the minister reassure the parents who are blocking the entity that it would not require that all courses be taken in French but that if pupils desire, they would have the option of taking a substantial number of courses in English?

3 p.m.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: The member does not really understand the establishment of the entity. When a francophone entity is established, it is one in which the instruction is carried out in the French language. That is indeed a French-language school. If it is in a building with an anglophone entity, then obviously the students must make a choice as to whether they will attend the one or the other.

In Iroquois Falls at the present time, in a bilingual or mixed-language program, there is an opportunity to study to a certain degree in the French language and the remainder in the English language.

It is because of the concern of those parents who have added their names to a very lengthy petition—and as I perceive the list almost all of them are francophone—that we have to look at the problem from both aspects that have been developed in attempting to find a response in Iroquois Falls.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, does it not concern the minister that this whole business of using numbers for the identification of people who want to attend the entity is nothing more than a popularity contest and that the provision of services for a minority should be done on that basis? In Smooth Rock Falls, which is not far from Iroquois Falls, 32 anglophone students were granted an English-language entity some time in the past, yet in Iroquois Falls something like 300 francophone students are being denied the same privilege. That is 10 times more students. This whole business of using fractions, percentages and so forth as a measure is really a popularity contest. It is an unfair way to deal with minorities.

Mr. Speaker: That was no question.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, the use of figures, percentages, etc., has not been a directive of the Ministry of Education. It has not been a point which the Ministry of Education has proposed as a way—

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The member did not ask a question but rather made a statement.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege: The minister's information directly contradicts information I have received from two senior officials of her ministry with respect to—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The honourable member will please resume his seat.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege: I did ask the minister a question. Does she not agree this is an unfair method? I did ask that so there was a question in there, Mr. Speaker, if you will verify it from Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Yes, but then you went on.

Mr. Boudria: But I did ask a question.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the minister could respond with "yes" or "no?" Does she think it is unfair?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I simply said that we have never used that basis. That is not a directive of the Ministry of Education.

PUBLIC LIBRARIES IN ONTARIO

Mr. G. I. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Citizenship and Culture. The ministry has spent a long time studying the public library system in Ontario with an eye to making changes in the Public Libraries Act. The outcome to date has been the green paper, A Foundation for the Future. Will the minister permit the library community to comment on the draft legislation before the bill receives final reading?

Hon. Mr. McCaffrey: Mr. Speaker, in all likelihood, the answer to that question will be yes. We are now receiving responses to the consultation paper and I think we have received about 200. I would have no hesitation in doing that. There are some proprieties we would want to look at collectively.

I do not think we can send out a draft bill but if we can, we will. However, if we cannot send out a draft bill, we will make certain the explanatory notes that would accompany a bill are circulated. We will do everything we can within the proper procedures of the House to make sure the last step in the consultative process is a full step.

Mr. G. I. Miller: How soon will it be dealt with? If the minister is not going to send out the draft bill could it be dealt with at the committee level?

Hon. Mr. McCaffrey: Dealing with it at the committee level would be an option but I think another two and one half weeks or so would be required before all of the responses, many of which are still coming in, are properly collated and we are in a position to deal with them. We should have the draft legislation in place by mid to late summer; I think that is as close as my guess could be. I see no difficulty in our achieving that objective. Certainly by the fall we would want to table the proposed legislative changes.

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Speaker, there is considerable division within the library community about the matter and I believe in the consultation paper there is some ignoring of the previous review that was conducted by—I have forgotten the chap's name, but it was the librarian from Scarborough. Because of that, could the minister give us the assurance that, if the legislation were tabled in the fall, he would leave it on the order paper for the fall and then proceed with it in a subsequent session of the Legislature rather than during that session?

Hon. Mr. McCaffrey: Mr. Speaker, that is certainly an option. I think what all of us would have to look at is whether we are just delaying a series of changes that are inevitable. I think it is the balance between a full and thorough hearing, particularly after the Bassnett study and the consultation paper. I would have no difficulty in doing that but I think the member's opening statement is a particularly operative statement. The library community is split on a number of things, including how much longer we are going to consult on this matter before we get on with the changes. That is a legitimate point of many of the people in the community.

I do not want to rush ahead after all this time. If we could have the proposed changes in place by late summer in the form of explanatory notes or a draft bill, have that circulated and get some response, we could table it and get on with it. If we cannot meet that objective of tabling and circulating it, to deal with it at another session is certainly still an option. It would not be my first choice, however.

EMPLOYEE HEALTH AND SAFETY

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour regarding Canadian General Electric and the 25 women who have cancer or tumours. Is the minister aware of a statement made by the company last week? It said, "An official government investigation into the CGE Dufferin Street lamps plant has confirmed the company's position that there are no known cancer causing substances in the coiling area of that plant."

The second part said, "The ministry reported to the company and the union that no recognized cancer causing substance had been found in the coiling process and advised that no further literature or laboratory investigation was warranted pending the results of the study."

Does the minister agree with the company that methylene chloride is not a mild carcinogen and is being used there? Would the minister also indicate if the workers can be assured that none of the processes used there might be what is causing a high incidence of cancer among those women?

Hon. Mr. Ramsay: Mr. Speaker, nothing has changed from earlier responses to questions from the member in respect to the circumstances at Canadian General Electric, neither in my mind nor as far as I am concerned within the ministry. We still feel the same way we did previously. We are still moving forward on a study that is being done by McMaster University and we are prepared to participate and support that to the fullest.

Mr. Martel: Is the minister telling me this statement by the company is erroneous? Secondly and most important, because I misunderstood his answer as to the study he talks about at McMaster, is it not a fact that the epidemiological study has not yet started? Is the minister aware that last week the company told the union that, if it wanted that study to be funded by it, it should "get Martel to shut his mouth"?

Hon. Mr. Ramsay: I am not aware of the statements the member for Sudbury East has attributed to the company.

ACID RAIN

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of the Environment, if I can get his attention.

Is the minister satisfied with the fact that Ontario Hydro is not putting scrubbers in the plant at Atikokan? Is his ministry satisfied that this will not add to the acid rain problem in the area? Has his ministry had a look at that?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, the answers are yes and yes.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

MINISTRY OF COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Miss Stephenson moved, seconded by Hon. Mr. Welch, first reading of Bill 42, An Act to amend the Ministry of Colleges and Universities Act.

Motion agreed to.

INCOME TAX AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Ashe moved, seconded by Hon. Mr. Leluk, first reading of Bill 43, An Act to amend the Income Tax Act.

3:38 p.m.

The House divided on Hon. Mr. Ashe's motion, which was agreed to on the following vote:

Ayes 61; nays 34.

3:40 p.m.

Hon. Mr. Ashe: Mr. Speaker, this bill contains two amendments arising out of the Treasurer's (Mr. F. S. Miller) excellent budget of May 10, 1983.

First, the bill introduces a temporary income tax surcharge for the years 1983 and 1984, at 2.5 per cent and five per cent respectively, on the basic Ontario tax. The surcharge will apply only to taxpayers with taxable income in excess of the threshold established for the application of the Ontario tax reduction program. Therefore, for 1983 the surcharge will not apply to taxpayers with taxable income less than $2,179.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Ashe: That's right. It's all right here.

The second amendment sets the tax rate for 1983 at 48 per cent of the basic federal tax. This is the same rate as for the 1982 taxation year. Up until now the rate had to be legislated every year, even when there was no change from the previous year. As a tax simplification measure the bill now provides that the 48 per cent rate will remain in effect for 1983 and subsequent years until a rate change is required.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS IN ORDERS AND NOTICES

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I would like to table the answers to questions 1 to 7, 10 to 14, 18 to 28, 30 to 34, 184, 186 and 192 and the interim answers to questions 8, 9, 15 to 17, 29, 35 to 183, 185, 187 to 191 and 193 to 195, all of these standing on the notice paper [see Hansard for Friday, May 20, 1983].

Mr. Foulds: The minister said they were going to answer this at the end of November, and I had an interim answer last session.

Hon. Mr. Wells: The member has another interim answer.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

Resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment to the motion that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government.

Mr. Mackenzie: Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a few remarks in the budget debate. First, it is pretty hard to get excited when you get a budget such as we had presented in this House the other day and, second, to feel that there is much hope for young people and workers in Ontario. One of the first things I had to ask myself was, is the government living in a real world or has it totally lost touch with reality? Because surely there are two issues that are bothering people today. One of them is jobs; and I do not know where some of the members across the way are these days, but the other one is very much a case of security. Workers simply want to know what kind of security there is, what kind of future they possibly have in this great province of ours.

I took a look at the figures on page 40 of the budget and I noted that in 1981 employment was listed as 4.186 million, in 1982 it was listed as 4.078 million and, in the government's own figures, in 1983 we are to end up with 4.041 million. We have heard a lot about all the jobs this government has been creating, but unless I am missing the bottom line this simply says to me that we are going to have 37,000 fewer people working in Ontario at the end of 1983 than we had at the end of 1982. I think that is nothing short of dishonest. I think the entire presentation of the budget was an exercise in deception, and I do not know any other way to put it.

I take a look at the deficit they are talking about. First, on page 57 of the budget, I see the estimated revenues for 1983-84 are $22.015 billion. Then, in the expenditures on page 59, I see a neat little bit of sleight-of-hand—the old pea-under-the-pod routine, I guess—where we actually have a $25.010-billion expenditure list. Mind you, you can throw in, as the Treasurer

(Mr. F. S. Miller) neatly did, the $300 million that has the little brackets around, which says he is going to find another $300 million to cut out of the expenditures; but he did not have the guts to tell us from where when he submitted the budget to the House.

If you do not achieve that projected further cut of expenditures in the budget, we actually have a $3-billion deficit. What we were told, of course, in all the rhetoric that went with the budget, was that we would have a $2.7-billion deficit. I do not know why the government and the members of that government cannot be honest to begin with and tell us it is a $3-billion deficit and not a $2.7-billion deficit, because that is exactly what it is.

I will not go into this in great detail, but I can recall some of the criticism from across the way when we projected a deficit last year—I forget the figure now—just as we have done again this year in the proposals we have made. Last year the Tory deficit ended up just about the same size as ours was—the one they made fun of—the difference being that most of our deficit was in specific, long-term job-creation proposals. I do not think the message has ever got through to the members across the way that they are either going to spend the money as a deficit or on unemployment. You only have to look at the amount we are paying in welfare and unemployment insurance benefits and what the municipalities are being stuck with.

Surely there is nothing wrong with outlining a budget with a deficit if most of that deficit is in specific job-creation projects. That will at least put people to work and it may just start cutting some of the deficit. Certainly it would mean we would have fewer people on the unemployment rolls in the province and that people would have just a little bit more pride and security because they would be working. It is almost as if working were some kind of sin, yet nobody will more quickly criticize people who are not employed and not getting out and doing their best to find a job than some of the members across the way. There is something wrong, something perverse in the priorities we have in this country of ours.

3:50 p.m.

The question of security is one that will come home to roost for an awful lot of members in this House. I know it is bothering people. I know it is just about the top concern in society now. We have to be concerned when there are 780,000 people out of work in the province, when there are 230,000 or more women out of work, and when there are some 220,000 young people between the ages of 15 and 24 out of work. We have to start wondering what they see as their future, what they see as their hope. They can only be shoved back into schools, universities or training programs for so long. Many of them do not see much of a possibility, even with the additional training.

Another thing that bothers me is we seem to be putting all our eggs in the one basket with the call that we have to move quickly into the high-tech generation. We do not seem to have a concern about the cybernetics of society today, with automation and robotization. We say it is great and we have to start developing the high-tech sector of our economy. When we see what is happening with traditional industry in our province, we have to wonder.

Once again the members may get sick of hearing it, but an awful lot of our problems lie in our branch-plant economy and the fact that many of the multinationals which have put up branch plants in this country of ours are bigger than governments. They make the decisions and they make them when there is little in the way of legislation or requirement that they have some responsibility to the people of this province.

We see these companies shutting down their branch plants in this country or using the current buzzword of corporate rationalization. We have gone through this many times and I will deal with three or four of them. It does not always succeed, but it is done so the company will be a little healthier and better able to compete in world markets today. The one consideration that is not there is what happens to the workers they dump along the way, the employees who have worked in those plants, in many cases with long seniority.

There is a drastic drop in our traditional industries. With that drop, if we follow the pattern of contract settlements over the last year or two—and I predict it is going to get worse—we find that settlements of less than five and six per cent are the norm. I know of two recently in my own town of 4.8 per cent. Indeed, some people are so scared they will work for almost anything in an area where there is no organization or union to protect the workers.

To my way of thinking, we are seeing a deliberate depression of wage levels in this province. It is made easy with the kind of unemployment we have.

If we are to be successful, and if we are to be the beneficiaries of this drive for high tech in this province, I think the question that has to be asked is what makes us think we will necessarily be the beneficiaries. Almost every country in the free western world and a good deal of the Third World are desperately trying to be the successors in the fight to develop or get this high technology in place. There is no guarantee we will get that many jobs out of it. I do not think anybody argues it is one of the components we have to look at and do what we can to achieve. However, if we do, what will we end up with?

Are we looking at the traditional wages in a better-paying industrial plant that may have been paying anywhere from $8 or $9 to $12, $13, $14 or $15 an hour? That is not a heck of a lot, but with it people could afford to buy a house, a few of the extra consumer goods we try to sell and have some chance of assisting their kids to get through university. I am darn sure most of the people in this House understand some of the costs involved there.

I currently have three children who have not had much success with jobs. I am trying to help finance them through university. I will have four, starting next year. I am better off than most people and I know darn well it has been about as tight a financial year for me as I have ever seen, trying to assist them.

If we are heading for the kind of a society where we have depressed the wages and where we are going to have to argue economy to get new high-tech industry in this province, are we really asking our people to say goodbye to high wages? There is no point in protecting much of the traditional industry that pays good wages at the moment when we want high-tech industry. Are we going to end up with $7 or $8-an-hour jobs? I think that begs the question; this government is not looking at the planning of our priorities.

If we can do all this production and get all these benefits out of a move to high technology in this province, what are we going to do about distribution? Whether we want to face it or not, that is what we have got to look at. I do not think our problem any longer is production. We hope like blazes that some of the slack will be taken up with the service industries and trades, health and others. There is no question that we can now and will increasingly be able to produce just about everything we need, and do it with fewer and fewer people.

The problem then is not production. It is the distribution of the goods. How do we get the goods around? How do we give people the ability to purchase what we produce and the ability to pay some of the bills for their families, whether for education or to buy some of the things they would like to buy, or to be assured of a reasonably secure future once they reach retirement age? We are sure as blazes not doing it by improvements in the basic pension or the Canada pension plan, a route we have long felt we should go in this province.

If we are not doing it in that area, what are we likely to achieve in the area of the few reforms we have talked about in the private pension field? It is not the major component of what people are living on when they finally reach retirement age. We are not doing a job there. Maybe that is not the right road to use for redistribution of income. One thing that is very clear to me is that our major problem is going to be how we distribute the goods we can produce or the dollars that used to be there in wages among the people in our province. How do we distribute them to the 780,000 people who are currently out of work in this province?

We have not given much thought to that. The budget's chief approach seems to be short-term job creation, hoping like blazes we can either get a few more young people working or what seems to me to be more the pattern, establish some make-work projects that might get somebody who has currently run out of benefits back on the labour force for enough weeks to qualify once again for Unemployment Insurance Commission benefits. Quite frankly, that is one hell of a way to run a society and not an awful lot to give people in the way of hope.

I cannot understand why we are not dealing more directly with the corporate rationalization problem we have. I know I have raised this matter before. I intend to keep on raising it as I look at the plants closing in my own town, such as the six most recent ones; Consolidated-Bathurst, Allen Industries, Flavorite Poultry, H. & R. Johnson, PPG Industries' glass division; and Western Star Trucks which just joined the list last week, another small plant closed down. It is going to do a warehousing operation only here in Ontario.

We get the kind of answer we got the other day that I mentioned in this House during the throne speech debate. We asked the president of Consolidated-Bathurst: "Why are you closing down this Hamilton plant that you have just spent $2.8 million in upgrading? Why are you letting 140-odd employees, who have an average of 24, 25 and 26 years seniority, go without even giving them first choice at another job within the company? Why are you putting a third shift on in your other plants, all in the interest of the financial health of your company, and doing nothing, except what you are required to do by law or by contract, for the 140-odd workers who for 25 or 30 years have built up that plant and who happen to have skills and some real feeling for their jobs? What is your responsibility?"

The president of the company lashed back at us and said: "We have met our responsibility. We have done what is required by law and by our contract. Don't you understand that we have the right to move our order book around or our plants around?" That raises serious questions. That one bothered several of the Tories enough that even there we heard comments about their not being the best corporate citizen.

That is, unfortunately, not the exception; it is happening all too often in these situations. The issue very clearly, then, is at what stage the corporate decision to be able to operate their business the way they want, to move their order book around, to move their plants around, to let those 140-odd workers go without any concern, not only for what it does to them but for the additional cost it brings down on the municipality they live in, raises serious questions. Should or should not a corporate rationalization move that is supposed to be to the benefit of that company have as one of its components a discussion with some input from the workers or the community, some feeling on the part of the government that is supposed to set the rules in this province of ours, so that part of the concern in such a move, which will so drastically affect those workers in the community, has got to be what happens to those workers?

If we are going to allow this kind of thing to happen, we should also say that there is a responsibility: some of the cost has got to be to the company that is going to let these people go, going to let that plant shut down, going to affect that community and the workers. I do not think this is asking too much. We certainly got it again in Allen Industries the other day, when their fibre division was being closed down; and we find that right now in the Ford Oakville plant there is more material in from their plant in Virginia than they have ever had, and all of the production is now going to be done in the Virginia plant, so we lose 100 or 105 workers in that particular operation in Hamilton.

The seniority there was not quite as long; most of them had about 12 to 14 years. But they have very little hope of another job, and they did not get any more than the basic requirements that have been negotiated for them. That operation is supposed to benefit the conglomerate that owns Allen Industries. We find further, when we dig into this situation, that they are probably two or three years down the road. They would not even give us, when we had a good, efficient plant there, the benefit of the last two or three years; they are going to be replacing this particular insulation under the hoods and dashes of cars with a brand-new material. But has this government got enough clout to say, "Hey, we have already got a deficit in our auto pact parts trade"?

This government should insist that this company do some of the production here and take care of some of those workers whom they have had working up until now. No way: what we find is that the new plant will be down in Illinois, and when they finally are ready to phase out, they will do the same thing, probably, to the workers down in Virginia that they have done to the workers in Hamilton. They are the last concern.

As a matter of fact, I think what upset me most at the meeting we had in the office of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Ramsay) with the top officials of Consolidated-Bathurst was the argument they advanced. When we went after them to give some priority to the workers they were letting go in their other plants in Ontario or at least—inasmuch as they sprang this on us, and apparently even the ministry did not know it at the time, the fact that they had really already sold the plant so that the meeting was an exercise in futility to begin with—to consider talking to Reid-Dominion, the next-door firm that was buying their plant, on behalf of the workers, because the plant would be employing 60 or 70 people and maybe some of these skilled workers could be taken by this new plant, they simply told us they would not appreciate anybody telling them where to get their work force, that their workers were a market commodity and the new firm would go on the market. Sure, they might hire some; they knew of one or two who already had been hired; but they were not going to put any extra effort out, the workers were a market commodity.

I say we have sunk a long way in this tremendous province of ours when our workers become strictly a market commodity. I guess my upset is that I see nothing in this budget. I see 37,000; that is all the brand-new new youth jobs there are in that budget. All of the other programs that are listed there were already on stream. When I see that in fact, with all of the talk about what we are doing in this budget, we are going to end up with 37,000 fewer people working at the end of 1983 than we had at the end of last year, when I see that the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) is trying to get away with telling us we are going to have only a $2.7-billion deficit when it is $3 billion, I call it a dishonest exercise in deception.

When I see that it does not really tackle the problem of jobs and security, then I recognize that this particular government really has no answers.

It is more than just the branch plants. I used the six or seven names in my own town, but this is happening across Ontario. It is the way labour—this market commodity, as the president of Consolidated-Bathurst calls it—is viewed today.

I think of the meeting we had last week with 45 workers—all Portuguese women who had worked at the Eaton Centre. As a matter of fact, rather than 45 women, that meeting turned out to be a meeting of 90-some odd. It drew not only every single woman who worked in that centre but from a number of other places as well, including several of the staff from our own building here.

We found the same thing happened to them as has happened in a number of government ministries. It has happened in nursing homes and in a number of other places. They had negotiated a contract and had been under tremendous pressure in negotiations to take as little as possible. They had ended with a wage range of from $4.85 to $5.85 an hour. Their own union admitted they had to take a substandard contract not because they liked it but because of the threat they might lose their jobs.

It has been two months since they signed the contract. Now they find the contract has been sold to another cleaning firm. That firm will not take any of the women. If it does, the women will start at an even lower rate. Successor rights do not exist in a situation like that when a contract is sold out. I think it bothered the Minister of Labour and he had a meeting with them subsequently.

My colleague the member for Scarborough West (Mr. R. F. Johnston) raised an instance of the same thing happening in one of the nursing homes in the west end of the city of Toronto. Eight women were drawing a wage of between $6 and $8.05 an hour. That was the top rate in that nursing home. Once again, after they negotiated their last contract, the company said: "Hey, that is too rich for us." So it sold the contract to another outfit.

The other outfit was not going to offer any of them jobs at first, although they could have used some of them. Those women had up to 14 years in that nursing home. The company said it would take them on if they wanted to work for $4.50 an hour. Some of them went to work for that company because they were desperate for jobs. But of the eight women who sat in the gallery here the other day when my colleague raised the matter, one of them got 10 days of work, one got a week and another got three days. They also happened to be the key people in the union who had negotiated the last contract.

Three of them got a minimum amount of work in the two months since this happened. They came to us in frustration and said: "We know there is not much you can do to get our jobs back. We think what is going on is lousy so will you at least raise this matter in the House?" That is why we raised it.

I did not dig up the comments, which were pretty light, from the other side of the House, although I should have. I am pretty sure the government was not aware the eight women were sitting in the gallery. The eight had gone through a hell of a rough time and even at $4.50 an hour were not going to be taken on by the outfit that had bought out the contract.

So in some ways they were in the same position as the Portuguese cleaning women at the Eaton Centre. They have nothing, and they had settled for only $4.85 to $5.85 an hour. These women, because they had shown some gumption and fight, were not even getting back in at $4.50 an hour where they had been making from $6 to $8.05 an hour. That was the top rate in that nursing home.

This is happening to workers right across Ontario. The government can do what it likes about the market, the problems we are in, but it cannot escape some of the responsibility for what is happening. It must share the responsibility when it brings in the kinds of bills it does, such as the restraint bill. When it brings in the kind of budget we had presented in this House—it was lousy in terms of jobs for people—then you, Mr. Speaker, and your colleagues are directly responsible for some of those things that are happening to workers in Ontario. It is time we realized this is not the way out of the dilemma we are in. It is not going to give people very much hope.

Considering some of the disputes we are having I might take a few excerpts out of that 69-page decision of the Ontario Labour Relations Board, depending on how long I want to talk today. I have been around the labour movement for a long time. I do not think I have ever seen as devastating an indictment as that board decision.

4:10 p.m.

It really makes one wonder when one sees workers treated the way they have been treated. I am talking now about the Automotive Hardware Ltd. strike that went on for six and a half months, from 1981 to 1982. We will go from that to a few of the situations we have today.

One sees the workers undermined. One sees an undercover person hired by the company on recommendation of Securicor, after the employer decided to bring them in several weeks prior to the strike. One sees his reports and his specific instructions to keep away from certain people but to get close to the local union president. He is seen being criticized because he got away from them. He got a little too active with a couple of the dissident groups he had worked on himself within that local situation, and was told to go back and get next to the president so they would know exactly what was going on.

One sees him counselling theft on two occasions, something even he did not deny when it was finally before the board, by the president of the local. The president was smart enough not to take him up on it, although for a while he thought he was a good, loyal, hard-working and responsible member of the local union in a tough strike situation. In his reports a number of weeks later he says, "Hey, we did not succeed in getting him to steal, but I know now how we can nail the president of the local." That is the exact expression he used and submitted to Securicor and to the company.

One sees that kind of activity and sees that kind of person leading the way and throwing eggs, tomatoes and rocks. One sees him suggesting they grease the wheels of the tracks, or tear up the tracks going into the plant. One sees him moving around with a petition, the wording of which he got changed by the company itself, to try to get the union decertified while this dispute was going on.

One sees all of these kinds of rotten, stinking activities and knows the Metro Toronto Police and the Ontario Provincial Police were aware of the agent provocateur and what was going on in that plant. We have been raising it for a year and a half or two years with the Minister of Labour and this government. One wonders at the further undermining of the rights—not so much the rights as the hopes, aspirations, or faith in the system on the part of working people in Ontario.

They are the ones the government wants to call on for its restraint programs, for its minimum wage make-work programs, for its no-concrete-action in terms of our loss of branch plants or corporate rationalization.

Sooner or later a majority of the people, I do not know when it will come but they are going to get so bloody wise to the government we are going to have real trouble in this province, in this country of ours. Somebody over there better start thinking in terms of ordinary people.

Not only is that what happened, it brought about this decision. I doubt they will but I wish every member of this House, and in particular every Tory and Liberal member, would read this 69-page decision to give them some feeling or some idea of what was going on in that situation.

One moves from there to what is being done to the women cleaners in the Eaton Centre, to what is being done to some of them in the nursing homes and to what is currently going on in the Central Precision Ltd. strike, where it is also a group of new Canadians; once again, a lot though not all of them, are Portuguese workers. And what do we have in that situation?

I am not going to go through the "up yours," the arm signals and the deliberate provocation that has been introduced by the Securicor people in that particular strike, or the fact that one of their proud boasts to the workers on the picket line is: "Keep it up as long as you want. We do not even care if you scratch the odd side of a car because it is all on our bill. The longer you are out on strike, the longer we are going to make $20,000 per week."

The members may recall when we raised in this House that the evidence before the Ontario Labour Relations Board was that in the Canada Cement strike their bill was over $600,000. I think it was $697,000 this firm collected. There is big money in this kind of dirty activity.

The workers wonder why there is this deliberate provocation on the part of the security outfit. They wonder why everything they do is photographed with a movie camera. They wonder why the deliberate provocation takes place on the picket line. One or two of them do get caught kicking the side of a car or something.

Their jobs are at stake. Some of the charges are not legitimate but some are; those in the mischief field—I have never denied that in this House—things done under severe provocation. I wonder why this security firm is able to go down to a local justice of the peace and swear out an arrest warrant when that same justice would not take it from the union.

Then—not immediately, in one case over two weeks later—suddenly the local police force arrives on the picket line and starts arresting the workers on that line. On April 6, four of them, including the local union president, were arrested. The police conveniently arrived exactly at the time when the vans were there to take the strikebreakers through the line. In the course of some 27 charges, they finally accepted one from the union over a couple of workers who were hit by one of the vans going through the line too fast and whom we had to take down to the hospital. They have now arrested 27 of the workers and forbidden them to appear within so many hundred feet of that picket line. That is almost the entire leadership in that plant.

I do not know how they can get more deliberate in their provocation, their undermining of the rights the Ontario Labour Relations Act says all workers have to organize and to conduct free collective bargaining. There should be a lesson that Tories, of all people, should learn. In a Communist system—Roy Reuther taught me this in the year and a half I had the privilege of working on his staff before he died; Roy and Walter Reuther were involved, but I worked directly for Roy—the first people who are undermined or who disappear in a totalitarian system are the workers and their organizations. Communists are very good at that. Conservatives are not very far behind them in undermining workers and their organizations.

The member can do a little bit of smiling up there—

Mr. Kells: That is allowed.

Mr. Mackenzie: He should read that and then tell me how he defends what has gone on in this province.

So we now have a picket line that has pretty well been decimated in a legal strike situation. They went through this before, 11 years ago, with Canadian Driver Pool and Richard Grange, about as rotten an outfit as we had in the business at that time. I wonder why this is allowed? If nothing else gets through to the Tory members, surely when somebody goes there and meets with them or meets with some of the families, as I have done, they crowd around and ask: "How can this happen here? Why, when we have a legal strike situation, have we got to take on not only the company but also Securicor, the security outfit, and the police?"

They want desperately to believe and trust in the institutions we have, but they are losing faith rapidly. Joe Pierro was phoned and told he was the 27th; they had a warrant for him. He was not picked up in the picket line. When he came down to the station at the request of the local union president the first thing they did—and it was only a mischief charge—was to slap handcuffs on him. We heard that from some of the family. Where is the fairness? How can they do it?

I have had them say to me on that line: "Mr. Mackenzie, after we have had our morning confrontation, why is it that a couple of hours later those cars that have been whirling the cameras on the picket line when there was some trouble—we had the volatile situation the board talks about, and a strike is always dangerous enough without the deliberate provocations that are made by a firm like Securicor—shoot out of the lot, go across the street and park beside the police car? They roll down the windows and talk and smoke for an hour or two. Whose side are they on? How can we expect some justice in this system?"

I think there is something here a lot of members of this House should be worried about. There is enough cynicism about politicians generally as it is. I guess all of us to some extent are responsible for some of the things we do or try to do or do not do. I am perfectly willing to take my share of the blame in that area. But when we let either bad law, misuse of the law or refusal to uphold the law begin to destroy people's faith in the system—the faith of workers and new Canadians in particular—when we start letting that happen, we are on a slippery slope. We had better start worrying about it. It worries me, and it is an honest and sincere worry.

I do not like what is happening. It scares the literal hell out of me. I do not know why it is so hard to get through to people that maybe some of the things they are doing require a second look.

4:20 p.m.

I noted with interest that Douglas Fraser is resigning at the convention they are having down in Dallas right now. Unlike some, knowing the internal United Automobile Workers politics I come out of, I would have voted for Leonard Woodcock for the first term, but a person I have a lot of respect for, Walter Reuther, really thought Douglas Fraser was probably his immediate replacement. Douglas Fraser is resigning. It is unfortunate for the international union, the United Automobile Workers. I think the story in this morning's Globe and Mail underlines to some extent the very concerns I have been raising in my few remarks in the House today.

Some of his comments follow. I raise them because they tie into the point I want to make in terms of whether we have to decide to protect some of the basic industry in this province of ours. The Globe's story says: "The very life of the North American auto industry is threatened by the tide of Japanese imports. An equal threat to employment of US and Canadian auto workers is posed by production outside Canada and the United States of components for vehicles assembled in North America."

"In his keynote speech to the 2,800 delegates, Mr. Fraser said that he hoped that the union's collective bargaining convention next March will focus on bringing more democracy into labour relations in the United States and Canada, because unions can no longer afford merely to protest against company decisions."

"Workers must have a greater voice in their own destiny, said Mr. Fraser, who is a member of the board of directors of Chrysler Corp. Mr. Fraser noted that more than 40 per cent of UAW members in Canadian independent parts plants have been laid off."

He noted also, talking about recovery, "Although car sales in the United States increased by 7.2 per cent in the first four months of this year over the same period last year, the current rate, if carried to the end of the year, would still leave US sales 2.5 million behind 1978." He said that in Canada, where the sales have been up 14.5 per cent in the past few months, they are still 41 per cent below 1979.

I think the key point here is: "Mr. Fraser said more than ever before the union's priorities, such as local content regulations, require action in Washington and Ottawa. By 1984, the North American car makers plan to import two million engines and transmissions for North American cars, he said. The union is campaigning for legislation in both countries to require a specified percentage of Canadian and US content in imported cars."

He also said, and this is interesting, that the union's lobbying in the United States House of Representatives had resulted in its adopting domestic content legislation. We all should have a little bit of warning on this. Once again we are following the pack. When we talk about Ontario, we never lead in Ontario, we are following the pack. They moved to that extent. Unfortunately, before the Senate could deal with it, it died because of the election. They hope to reintroduce it. They had moved so far as actually to get that through the House of Representatives.

Mr. Fraser went on to say that we cannot sacrifice "auto workers' jobs on the altar of free trade. 'The very foundations of metalworking industries are now threatened as the result of the not-so-benign neglect by conservative leaders.'"

There is more to the story and it is one well worth reading. It underlines one of the points we have made. We are not so naïve as to think the answer is in here. It is the simplified response to what we say in this House that annoys me as much as anything. We are not so blind as to think we do not have to trade and do not have to sell.

We have let ourselves get sucked into believing that it is only because we can sell our raw materials in this great country of ours to the extent that we do that we are really keeping our economy as healthy as it is. We cannot get sucked into thinking we have to go the total free trade route. We cannot get sucked into thinking we can do a total protection job. It is pretty obvious in this country of ours that we have to be selective. We have to take a look at where the jobs are. That has never been the first consideration. It has been what benefits the company, the trickle-down theory that is all the way through this budget.

For once we have to start taking a look at where the jobs are and at the industries in which we have the expertise. Have we done the production in the past? Do we still have the production capability?

I do not know better examples—I suppose I should use a machinery or parts example—but, as I have done a number of times, I will fall back on our food industry and the fact that it was only about 30 years ago in Ontario that we canned about 70 per cent of all the peaches and tomatoes we ate. Today we are down to less than 30 per cent. We might have got those a penny or two cheaper at the time we allowed them to sell out the industry. Once we have lost the productive capacity, we can no longer set the prices and we are probably paying through the nose for it now.

When that started, the big boost was Del Monte's buy-out of Canadian Cannerys, and they shut down about 32 of the 37 canning plants in Ontario over a very few years. We are now importing something when even Liberal and Tory agriculture ministers say we could can 100 per cent of our needs. We cannot supply it, because of our climate, other than during our limited fresh market season, but we sure could can everything we need. Instead, we are importing 70 per cent of it.

If we take that into machinery and into the refining of the raw materials, which we do not do, into almost anything in the industrial sector, we will find the priority of this government or of the federal government is not whether we can do it and do it well, but whether the company, the conglomerate, big or small, can do it better and cheaper through free enterprise and private enterprise means. In other words, they make the decisions.

We have to look after our order books and be able to move our plants, the president of Consolidated-Bathurst told us. That does not take into consideration what we are doing to the workers in that operation. It seems to me we have to be selective. We have to take a look at a little self-sufficiency in some of the industrial areas where we do have the ability to compete and do well.

If some assistance is needed, perhaps those are the areas we should be looking at. Maybe we should be looking at some protection in those areas. By being selective, perhaps we can also be sure we do not get into something where we know we simply cannot compete.

I have a suspicion the argument that the rest of the world will not buy our products if we do not buy all their manufactured goods is not necessarily totally true, because our products—our raw materials, power, food, minerals, wood—are things that are needed around the world. It seems to me we have not been good managers, good organizers or good in terms of getting our share; nor have we been best at working out a fair and good business deal in our country.

I repeat, the one thing we have never brought into the equation is the workers. Sooner or later, we have to decide that some of the future in this province is going to be in deciding that our priority is seeing that people have work, or we had better move like hell in deciding how we will be able to redistribute some of the earnings and some of the productive capacity of our plants, because that is our problem.

I see a budget that does not deal with that kind of situation and a government that is not taking a look at something like content legislation. I do not know whether it is correct to say he laughed at us, but I still recall some of the arguments we had across the floor on that issue from the member for St. Andrew-St Patrick (Mr. Grossman) when he was the minister, and which we still get from the present Minister of Industry and Trade (Mr. Walker).

One would think we were raising something that would destroy the whole system when we were talking about content legislation. How else are we going to protect a foot in the door, never mind a window on the industry, if we do not decide we are going to go the route of content legislation?

In allowing branch plants to come in to supply a Canadian market, we must set down some rules so that for as long as they are here they have an obligation to the workers they hire, an obligation beyond the time they are here if they arbitrarily decide to close down a plant because they can do it cheaper in the United States, Brazil, Europe or some other country.

4:30 p.m.

They also have an obligation to do research and development. All of us in the House, New Democrats, Liberals and Tories, know that we are almost at the bottom of the western industrial world when it comes to the percentage that is spent on research and development, which is where spinoff jobs come from. There are reasons for that too. Such a large percentage of the industry in our branch plant economy now is foreign-controlled that the foreign owners make the decisions. The plants are here in many cases to supply a narrow Canadian market, and they do not do the research and development, nor are they required to.

When we also run into, as we did in the plant shutdown committee—and we have raised this time and again, but it does not seem to get through to people—some companies that have branch plants operating here, once again to supply a Canadian market, but they are even forbidden to compete on the export markets of the world, we understand the decisions that are being made and we realize that maybe those branch plants were not worth the price of getting them. Certainly the decisions that are being made are not conducive to any guarantees of employment for Canadian workers.

We simply must have legislation that sets some rules: "You are going to have a responsibility to the workers involved. You are going to do some research and development in this country. You are going to let your branch plants compete on world markets so that we have some chance of catching some of the spinoff benefits that are in the content legislation and of getting probably a better tax structure than we have at this time."

Our laws are going to have to recognize at least fundamental rights of workers, which are being undermined, and that there is some modicum of responsibility for workers such as the 45 women at the Eaton Centre who, two months after they had signed a new contract, were told arbitrarily that they were no longer wanted.

Those are not radical, wild or unworthy suggestions. They are suggestions that put the wants, aspirations and needs of our people a little higher up the ladder than they seem to be today in Ontario and in this country of ours. There is a desperate need to turn some of our priorities around. There is a desperate need to reach out to the people and say, "One of the things has got to be an effort to provide some security that does not exist today." We have to respond to that desperate desire for security.

Many little things have bothered the heck out of me in recent days. One of them is the argument I had back and forth with the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Elgie) and the Minister of Labour (Mr. Ramsay) over pensions. It has taken us 10 or 15 years to establish that negotiated pension plans are deferred wages. As a matter of fact, I thought that even the Tories had finally accepted that argument.

Then we had the recent example in Toronto where a small firm went belly up and ended up having a substantial surplus in its pension fund. They had $1.5 million in it, and about $1,020,000 would have funded the workers who were there. But what happened? That principle of deferred wages and workers' rights did not mean a thing in this plant. The legislation does not cover it, we find. The company that went belly up will not get it—some of its creditors will, some of the banks and trust companies—but the $500,000 surplus in that fund went right into the debts of that company.

Even little things we thought we had won in this province are not secure today.

This budget does not deal with any of the questions I have raised. It does not deal with some of the suggestions we have made and others will make.

I do not know of any single way in which the government could provide additional jobs more quickly and do more for our economy than through housing. Last year this budget said we were trying to create 38,000 jobs in the housing field, but what is in the budget this year? All of 12,000. By golly, what are we doing? That is one area that everybody admits has the quickest payout. If the money had been put into that, those people would be working; they would come off the unemployment rolls and pay taxes and we would not have the kind of increasing deficit situation we have in the province.

Surely to goodness we could take a look at sufficiency, content legislation, protecting some of our existing industries, capital works that have some meaning, housing, and probably more assistance to the various lower-income people in our province, which is also not in this budget.

I do not know many people who are on mother's allowance, the guaranteed annual income system or a pension with nothing to go with it, who do not spend just about every cent they get. There are a few who are better off, but anything they get they will use to purchase things. At least that has the potential to help our economy. But we are giving them nothing to meet the increased costs they are facing.

Almost everything we are doing in this budget does not make a heck of a lot of sense but, most of all, it does not meet or try to meet the needs of the people of this province. There is no way I can have any confidence in it. There is no way I can have any confidence in a government that brought this kind of document into this House. There is no way I see it doing a heck of a lot to restore a little trust, faith and hope in the citizens of this province.

I guess it is hopeless, but I really hope the members of the government party will take a look at the road they are taking us down; they may have the numbers now, but I am not sure those will stay with them when the people finally realize how thoroughly they are being taken in this budget.

Mr. Kells: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity—

Mr. Di Santo: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order: I see we have only one minister sitting on the government benches and only 6.7 per cent of the members of the Conservative caucus. We do not have a quorum in the House. We would like to have an audience.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Cousens): Are you asking for a quorum call?

Mr. Di Santo: Yes.

The Acting Speaker: Is there a quorum?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, may I—

The Acting Speaker: It is not a point of order about whether a minister is on duty or not.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: This is not about that.

The Acting Speaker: Before we take the count.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I was here on Friday morning, at which time there were two members of the New Democratic Party and two members of the Liberal Party present in the House for the entire budget debate.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you. That initial part of his point of order—he got distracted. Is there a quorum?

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker ordered the bells to be rung.

4:42 p.m.

Mr. Kells: Mr. Speaker, I thank the member for Downsview (Mr. Di Santo) for attracting a crowd.

I welcome the opportunity to participate in this debate on the budgetary policy of the government and the policies and programs contained in the 1983 budget of Ontario.

Two other provinces, Quebec and New Brunswick, brought down budgets at about the same time as Ontario, Quebec on the same day and New Brunswick on May 6. I believe a comparative survey of the budgetary measures introduced by those provinces would help us put Ontario's budget and the budgetary policies of this government into perspective.

In its May 6 budget, New Brunswick increased its sales tax from eight per cent to 10 per cent. At the same time the province extended its retail sales tax base to include labour done on personal property. The Quebec budget leaves that province's retail sales tax rate at nine per cent. Last year that government increased its retail sales tax rate from eight to nine per cent, supposedly for a temporary 10-month period. Now apparently it has found it cannot afford to forgo the revenue it would lose through a one per cent reduction in the retail sales tax rate. In Ontario our sales tax rate remains at seven per cent.

The expansion of the retail sales tax effected by the 1982 budget has not had the disastrous impact on our economy that was predicted by some parties. Events have proven correct the conclusion of the Treasurer that in a very sensitive economic environment the expansion of the sales tax base presented the best method of raising revenues needed to support our social programs.

Because of this government's record of sound financial management, we have been able to use the retail sales tax system as a stimulative instrument without endangering either delivery of services or our financial stability. Between the fiscal years 1975-76 and 1981-82, we have used the sales tax system to provide incentives to the automobile industry, the hospitality industry, the tourist industry and the home appliance industry, to name a few. The total cost of these measures to the province has been pretty close to $1.7 billion.

In the 1983 budget our government indicates it will again use the sales tax to support specific sectors of our economy. The exemption on sales of production machinery and equipment has been expanded and a 90-day tax holiday has been granted on purchases of new household furniture and appliances. Total cost of these two programs is estimated at $150 million. This brings the grand total for this type of program to almost $1.8 billion. That is a lot of stimulation and a lot of jobs created and protected.

Let us now turn our attention to another major provincial revenue source—the gasoline and motor fuel tax—and see how the three provinces compare.

In its May 6 budget New Brunswick increased its gasoline tax from 16 to 20 per cent of the pump price, raising the price of a litre of regular leaded gas by 1.6 cents. The Quebec budget left the gas tax unchanged; I call members' attention to the fact that it remains at a full 40 per cent of the retail price. In the last survey available to me, this tax amounted to 15.2 per cents per litre of regular leaded gas, 16.4 cents on regular unleaded gas and 16.8 cents on premium gasoline.

In explaining why he did not reduce the gas tax, Mr. Parizeau, the Quebec Minister of Finance, noted that the tax had brought in $600 million in revenue in 1983. I quote: "There is no way in which we can let such an amount go uncollected at this point."

In Ontario, in March, this government actually reduced the provincial tax on gasoline. That reduction left the provincial tax rate at 7.3 cents per litre for regular, 7.7 cents for unleaded and 7.9 cents for premium.

Let members compare the Quebec and Ontario rates of 40 per cent and 20 per cent respectively and then decide where they would prefer to fuel up.

I mention these two taxes because they have a direct and immediate impact on the consumer. Critics argue that certain policies of this government militate against the consumer-led recovery. These claims are questionable in themselves and ignore the fact that this government's ability to hold the line on the sales tax and the gasoline tax has and does increase consumer purchasing power.

Much the same can be said of the provincial and personal income tax. The New Brunswick budget increased that province's income tax from 55.5 per cent of the federal tax to 58 per cent. The Quebec rate is 52.7 per cent. The Ontario rate—the third lowest in the country—stands at 48 per cent.

Some criticism has been directed against the five per cent surcharge on personal income tax that was introduced by this budget. This tax, which is a temporary measure only, will produce $170 million in this fiscal year. This revenue will be used to help pay for the job creation programs outlined in the budget and will help finance the social support programs on which many of our citizens depend.

Few would argue that a temporary five per cent surcharge is preferable to an increase in the actual tax rate. Furthermore, I am certain most Ontarians, given the choice between a small surcharge or a decline in the level and quality of services, or the choice between a temporary surcharge or increased government borrowing, would select the surcharge.

To conclude this brief but I hope illuminating comparative survey, let us take a look at the relative financial positions of the three provinces as outlined by their budgets.

The tax increases introduced by the New Brunswick budget, including those I mentioned and others such as a special levy on municipal tax rates, an increase in the property tax, the introduction of a property transfer tax and the reintroduction of hospital user fees, were part of that government's effort to control the ever-expanding deficit on its current account. In addition to these measures designed to raise new revenue, that province as a restraint measure has asked its public sector employees to accept a one-year wage freeze.

As a result of these measures the New Brunswick government hopes to be able to hold its 1983 deficit at $190.6 million. However, had it not taken such forceful action to raise new revenues and control expenditures, the deficit was projected to reach $381 million in 1983 and to escalate to $466 million in the fiscal year 1984-85.

I am sure all members will agree that the New Brunswick measures are strong indeed. However, according to the New Brunswick Minister of Finance, they were necessary because the deficit in the province was not the product of cyclical factors that would vanish with the recession. Rather, the deficit has become a deeply rooted structural problem arising from an ingrained expenditure level that was growing faster than revenues.

4:50 p.m.

In its 1982-83 budget, the Quebec government estimated its deficit for the year would be $2.98 billion. In fact, the estimate was revised upward in November 1982 to $3.2 billion. Again this year the Quebec deficit will be in the $3.2-billion range and it is likely to remain at that level for the next few years.

One consequence of this high deficit has been that Quebec has had its debt instruments downgraded. As a result, neither the province nor its crown corporations can borrow at the most favourable available market rates.

By comparison, the deficit in Ontario, thanks to a long-standing commitment to restraint and expenditure control, has not become institutionalized and is not built into our financial system. Most of the deficit in this province is due to the effects of the recession and will be gradually eliminated as the economy recovers.

Ontario's per capita deficit stands at about $293, the lowest among any of the provinces. In addition, our deficit relative to our gross domestic product is also the lowest of any Canadian province.

Mr. Kerrio: There shouldn't be any. We're the richest province. What are you boasting about?

Mr. Kells: Just wait until I get to the comparisons with the federal government.

At the national level, despite the fact that the Canadian economy is less than three times the size of Ontario's, the federal deficit of $31.2 billion is more than 10 times the size of Ontario's deficit.

An. hon. member: Big deal.

Mr. Kells: It is quite a big deal. It is no accident that this province finds itself in such an enviable financial position. It is a result of this government's long-standing commitment to, and the practice of a cost-efficient delivery of, services and restraint.

No province in Canada has been able to escape the negative impact of the recession on its economy. Even Alberta with its oil riches is now facing a deficit of between $2.2 billion and $2.4 billion and unemployment rates approaching the national average.

Few provinces have been able to cope with the recession as effectively as Ontario. The degree of flexibility afforded our Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) because of our past management practices enabled us to expand our spending in response to the recession and thereby help the people of the province through a very rough economic period. We were able to do this without undermining the long-term growth prospects for the province and without burdening the people of this province with higher taxes.

Furthermore, Ontario now finds itself in a position to take full advantage of improving economic conditions. In all probability, Ontario will rebound more quickly from the recession than any other province. In large measure this is because of the budgetary policies of this government, which will help to accelerate the recovery through sensitive stimulation of those sectors of our economy on which recovery must be built. In part it is also because of our diversified economic base, in which upturns in one sector can lead to recovery in others.

We will also benefit from the fact that we are a trading province. Improvements in the economies of our major trading partners will redound to our advantage in the form of increased export sales.

This budget puts in place the policies that will help our private sector take full advantage of improving conditions. It puts in place the programs that will help our industries increase their productivity and thereby compete more effectively in the domestic and international marketplace.

Every province was hit by the recession; every province is now attempting to pull out of that recession and encourage recovery. In most cases they are attempting to do this through policies that restrain public sector expenditures and encourage private sector growth. Nine of the 10 provinces have introduced official restraint programs. None of these programs has been, in my opinion, as equitable or as effective as Ontario's inflation restraint program.

All the provinces are looking to the private sector as the main engine of recovery. As the Quebec Minister of Finance pointed out, "The essence of our efforts must be on job creation and economic recovery, and that requires serious support from the private sector." If that sounds familiar to the members, it should. It is precisely what our Treasurer said in his budget address to this House. It is precisely what this budget and last year's budget have been working towards.

I have conducted this brief survey to help put Ontario's budgetary policies, its fiscal position and the claims of the members opposite into perspective. I believe, and any member who can for a moment rise above the limitations imposed by partisan prejudice will agree with me, that this survey demonstrates that we in Ontario are in a most fortunate position. The simple truth is that this is a well-managed province and that we are much better off than many of the members opposite would like to believe.

In Ontario we have what is referred to as a mixed economy. This administration has long acknowledged that government does have a positive role to play in the economy. We have never subscribed to the view that one must choose between economic progress and social justice, and that the former can only be achieved through a laissez-faire market and the latter through massive state intervention and economic centralization.

On the contrary, we have always held that an economic progress which does not increase social equity is not progress and that social progress must involve economic justice. Our commitment to these principles is reflected in our budgetary policy. As this budget makes clear, this government will continue to participate constructively in the economic life of the province as it is its responsibility to do.

In this case, our contribution will continue to be made on two broad fronts: first, through policies designed to stimulate job creation and economic development, and second, in the delivery of fundamental social support services to the people of the province.

This government has met these responsibilities and, as this budget makes clear, will continue to do so. We have always acted with sensible restraint. We have done so, not, as some would have one believe, out of any mean-heartedness or lack of concern, but because we recognize that neither the immediate nor long-term interests of the people of this province are served by policies which would squander our resources and ransom our future.

This government has resisted the urgings of those who would substitute destructive interference for constructive intervention. This government has always considered it was its responsibility to encourage real growth, not the illusion of growth. The 1983 budget will help us meet that responsibility.

This government has the confidence of the people. It has won that confidence because it has taken a pragmatic, moderate approach to governing; it has consistently produced policies and programs which have not only dealt efficiently and effectively with the problems facing Ontarians, but also have been progressive and farsighted, so that Ontario has been always in a position to take advantage of new opportunities.

In our approach to government we have rejected extremism. While adherence to extreme positions may make policy-making easy, it does not make policies effective. Rather than content ourselves or betray the people of this province with simplistic solutions to complex problems, we have attempted to base our policies on a sound and thorough analysis of the issues and on a reasoned accommodation of the legitimate interests of all the parties involved in a given situation.

The budget demonstrates this moderate, pragmatic approach to the management of the province will be continued. In my opinion, it would be disastrous to depart from that at this time. It is essential that in the coming crucial months we deal with things as they are and not with some fantasy of things as we would wish them to be.

Our record shows that by adopting this pragmatic and moderate approach we have been able to provide the people of Ontario with good, inexpensive and responsible government. I am certain this record will be continued and the confidence which the people have in this government will be vindicated.

Likewise, this government has confidence in the abilities of the people of this province, and has faith in their willingness to work to build a better future.

It is imperative that during this time of recovery the mutual confidence and trust, which is the foundation of the partnership between this government and the citizens it serves, be maintained. The road back from the recession will not be short, nor will it be easy, but it is a road which, if we are to travel it at all, we must travel together.

In closing, I would urge all members to support the programs and policies outlined in the budget, programs that reflect our appreciation of, and will deal effectively with the challenges which face this province.

Mr. Wrye: Mr. Speaker, I would start by saying that this is one honourable member who will not support a budget that is not worthy of support.

Mr. Treleaven: Is that the speech?

Mr. Wrye: I will take a little bit of time because I see my friend the member for Oxford (Mr. Treleaven) is here and he is seeking ways to support the budget. He will hear very little of that in this speech because I could find very little that would receive the support, the applause or in any way, the approval of my constituents.

5 p.m.

When I went into the lockup last Tuesday, it was not the first time I had been in a budget lockup. In my previous incarnation as a journalist I had occasion on three budgets to go into the lockup and study the proposals of previous Treasurers of this government. One of the things that struck me immediately, and strikes me even more as I reread this document, is how simplistic it is, how little vision and foresight is contained in it. It could have been written on the back of an envelope for all the quality and imagination contained therein. The Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) spent more time repeating the same things time and again than he did outlining any programs.

This is a budget with no vision, no charting of a course for Ontario for the 1980s and 1990s. It is a budget completely devoid of any long-term strategy. Perhaps that is because we are not close enough to an election to be tantalized with the kind of economic gobbledegook that featured the Board of Industrial Leadership and Development program, which was brought in just days before the last campaign. There is certainly no vision in this budget; there is no recognition that Ontario, as an industrial giant in Canada, is in desperate trouble and needs the support, the encouragement, the enthusiasm and the financial backing of this government to get out of the mess this government has got us in.

There are a handful of short-term jobs in this budget; not enough. There are a few, and I will not deny it. Many of them are jobs where the Treasurer has simply hooked his railway car on to the job creation programs of Mr. Lalonde. There are no proposals and no plans for medium-term job creation, and I doubt that this government has given any thought to what long-term job creation and a long-term industrial strategy to take us through the rest of the century even would mean. This government thinks only in terms of the next election. That comes through very clearly in this budget.

What also comes through very clearly is what we can hope for. The people of this province—and of my community, who have faced unemployment of around 20 per cent for some two or three years—can hope for no relief in the year to come. It is nothing short of a disgrace for this government, with a smile on its face, to suggest that while the labour force will grow by 56,000 this year, the number of those employed will actually shrink by 37,000. It is a disgrace that this government has come before this House with what it considers to be a budget to put Ontario back on the road to economic recovery, with a budget that, having said that, presents the people of Ontario with an unemployment rate over 1983 of 11.7 per cent.

There are many things wrong with this budget. First, I want to deal with how some of the voodoo economics of this Treasurer came about. I noted the previous speaker alluded to just how proud this province's deficit record was. It is not hard to get a deficit down to $2.7 billion and to hang it all on the feds when federal transfers once again this year rose by 14.2 per cent. That is a little over inflation; about double. But that is because Ottawa has recognized the depth of the recession and has said it will take a short-term deficit, a large deficit, in order to allow the provinces—Ontario and the other nine provinces in this great country—to be able to deliver the social services this country so desperately needs at this time; to be able to deliver health care to those who cannot afford it; to be able to deliver family maintenance to those who, for one reason or another, need it.

The federal government properly recognized that. While it maintained in its sphere of jurisdiction the control over the unemployment insurance program, it said, "The provinces, and the municipalities as creatures of the province, will need help as well so we will transfer to them a significant amount of money"—an amount of money which, as I mentioned earlier, is approximately double the rate of inflation.

So this year the federal government transferred a total of $3.759 billion, up almost $500 million from last year. I am sure it did so in the expectation that Ontario would choose to be just as generous to its municipalities and school boards; yet the opposite has been the case. This province, in order to protect its triple-A credit rating, in order to brag about how low its deficit is in comparison with those of everybody else, has shafted the municipalities once again and has given them 6.8 per cent.

Interjections.

Mr. Wrye: My friends, the members for Nipissing (Mr. Harris) and Durham-York (Mr. Stevenson), indicate that we ought to be thankful.

Later in my speech I will read into the record, for the member for Nipissing, a letter from the mayor of the municipality of North Bay which tells just how thankful the people and the council of North Bay are for the fact that the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing (Mr. Bennett), in his always infinite wisdom, scrapped one of the most effective programs for low-income families that this province has had—a program that the minister himself termed a success. I suppose that is why he scrubbed it. I'll bet he did not scrub any of the self-congratulatory advertising he would do.

So this year the provincial government has turned 6.8 per cent more over to the municipalities. In this budget it could have increased—and it did not—its share of the welfare payments from 30 per cent to 40 per cent for those municipalities which are hard-hit and struggling; municipalities such as mine, those of the members for Sudbury (Mr. Gordon), Chatham-Kent (Mr. Watson) and Brantford (Mr. Gillies).

It is amazing how many of those really effective Tory members did not get anything for their municipalities. Maybe the people ought to know just how effective they all are as well. It is said that the opposition members can never get anything. That seems ironic since it appears that the Tory members do not get much either. I suppose they do not get much because there is so very little understanding of the real crisis faced by municipalities today.

I want to turn to two of the other horrible measures in this budget. First, the increase of five per cent in the Ontario health insurance plan premiums. This is a new increase which brings the increase in OHIP premiums—and I hope my friends over there take note of it because they are all going to hear about it during the next election campaign—since the people of Ontario decided to let the Premier (Mr. Davis) keep the promise, up to 42 per cent in two years and two months.

One of the promises of the Davis government was to keep taxes low. I suppose all government members will go out on the hustings and suggest to the people that OHIP premiums are not really a tax. What a ridiculous suggestion that is.

Our party has made our position on the premiums very, very clear.

Mr. Foulds: I thought your leader said five per cent was okay.

Mr. Wrye: Unfortunately, I am going to have to digress for a moment to respond to my friend from the New Democratic Party. The leader of the Ontario Liberal Party, if the member will check, suggested that if the increase was over five per cent, there could be a court challenge to it. However, if the deputy leader of the New Democratic Party would like, I will send him a copy of the Liberal task force report, On the Critical List, for his perusal and enjoyment.

5:10 p.m.

He will find the position of the party, a position which has not changed for many years, is that OHIP premiums should be, and should have been in this budget, frozen at their present level and a phase-out period should begin, a phase-out period we believe would take four to five years.

Mr. Foulds: Your leader agrees with that, does he?

Mr. Wrye: The leader is in absolute agreement with that position.

Mr. Foulds: Five per cent is okay. You can freeze that.

Mr. Wrye: No, I will not explain it for him again. He can go back and read Hansard. The member is obviously a slow learner. I would suggest—

Mr. Foulds: I would sure be a slow learner when it comes to Liberal economics.

Mr. Wrye: I suggest perhaps he might want to go back and reread that.

Interjections.

Mr. Wrye: The point is what has happened in this budget, and I hate to argue with my friends from the left, but they have become so irrelevant in Ontario politics, and so irrelevant in national politics that they fear for their very survival as a viable party in the next election.

Mr. Foulds: How many seats do you have in northern Ontario?

Mr. Mackenzie: That is what we heard in Hamilton West, too.

Mr. Foulds: Look at Hamilton West and York South.

Mr. Mackenzie: It was the Liberals who were irrelevant.

Mr. Kerrio: Are you talking about British Columbia?

Mr. Wrye: We will not talk about BC and we do not want to talk about Saskatchewan either. We will leave all that alone.

Mr. Foulds: How many Liberals or Tories are there left in British Columbia?

Mr. Wrye: I think we came back. We got three per cent of the vote.

The government likes to talk about the fact there is premium assistance. I am just delighted to see the Treasurer has included in this document under one of his appendices, "Premium assistance limits will continue as follows." Of course, when we get into limits for premium assistance we do not recognize there has been any inflation. Of course, inflation only goes on when it is for the government.

It says, "Free coverage: single persons having taxable incomes of $3,000 or less; families having taxable incomes of $3,500 or less." Well, is that not generous? In other words, if one has a wife and two children and is making somewhere around $10,000 a year, one will qualify for premium assistance. If one is up around the massive, huge gross salary of $16,000 or $17,000 a year, one gets the rare privilege, unless one's employer covers it of course, of paying, I think, $56.65 or $56.70 a month. That adds up, in case the government has lost track, to $700 a year of regressive, Robin Hood-in-reverse taxation.

If there is one matter that makes me, in a sense, even angrier than the OHIP increase, which I suppose is about all we could expect of this government, it is the personal income tax increase. What makes me honestly and genuinely angry about it is not so much the increase, but the name. I resent, my constituents resent and I think any honourable member of this House ought to resent the title "social services maintenance tax."

We suggested in the House the other day it should be called the "Suncor maintenance tax" or the "Minaki Lodge maintenance tax." In a sense, I guess that was good for a laugh, but I do not think entitling a personal tax increase with a title like "social services maintenance tax" is a laughing matter.

I deal in a riding where the unemployment rate is probably 25 per cent, where mother-led families are numerous and where there has been, and continues to be, a lot of real human misery. Somehow this title swipes out at those people in a very mean-spirited way. It says to the middle class, "Here you are: you are going to face another personal income tax increase and it is all to pay for health care, family benefits and the like."

Why do we not call it the road maintenance tax increase? I could make as logical an argument that that is what it is for. How do we know this is for social services maintenance? Why not call it the medical profession maintenance tax increase? They are getting $250 million more this year as a result of the agreement the government negotiated with them.

No, in this era of the rightward drift, the Tories think they can move to where Reagan is and a little further right, and in this way they will be the champions of the Canadian people. This is the title they want to put on the tax increase. I find that tax increase title reprehensible.

I cannot comment on whether it is temporary or not. I will simply note that we have had a number of temporary taxes over the years and most of them became permanent. We will wait until December 1984 to see whether this becomes permanent as well.

The interesting thing is the OHIP premium, which is a tax by any other name. Somehow seven provinces out of 10 manage to pay for their health care systems without premiums so they must be raising the money through taxes. Thus it follows the premiums we have are taxes by another name.

The combination of OHIP premiums and personal taxes now means we are effectively paying provincial taxes at a rate of 62 per cent of federal tax payable. That is just about the highest in the whole country. And what did one specific large group get for these tax increases which strike so hard at them? It did not strike so much at the very poor, because the government has let off the hook single people earning less than $7,500 and families earning less than $12,000. But what did that large group of people struggling along on gross incomes of $15,000 to $25,000 get?

One of the first things they got was a tax holiday on furniture and appliances. The other day I asked the Treasurer about this and he said to go and tell my constituents I am opposed to this tax holiday. I told him I already had—and I want to repeat it today. It is wrong-headed, it is just plain poor economics and it will create far fewer jobs than the $55 million we will spend. My opposition to this may put me in a minority in this place, but I suspect we could have placed our dollars far better and I will explain why I do.

I want first to read into the record the comments of the Ontario Chamber of Commerce. This is a body I do not always agree with but on this one occasion I think its wisdom is great in what it had to say about this kind of tax holiday. In a brief to the Treasurer before the budget, which he should have reread when he was preparing it, they said:

"The Ontario chamber is opposed to any short-term stimuli to the economy such as a reduction or partial removal of Ontario retail sales tax. Such a program would serve to reduce inventory rather than to create jobs, in that it brings forward purchases of items which would otherwise be bought at some point in the future.

"Where inventories are low, lowering Ontario retail sales tax could actually hurt the recovery more than help by creating short-term abnormal demands of the manufacturing sector, which may in turn spark instability and inflationary pressures."

5:20 p.m.

I want to add a few other suggestions why I think this move is ill-advised. First, I have looked at the list and there are some nice things in here that maybe I could use. I am employed. Maybe I could use a new sofa, or a hutch, or some floor coverings or a new freezer. But today many of my constituents cannot afford these things, which are essentially luxuries, because of the depth of the recession. What they need desperately is jobs so they can put food on the table, so they can repair their homes and have a decent roof over their heads, so they can go out and buy some clothes for their children and all of those necessities of life.

There is not much point in them going out and saving seven per cent when they buy a freezer if they do not have any food to put into that freezer, and for too many of my constituents that is the case.

The Treasurer and the government would argue that this kind of stimulus, as I understand the argument, will pull money out of the banks and out of the short-term certificates and get it back into the marketplace to stimulate the furniture and appliance business.

I would argue that this is already beginning to happen, and I would argue this as a member who comes from an automotive community that in recent months has seen spiralling automotive sales. This has happened for two reasons.

First, interest rates have dropped, so those who are employed—and the vast majority, 88 per cent or so of the people of Ontario, are employed and a goodly number of them enjoy jobs that allow them to buy those fairly expensive, big-ticket items—are now getting into buying those items again because, while they cannot fully finance them, they can afford interest rates that have dropped down to more respectable levels. They are not as low as I would want them but they are at more respectable levels.

There is another side of the coin, which is that at the same time the interest rates on borrowing have dropped to more respectable levels, interest rates on savings have dropped dramatically. It seems obvious to me that one of the reasons those who were employed were putting their money away was the very high interest rates they were earning on their money. As little as nine or 10 months ago banks were paying 14 or 15 per cent on simple savings; on short-term notes the interest rate was up to 17 or 18 per cent and people were leaving their money there because it was growing very quickly.

If you go to a bank today, on your savings account you will get somewhere between six and one half and seven per cent. People are seeing that now they have saved a substantial amount of money through the interest that was payable, they are prepared to move back out into the marketplace and buy those freezers, those sofas and those cars.

Quite frankly, I do not believe—and the car market proves me right—that the Treasurer's $55-million tax holiday for those who already have the money was in any way, shape or form necessary. Indeed, it seems to me it could be argued very forcefully that had the Treasurer taken this $55 million and put it into the construction industry, so we could have constructed large, new amounts of low- and middle-income rental stock in this province, that in itself, as people moved from one location to another, would have generated much of the business in furniture and appliances to which the Treasurer has given a tax holiday.

And it would have done more. It would have created desperately needed jobs in the construction industry. There is almost no industry in this province that has been harder hit by the recession than the construction industry. Unemployment rates in that industry in my community and in so many others have been absolutely astronomical: 60 to 70 per cent of the industry is out of work, and not for the last month, not for the last three months; some of those people, the vast majority of them, have been out of work for a year or more.

This was an opportunity for the Treasurer to put his money into solving, beginning to solve at least, the housing crisis in this province and at the same time to create many much-needed jobs, which would have had an accelerating effect on consumer spending and the so-called consumer-led recovery the Treasurer believes is so important.

While I and my party welcome the extension of the tax exemption for small businesses, I want to make the same points I made in last year's remarks. First, the exemption is limited to incorporated small businesses. Second, and perhaps more important given the community I come from, it is limited to small businesses that are making a profit. This may come as a surprise to members from areas that have not been hard-hit by this recession—and there are areas of this province that have been far less hard-hit than mine—but very few small businesses in Windsor made any money last year or the year before, and very few will make any money this year.

I would have thought the Treasurer might have consulted with some of his cabinet colleagues, had some discussions with them or with some of his back-benchers, and they might have raised that very real problem with him. I cannot imagine there are very many small businesses in Sudbury that made any money last year or will make any money this year. I cannot imagine there are very many small businesses in Brantford that made any money last year—

Mr. Harris: For most of them, this is the best year they have had. Why don't you get your facts straight? Talk to the member for Sudbury, and find out how small businesses are doing.

Mr. Wrye: The ones that have survived?

Mr. Harris: Yes. Very well.

Mr. Wrye: The ones that are still in business—

Mr. Harris: Most are still in business and doing very well.

Mr. Wrye: —or the ones that went out of business because they did not get a break from this government? They did not get any break at all. My friend the member for Nipissing always reminds me of the ones that are still in business. That is exactly the problem. So many small businesses in my community could have used the help of this government last year. Yet the money was poured into giving a tax holiday to those already making a profit.

I understand that not all companies will survive, and that there is nothing implicitly wrong with making a profit. I understand that, and my party understands that. But I am saying the budget is wrong-headed. It helps those who in these very difficult times need help less. That is not to say it is not welcome for small businesses making a profit. It is to say the job of this government was and is and ought to be to help small businesses that are on the brink. This government has failed to do that.

I want to turn to a matter that troubles me greatly and that has bothered a number of people in my municipality. I have had a number of calls to my constituency office asking what the Treasurer meant when he questioned the usefulness of continuing the Ontario property tax credit. That credit allows those of modest income to have some kind of relief. It is a program I would not describe as perfect, but it is one of the programs aimed at those who most need our help.

Yet here we are raising this possibility so we can argue throughout the next year, really waste our time arguing with the Treasurer, that this program should not be scrapped. Then he will announce next year: "We are not going to scrap the Ontario tax credit program. Aren't we great? Is that not a great thing for us to do?"

I think the only great thing the Treasurer could do right now is to stand up in his place tomorrow and say: "I reread that sentence and we are not going to do anything to the Ontario property tax credit. We are not going to scrap it. We are not going to hit those who can least afford it one more time."

5:30 p.m.

I am sorry my friend the member for Nipissing left, but I want to read into the record some of the host of letters we are getting. I just photocopied a handful which I raised and read into the record during question period. I want to raise them again in this budget speech.

It is curious the government seems to have so little idea of where it ought to be going in terms of providing some economic stimulation that would not be make-work, but would be responsible, would be useful in the short term and would put people back into gainful employment.

We have contacted a large number of municipalities regarding the scrapping of the Ontario home renewal program. The letters are virtually flying back to us from municipalities, all of which are exceedingly upset over the scrapping of this successful program.

I want to put a few of these letters on the record because they speak to a wide variety of reasons why each and every one of these municipalities think the program was a useful one. Some believe it was useful to help bring houses up to standard alone. Some have mentioned the fact it created jobs. Some have mentioned that by bringing what are often older homes that are substandard back up to the minimum standards of the municipality, there has not been a need to build new housing, thus saving the government money. There have been a number of very interesting responses.

The first letter comes from the clerk administrator of Penetanguishene who was asked to reply by the mayor. I will just read one sentence:

"This is an old town and we are concerned that the province may not reinstitute the OHRP program. It would be certainly detrimental in the long run."

The mayor of Goderich also responded. That town has received about $250,000 since the inception of the program and has been able to fund most of the applications received. I do not know how it is going to fund the applications from now on. I suppose what will happen is there will be no more applications. Our friends on the other side of the aisle, led by the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing, will just assume everything is all right.

The mayor says, "Fifty jobs funded by OHRP over the past three years"—that is 50 jobs in a small community. When the Minister of Industry and Trade (Mr. Walker) can brag about nine jobs, I think 50 over three years in a town the size of Goderich is probably worth mentioning. I should give this to him so he can use it as a statement by the ministry. It is obviously worth more jobs than some of the statements he has had. "Fifty jobs funded by OHRP over the past three years in excess of $200,000 certainly contributed to the wellbeing of local contractors, whether they hired new staff or were able to maintain present staff levels in slow economic times."

The Treasurer did not promise us any rose garden last Tuesday. He said that while the recovery was under way it was going to be very slow. His figures certainly bear that out.

The city of St. Catharines is interesting. They had been able to make great use of the Ontario home renewal program. They had 66 applications in 1980. In 1981 the number went up to 86 and in 1982 they had 120. This government cut off funding for OHRP. It did not cut off any funding for advertising, but OHRP went in the first restraint cutback; they were able to fund only 41 of the 120 applications. It is too bad the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing does not ask the mayor of St. Catharines what has happened with the other 79.

The mayor of Welland has responded. He says: "It is clearly evident that OHRP has been very well accepted in the city of Welland. The program is very worth while and, without adequate funding, much of the existing housing which is below minimum standards will not be upgraded. It is imperative that funding be reinstituted for the home owner under the Ontario home renewal program."

The member for Nipissing ought to sit down some time and have a chat with the people in the city of North Bay.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: He does. Every day.

Mr. Wrye: Then he would know, I am sure.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: He lives there and he knows that community. He doesn't have to play whispermill.

Mr. Wrye: Then I am sure my friend the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Elgie) will be aware, as the member for Nipissing will be aware, that this is the view of North Bay on the cancellation of OHRP. It is too bad he did not talk to the minister about it.

"This is to advise you that termination of funding under the OHRP program will have a substantial effect on this municipality's ability to deliver this program.

"A substantial amount of each loan to date has been forgivable, therefore repayment is being received on only one third of the total loan amount to date. Repayments are averaging in the range of $2,500 to $3,000 per month."

Well, with $2,500 to $3,000 per month they will not be able to fund very many programs.

The town of Fort Erie also sent us a reply. Here is the interesting thing about the Ontario home renewal program that the minister might have learned had he done any checking. This is a very interesting reply. It was not one which I thought of until we began to do some investigations. The co-ordinator for that community said:

"It is estimated that a total of 20 jobs have been created annually as a result of OHRP." Again, Fort Erie is just a small community. "Not that job creation was primarily for the OHRP"—this is the interesting part—"but the neighbours, upon seeing work being done, invited the contractor to look at their homes although the home owners were not part of the program.

"In one instance as many as four homes were being worked on simultaneously."

In other words, the program of bringing substandard housing up to standard in itself generated new jobs, a new commitment for people to bring their housing up to standard. After all, I thought jobs were the number one priority of this government in the budget, and yet a program which was funded to a meagre $20 million is not to be funded this year, but this government will find money for advertising.

One last letter from the town of Dunnville:

"Personally, I feel this is one of the better and needed government programs and support it emphatically. It is unfortunate that no new funds have been allocated to OHRP."

This gentleman goes on to say that fortunately for the town of Dunnville, they do have a decent reserve fund. I will be quite fair about it; many of the towns did indicate they have a fairly decent reserve fund, but many of them do not and as a result will be hard hit by the cancellation of this program.

I thought it was interesting that the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing once again this afternoon, as is his wont, turned over the solution of this problem, as he usually does, to the federal government. He said, "Well, the feds have a program so we will let them handle the problem."

This province has managed to let the feds manage so many problems, its deficit has reached the levels it has because this province continues to cop out of its responsibilities. This whole budget does.

I could speak at some length about the youth employment crisis. It seems to me the government would have found the numbers to be so startling and frightening that it would have done something and yet it has thrown virtually a pittance at the problems of youth unemployment. Most of its new money, $25 million, is for a program of subsidizing employers for a short period of time without the commitment that those short-term jobs will turn into long-term jobs and that our young people will begin to be allowed to find the productivity of useful employment. I find that very disturbing.

I was struck by a figure my leader used last Friday in question period. He said that given the commitment this government had to youth unemployment in Ontario, if that commitment continues at the same level, some 19-year-olds will be 73 years of age before this government helps them to get a job. That is really discouraging and disturbing.

5:40 p.m.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: That is really the most idiotic analogy that has ever been propounded in this House.

Mr. Wrye: I would have thought the Minister of Education and Minister of Colleges and Universities (Miss Stephenson) would have more concern for young people than she shows.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I have far more concern than you have, but I would not use stupid examples like that.

Mr. Wrye: I suspect, if the minister had more concern for young people, we would not have this disgraceful amount of money being thrown at a program, a totally inadequate amount of money being given to a program when the need is so great and so desperate. We have 250,000 young people out of work, and this government finds $36 million for them. It creates, with $25 million of it, 12,500 jobs and the minister shrugs, she shakes her head and she feels that is adequate. That will lower youth unemployment by six per cent.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I am shaking my head at your logic which is so full of holes it looks like a Swiss cheese.

Mr. Philip: They created 130 part-time jobs in Minaki. Don't you understand that?

Mr. Wrye: We are still waiting to find out how many of them are local.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Cousens): The member for Windsor-Sandwich is possibly being provocative. You are enjoying yourself.

Mr. Wrye: Some of the interjections—I will try to press on.

Finally, I want to speak about the 1983 capital acceleration program. This government trumpeted that it has a $247-million acceleration of capital works to create 12,000 jobs. On reading a little further into the fine print the Treasurer did not bother putting in, it turns out that of $246.8 million, the province is only putting in $167.5 million. That is just fine, and typical of this government to play with numbers, taking credit where no credit is due. I suppose we all ought to be used to that.

Then we see this great new program is not a one-year program; it is a two-year program. These are not jobs that are going to be created now, today, next month or next year. This is not money the Minister of Education, the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) or the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow) can go to the provincial Treasurer and ask for to get the ball rolling on this or that project. At some point the government will have to say "Whoa," because this is a two-year program. We are not going to create 12,000 jobs this year, and we should not pretend that. This program, even if it gets started instantly, will probably create—I will be generous—6,000 or 7,000 jobs this year. Will they be full-time jobs or part-time jobs? I suspect most of them will be the latter.

We also have that other great line, the one in my community we do not know whether to laugh or cry about, which is targeted primarily to regions of the province with higher levels of unemployment, and it is going to be co-ordinated by the "bilge" program. We have hardly received one dollar from the "bilge" program so far, and I suspect somehow this government will manage to find that it will not pour any money or very little money into our community for this program as well.

I see my friend the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations in the House, and I remember this great provincial initiative. I remember my friend the member for Brantford saying that he and the minister got on a plane and went to Ottawa to see if they could not get Brantford included in the industry and labour adjustment program.

It is too bad we do not have an ILAP in this province. That is exactly what we ought to be doing. We ought to target this money specifically to those communities that have been hard hit over the long term. Everybody has been hard hit over the last seven or eight months, and those communities that were able to buffer themselves from the recession longest are the ones that are showing the most signs of coming out of it.

I have a look at the unemployment statistics every month, and the figures for Metropolitan Toronto and the city of Ottawa, to use two communities as an example, indicate the employment trend line in those two communities is far superior to that in many of the other cities that are surveyed.

As I said at the outset, I cannot agree with my friend the member for Humber (Mr. Kells), who said this budget deserves the support of all of us in the House.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: It is a great opportunity you are missing.

Mr. Wrye: I will have my opportunity in two or three years.

I regret that I cannot support the budget. There is so very little reason to support the budget, and I suppose that is the reason the honourable member's speech was so short: there is very little here to support. There is, indeed, very little in it; there is very little of substance, there is certainly nothing of creativity.

As I said at the outset, there is no vision; for so many people in Ontario, 500,000-plus unemployed, there is no light at the end of the tunnel. I hope that as this becomes clearer to the Treasurer in the months to come, perhaps he will take his own advice and bring in a mini-budget some time this fall, a budget that will address all of the problems this document should have addressed but completely failed to do.

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Speaker, I think that with the time available I will have 12 minutes to make some preliminary remarks about the Millertime budget.

I have been in the Legislature, some of my opponents would say, too long: 12 years.

Mr. Philip: No. No.

Mr. Foulds: Sometimes when I hear a budget like that just brought down by the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) I feel it myself. But frankly, the budget we had this year is, in the 12 years I have been in the House and the 12 years of the administration of this Premier (Mr. Davis), simply the most duplicitous, the most dishonest, the most inadequate budget that I and the people of Ontario have ever experienced.

The central question that must be asked after any budget revolves around questions like these: Is anybody better off as a result of the budget?

Mr. Philip: No.

Mr. Foulds: Is there a sense of direction of where the country or the province is going after the budget?

Mr. Philip: No.

The Acting Speaker: The member for Etobicoke (Mr. Philip) can go back to his seat if he wants to interject, and even then he might be brought to order.

Mr. Foulds: Is there even a hint or a touch of vision in the budget? Is there any hope for the helpless, the unemployed and those who, through no fault of their own, have become the victims in our society?

Some hon. members: No.

5:50 p.m.

Mr. Foulds: The answer to all of those questions has to be no. As my friend, my colleague and my very good parliamentarian, the member for Etobicoke, has said several times, the answer is simply no.

In a good budget, the answer "no" can also be given to those questions if there is something in it that leads to an answer "yes" in the coming years—a positive answer to any of those questions. If one goes through that series of questions as it applies to any future economic development, any future hope for those on social assistance or those who are unemployed, the answer would still have to be no. In that sense this budget is a total and absolute failure.

One thing in the budget those of us in opposition resent most is the implicit threats to those who cannot respond. I want to take one directly, from page 19: "Public agencies, municipalities, boards of education, universities, colleges and hospitals—indeed, all bodies financed largely through tax dollars—must be expected to show restraint in their compensation plans."

That is a veiled threat that the wage control legislation the government brought down last September is going to be continued. I would like this government to demonstrate one economic benefit that came as a result of that legislation. I would like them to demonstrate one job that has been created through it. I would like them to show me one extra fridge, one extra appliance, that has been bought as a result of it. I submit they are unable to do that.

More important, the threat that is naked in the budget this time is the threat to those on social assistance. "Recipients of provincial funds should not anticipate future increases at levels above, or even at, the rate of inflation." That means those people who are largely now living below the poverty line—because the rates of social assistance in Ontario are not very generous—will be living on less as inflation mounts. The Treasurer cannot make the commitment to the poor of this province that they will even keep pace with inflation. That is the worst kind of Neanderthal welfare-bashing, the worst kind of Reaganomics that we have seen in this province in a long time.

A sad thing about the so-called Progressive Conservative mindset is that it is progressive only when it is politically advantageous. It is progressive and spends money on the victims of our society only when the party can get political benefit from it. They do that when they want to further their own individual careers. This was the case with the present Premier; a lot of money was spent on education in the late 1960s when he held that portfolio. They do that when they feel the atmosphere out there is generous enough that the electorate will vote for them on those issues. That seems to me to be inherently dishonest.

I will mention a second thing about who benefits in this budget. Leading up to the federal budget on April 19 and leading up to this budget, we had a good deal of hype by both the federal and provincial treasurers. Both the federal and provincial treasurers are having, if I may say so, more and more parallel careers in every way. The hype we had was that the number one concern of government had to be unemployment.

If the number one concern is unemployment, then the number one obligation of government has to be to create jobs. It is that simple. You engage in politics and obtain power so you can take some action. That is the point of politics. Politics is the art of the possible, but politics is also the endeavour of activity. If a person does not want to do anything, he should be a philosopher and think about problems and write knowingly, productively and stimulatingly about them, but he should not be a politician.

When a person undertakes a politician's role, he undertakes a very grave responsibility. His commitment has to be to action. It has to be a commitment to use whatever authority, influence and power he has to change things, to make things better. That is what politics is about; it is a commitment to action.

If the number one priority is unemployment, then the number one action of a politician in power—and the Treasurer is a politician in power; he is the politician who is the chief financial officer and the chief economist of the province—has to be to create jobs.

I am sorry to say that the Treasurer, by his own admission, failed and failed miserably on that test. He admits that the unemployment rate will increase during the year of this budget. I do not say it will increase as a result of the budget, because there is nothing in the budget that creates unemployment; I admit that. But there is nothing in the budget that creates employment either.

That is a very grave abdication of responsibility on the part of the Treasurer. A Treasurer's job involves more than dealing as an accountant with the balance books of the province. It is a Treasurer's job to deal with the economic fabric of our province. The Treasurer has failed to do that.

As well as that, there is the threat to the municipalities, the agencies and the boards. I quote from page 20: "I have questioned the usefulness of continuing the Ontario property tax credit now that comprehensive property tax reform has been postponed indefinitely and local taxes account for a lower percentage of personal income than they did in the early 1970s."

If property tax reform has not been brought into effect, it is this government's responsibility, because with a huge majority it has not had the guts to implement this in more than a decade.

Mr. Martel: They started that in 1967.

Mr. Foulds: My colleague the member for Sudbury East (Mr. Martel), who has been in this place four years longer than I have, says they started saying they were going to do that in 1967. If they have the power, if they have the majority, they have to have the guts to bring in the kinds of programs they say they believe in. Even with a majority in the good years of spending, and now with a majority in the so-called bad years, the Tories did not have and do not have the guts to bring in that kind of reform.

In the minute or two I have remaining to wrap up this section of my remarks, I would suggest that the very fact there has not been property tax reform is the reason property tax credits are increasingly needed by those who in the old areas of town are overtaxed because there has not been tax reform. Because their incomes, by and large, are lower, they do not receive the income to pay those taxes; therefore they need the property tax credit.

The Acting Speaker: This might be an appropriate time for the honourable member to—

Mr. Foulds: I see six seconds left. This is a petty budget of threats, distortions and absolutely no vision. I will deal with those items further in the budget debate.

On motion by Mr. Foulds, the debate was adjourned.

The House adjourned at 6 p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

Tuesday, May 17, 1983

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

SIMILARITY OF BILLS

Mr. Speaker: On Friday last, the member for Etobicoke (Mr. Philip) raised a point of order in which he alleged that the introduction of Bill 32, An Act to amend the Landlord and Tenant Act, was not in order because the bill proposes to deal with a matter that is substantially the same as Bill 11, which was introduced earlier in this session.

It is well established by standing order 39 that no question or motion may be proposed upon which the judgement of the House has been expressed during the current session. However, in this case it cannot be said that the House has come to a decision on either of the bills, and I must rule that the member's point of order is not in order and cannot properly be submitted at this time.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

INDIAN BAND AGREEMENT

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to report to the members of the Legislature on the progress of the negotiations between the Islington band and the government. Members will recall that the government agreed in 1978 to implement the recommendations in the interim report of the Royal Commission on the Northern Environment that Ontario provide special attention to the social and economic needs of the Islington and Grassy Narrows Indian bands.

The progress of these negotiations over the last five years has been the subject of a number of questions and discussions in the House. In December 1982, Ontario and the Islington band reached an agreement in principle on a wide range of economic development and social programs. These programs are designed to assist the band in its efforts to improve the social and economic conditions on the reserve.

Last January I visited Kenora with my colleague the Minister of Northern Affairs (Mr. Bernier) and addressed a public meeting to explain to interested citizens of the area, the significance of the terms of the agreement in principle. After a wide-ranging discussion, I asked a number of interested local people to form a committee to focus the local concerns and provide me with their advice.

In February I again visited Kenora and met with the citizens' committee, receiving some valuable suggestions, a number of which have been incorporated in the final agreement. On the same day I visited the Islington band reserve and met Chief Isaac Mandamin to deliver to him for his review and response, an interim draft agreement as it had been developed to that time. Because of his desire to complete the agreement with Ontario, Chief Mandamin signed the interim draft agreement and had it delivered to the Premier (Mr. Davis) with a request that the province execute the draft agreement.

While the Ontario government is just as anxious as Chief Mandamin to execute the agreement, the draft signed by the chief contained wording that might have been misinterpreted in the future and I felt a little more time would be wisely spent in improving the style of the document. This has now been done and I have signed what I believe to be a suitable final document and sent it to Chief Mandamin. The differences between the two documents are mainly those I have made to improve the clarity of the agreement and to avoid difficulties that might otherwise arise in its implementation.

It is my sincere hope that the chief will sign this document and that the band will subsequently ratify the agreement so that the benefits the agreement provides can be implemented in the near future.

[Later]

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order: I wonder whether it is not incumbent upon the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development to table both the documents he referred to in his statement and make a statement about whether he has talked to Chief Mandamin in the meantime.

INSPECTION OF NURSING HOMES

Mr. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order: In yesterday's question period, the Minister of Health (Mr. Grossman) indicated he would be providing me with a report on the four nursing homes I questioned him about. His exact words were, "The honourable member will have that information by six o'clock this evening"—that is, information arising from my questions of February 22. I still have not received that report. I think that should be on the record.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the minister will take note.

I think really these are not points of order. They would be better dealt with during question period.

WOMEN'S ISSUES MINISTERIAL APPOINTMENT

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to inform the House of an appointment that will be of particular interest not only to women in this province but to all our citizens.

Twenty years ago the government established the women's bureau in the Ministry of Labour to assist with the growing and continuous participation of women in the labour force. This year marks the 10th anniversary of the Ontario Status of Women Council, appointed by this government to advise on any and all matters of concern to women.

It was also 10 years ago that my colleague the Provincial Secretary for Social Development (Mrs. Birch) became Ontario's first woman cabinet minister. She continues to serve the government—

Mr. Breithaupt: Has it really been that long? It is as though it were yesterday.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Did the member for Kitchener say that? He said "It is as though it were yesterday" with affection and respect.

Mr. Breithaupt: Yes. I did not realize so much time had gone by.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I understand. If only some of his colleagues would demonstrate the same affection and respect.

Mr. Peterson: You always interject when you are embarrassed, don't you?

2:10 p.m.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am never embarrassed to speak about the Provincial Secretary for Social Development (Mrs. Birch) at any time, at any place and on any occasion. It would serve the member's own political interest if he would treat her with the same respect.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: Is that why you are appointing her minister?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Davis: She continues to serve the government and the people of Ontario with great commitment and dedication and has brought to cabinet a special understanding and sensitivity on issues affecting women. She has been in the forefront of efforts to advance the cause of women in this province, based on her personal and ministerial experiences.

She has recommended to me and to her cabinet colleagues that it is now time that a new structure be put in place to further this cause and I have accepted her advice in this matter. She has also assured me of her continuing commitment and interest.

As members of this House are well aware, these past two decades have witnessed profound change as women have moved into every aspect of working life in this province. Women now represent some 42 per cent of our province's labour force—

An hon. member: Why not a woman prime minister?

Hon. Mr. Davis: A woman prime minister: I will tell the member this: She would be a far superior prime minister of this province than his leader, who happens to be in Washington today.

Mr. Foulds: Why are you relieving her of these responsibilities?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Davis: They are embarrassed because the member for York South (Mr. Rae) was in Dallas yesterday and is in Washington today. Does he not know the politics of Ontario are here?

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Ashe: Why do you feel guilty over there?

Mr. R. F. Johnston: Give her the job.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The members can ask these questions at the appropriate time. Statements by the ministry; the Premier.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Women now represent some 42 per cent of our province's labour force and some 56 per cent of all women work outside their homes. This is a trend that it is obvious will continue.

These changes and increased opportunities for women have been reflected in legislation, in policy and in expenditures by this government. I need not remind members of this House, for example, that the Family Law Reform Act and the Human Rights Code in this province introduced landmark reforms in Canada. This government has been sensitive to the particular needs of women in many other areas as well.

My responsibilities as Premier, reinforced by my experience at home, have caused me to develop a personal interest and concern for the cause of equality of opportunity for women in our schools, in our offices and factories, and in our institutions.

As someone engaged in public life, I recognize the great contributions of women to our labour force, and the potential for even greater involvement as we work together to eliminate those factors that now deny full and equal participation. I am keenly aware that Ontario needs the creative powers and hard work of all its citizens.

In my view, achieving full equality for women is vital to the equity and fairness on which our society is based. I believe we, as a people, can all be proud of the progress we have made as we recommit ourselves to fostering this objective.

It is increasingly apparent, I believe, that many issues of particular interest and concern to women are widely based, affecting several ministries, often at more than one level of government. Therefore we will proceed immediately with the recommendation that a minister be named responsible for women's issues, to provide a needed focus and a co-ordinating role in the delivery and communication of programs and policies designed to assist and encourage women in all aspects of life.

One of the minister's first duties will be to represent Ontario at a national meeting of ministers responsible for women's issues in Ottawa later this month. The minister will, of course, be a voice in cabinet on all issues of interest and concern to women. In partnership with others, this minister will also have the challenging task of analysing all proposals for their effect on women and recommending how these can best be implemented.

In the speech from the throne, the government indicated its intention to appoint a senior minister to undertake this responsibility. I am pleased to inform the House, therefore, that my most senior colleague in cabinet, the member for Brock (Mr. Welch), has agreed to become the minister responsible for women's issues.

This assignment will be in addition to his current responsibilities as Deputy Premier and Minister of Energy. I need not remind this House of the long and committed service of the member for Brock. I am convinced the experience he has gained from the many portfolios he has headed will serve him well in his new responsibilities.

He has demonstrated a long-standing interest in those issues of particular concern to women. It was the member for Brock who, as Attorney General, began the process of family law reform in Ontario. It was he who, as Provincial Secretary for Social Development, introduced a green paper on equal opportunity for women in Ontario, which served to focus public attention and debate.

His great compassion, sensitivity and commitment to human rights are well known throughout Ontario and will continue to serve all the people of Ontario in his new capacity. As I said at the outset, I believe that by achieving the goals of greater equity and fairness to women, we can build a society that is more equitable and fair to all its citizens.

I know members of this House now join me in assuring the minister of our full and enthusiastic support, and our best wishes for much success in discharging this new and significant responsibility.

I want to quote a former chairman of the advisory committee who has said, "The Honourable Robert Welch has been a tower of strength to this council, first as our minister, then as Attorney General. His indefatigable and resolute going to the people in every nook and cranny of Ontario with a film on matrimonial property must be applauded. He promised to listen to the women of Ontario. He will; he is that kind of person. We commend him."

ORAL QUESTIONS

WOMEN'S ISSUES

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, let me say at the outset I am somewhat confused, because I was under the impression the policy secretaries were in fact the senior ministers of the crown in the government. However, under the circumstances, I would like to congratulate the new minister. It is a very significant and important step forward, and we fully expect he will show the same concern as his predecessor always had for these issues of urgent and pressing concern for this province.

We have had only a very vague statement about the responsibilities the minister will assume, and therefore I would like to ask him if it is now his intention to consolidate some of the various issues into one portfolio. Will he be responsible for the Ontario Status of Women Council, as well as day care, the affirmative action program, the employment standards branch and a variety of other programs pertaining specifically to women in the work force as well as in the public service? What will his priorities be as the new minister in charge of women's issues in this province?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I think perhaps the Leader of the Opposition will appreciate that, having received this assignment, it will be wise for me to consult with leaders who have taken responsible positions on these issues both in and out of government. Therefore the first round of consultative meetings will start tomorrow.

The Leader of the Opposition has been quite correct in pointing out the various activities within various ministries. This explains, really, why the Premier (Mr. Davis) was very anxious to have a focus and a co-ordinating organization of some kind to bring together all the activities that have been going on in several ministries of this government over the years.

The ultimate structure that will be designed would perhaps best await these consultations and the results of an examination of the various functions that is at present being carried out. I attach a great deal of importance to starting out by consulting with those who have been involved in this work. Number one on my list will be my distinguished predecessor in this responsibility, the Provincial Secretary for Social Development (Mrs. Birch), who has given such great leadership and has brought her style to bear on this.

I want to indicate that I want to be very co-operative with the government of Canada, which has a focus and a co-ordinating structure as well, together with a number of other organizations. Then I think I would perhaps be in a much better position to recommend to the Premier what should be put in place in order to translate the mandate in some very real and positive way.

In summary, the emphasis now is that we have a sharper focus on it. Indeed, the responsibility of the minister will be to put in place a structure that will co-ordinate all of the many activities at present going on in several ministries of the government.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, I apologize. From press reports, I was under the impression that the minister had been briefed by Sally Barnes yesterday and therefore knew all the issues concerned. However, we will give him time to inform himself of the various issues in his new role.

But when he is analysing his own responsibilities, instead of just putting a new structure on some old programs, would the minister specifically promise this House that he will address those problems—particularly, for example, in his own Ministry of Energy?

According to the latest Status of Women Crown Employees report for the year 1981-82, of 73 women employed by his ministry, 50 hold clerical positions or are in the office service category. Women in his ministry earn an average salary of some $18,189, which is 48.5 per cent of that earned by men in his ministry, which averages out to some $37,525.

With respect to the training and development money in his ministry, although women make up some 50 per cent of the work force in the Ministry of Energy, they receive only some 31.6 per cent of the training dollars, even lower than the 41 per cent spent a year previously.

Would the minister, as he is trying to establish his good faith in this movement and become the new principal spokesman for the government, address his mind to the problems in his other responsibility of Minister of Energy?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I am very pleased the Leader of the Opposition has raised this point, because it does help to illustrate what one of the high-priority issues will be as far as this work is concerned.

The member singles out the Ministry of Energy. That is fair; indeed, I have made it my business to go into these particular facts and figures. The Leader of the Opposition would be fair enough to appreciate that in a ministry such as Energy there is proportionally a very small middle-management group. There is a very large concentration of professional people in a ministry such as Energy, and when one understands that, it helps to underline in a very real way the tremendous importance that has to be placed on bringing into even sharper focus the need for more women to be pursuing careers in the other professions.

As we know, there are increasing numbers of women in medicine and law, but when one thinks of engineering and some of the other professions, I think all would agree that more progress has to be made in convincing women that they can see fulfilling career opportunities in these other professions. That is manifesting itself in my ministry, where there is such a high proportion of professional people.

So I would attach a very high priority to what the member says in so far as occupational emphasis is concerned and women themselves being encouraged to pursue careers in those other professions.

The Leader of the Opposition made some reference to issues, and perhaps in my haste to speak only in answer to his main question with respect to organizational matters I overlooked the fact that he did raise some questions about issues. There is no question there is a great deal of work to be done, building on what has already been done in the area of pensions and pension reform. This was referred to both in the speech from the throne and by the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) in his budget. The member opposite has been assured that there will be further statements on this.

There is the whole area of part-time work, the whole area of further reforms in family law and in skills training, the impact on women of the whole area of high technology and the commitment in the budget of the Treasurer for some $4 million to be made available for skills training there. One could go on.

I want to assure the member that the emphasis, I hope with his encouragement and support, will be positive and progressive in the interests of those who are looking for leadership here for this type of encouragement.

Ms. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the Premier's announcement today about the appointment of a senior cabinet minister, the member for Brock (Mr. Welch), as a spokesperson on women's issues, although I am surprised it took him about a month to fulfil this promise made in the throne speech, and many years to recognize it is essential to have a minister responsible for women's issues in the same way as our party has had a person responsible solely for women's issues for several years.

I am disappointed the Premier's announcement did not include notification that he had relieved the member of any of his other responsibilities as Deputy Premier and Minister of Energy. I would like to ask the minister if he can tell us just how much time he expects to be able to devote to his new responsibility. Will he have a staff to assist him, and can we expect some new legislation in the women's issues field this session?

Mr. Speaker: There were three questions there and I would ask the minister to address his attention to the last one please.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, in response to the honourable member's question, I do want to underline what I have already indicated to her in writing—that I am anxious to meet with her as soon as convenient to have the benefit of her views on a number of issues, I do respect the fact that she has devoted a great deal of time to this whole area of women's issues, and I am sure I will benefit greatly from having the opportunity to review them.

Certainly the Premier has assured me I will have the resources that will be necessary in these early stages to bring together people who will be helpful in discharging the responsibilities he has assigned to me. I can assure the honourable member that with the help of those who will be brought together in this organization, we will then be in a better position some weeks from now to make some more specific recommendations with respect to structure.

The emphasis is to get on with the job, to build on what has already been done, to consult with those, such as the member for Beaches-Woodbine, who have a very keen interest in these issues, and I hope to make some real progress.

Mr. Wrye: Mr. Speaker, while the minister is newly appointed today to this job, he has been a long-time member of cabinet and undoubtedly has had some input into some of the major directions the cabinet has taken. I want to remind him that back in April of last year the Advisory Council on Equal Opportunity for Women, followed later by the Ontario Status of Women Council, suggested to his colleague the Minister of Labour (Mr. Ramsay) that—

Mr. Speaker: I will ask the honourable member to place his question please. The standing orders do not provide for any statements of fact or opinions.

Mr. Wrye: I am just trying to remind him of the background.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure he is aware. Please place your question.

Mr. Wrye: The Minister of Labour was advised that voluntary affirmative action had failed and both organizations suggested that mandatory affirmative action be implemented. The Minister of Labour said that while he clearly recognized the necessity, he did not believe—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Will the honourable member please place his question without any further delay.

Mr. Wrye: Can the minister share with us his preliminary observations on whether the time has not now come to move towards mandatory affirmative action?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I think it would be premature on my part to really share any judgement on that particular issue until I have had an opportunity to get an update on this. In fairness, tribute should be paid to my colleague the Minister of Labour who has spent a great deal of time on many of these issues. A tremendous amount of progress has been realized through the voluntary approach.

I am sure the honourable member would be the first to know that a very meaningful way to accomplish goals and objectives is to work from an educative and persuasive point of view to convince people with respect to adopting this and working with it, but I must tell him that I come into this responsibility quite prepared to be persuaded on a number of issues.

The important emphasis in this, and I am sure the member for Hamilton Centre (Ms. Copps) will agree with me, is to give some real meaning and substance to the term "equal opportunity." That is what we are about, that is why we are here: because we agree on this whole concept of equal opportunity for women. Indeed, we want to make sure that we remove any impediment that would stand in the way of their accomplishing that.

2:30 p.m.

TOXIC WASTE DISPOSAL

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, the minister really is wonderful. That was a great speech and I want to congratulate him.

I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. He is aware, I am sure, of the press conference this morning held by Dr. Chant and the Ontario Waste Management Corp. I gather they are moving towards some resolution of the difficult problems they are wrestling with.

What was most disturbing coming out of that press conference is that Dr. Chant's time line now is about four years, and according to his figures, we are still dumping about 750,000 long tons of poisonous toxic waste in a variety of places in Ontario on an annual basis—in sewer systems, lakes, landfill sites and who knows where. That means in the next four years another three million long tons will be dumped in this province in these same places; presumably, in many instances, in very unsafe and dangerous places.

What strategy does the minister have to deal with these problems until the completion of that facility?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, the honourable member would be well served and would also serve the public of Ontario well if he took the time to sit down—and I would be quite prepared to assign the staff of my ministry to sit down with him if he likes—to review what Dr. Chant and the Ontario Waste Management Corp. are referring to when they mention those kinds of figures. In most instances—I think it is safe to say in all instances—it is not the poisonous, toxic material the member is describing that is being dumped everywhere in the province.

There are a variety of classifications of waste in this particularly sensitive area. It is true there are some classifications of liquid industrial waste that are highly toxic. By and large, the most toxic ones are not being dumped. Some are being treated; in fact, a very considerable proportion at present is being treated in the province in places such as the Tricil facility in Lambton county.

There are some less harmful liquid wastes—and the member must not assume that all liquids fall into the category that he has just described—that are still going into some six or seven landfill sites which have been examined and are approved for that purpose.

I was not present at the press conference, but I understand there are a number of industrial sludges that have been included by the waste management corporation in its calculations. Those industrial sludges are regarded by many people as not suitable for categorization as hazardous materials.

There have been ongoing discussions between the staff of the waste management corporation and the staff of my ministry since one of the earlier reports of the waste management corporation in which there was a very large figure for unaccounted-for waste. All those figures are currently under review because it appears the consultants used an erroneous method to collect the data; we know they erred very substantially in some communities. We have done actual industry-by-industry surveys that demonstrate the consultants' figures were quite erroneous.

Mr. Peterson: If there is no problem, why is the minister going ahead with the waste management facility?

Hon. Mr. Norton: I did not say there was no problem. For example, polychlorinated biphenyls are being stored in this province, as I think the member is aware, in places like Smithville. Ontario Hydro has a site or two where they are being stored. We must find appropriate ways to destroy those, but in the interim they are being stored. Certain other materials are being stored at present, and we will be diverting other materials, as the time is appropriate, into the waste stream that will be handled by the waste management corporation.

I have never said there is not a problem. All I am saying is that the kind of exaggerated and distorted statement emanating from the member, for example, in the question he raised this afternoon, serves no one well and does not communicate accurate information to the public. The problem is being addressed and will be addressed in plenty of time.

Mr. Charlton: Mr. Speaker, regardless of the extent of the problem, there is a problem out there. There are some toxic wastes that are not now being stored that perhaps should be. Is the ministry developing interim plans for dealing with some of the problem areas in the time frame between now and getting the waste management corporation operation in place?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, we are certainly looking at a variety of things; for example, effective methods of PCB destruction. We have almost completed the guidelines that will be subject to an environmental assessment, which I hope will lead to the utilization of available technology in the destruction of PCBs before the end of this year. In the interim we will continue to look at any available method to safely dispose of hazardous or potentially hazardous materials.

To suggest there is a rampant problem out there is not correct—

Mr. Swart: Time.

Mr. Speaker: Thank you. The minister has answered the question.

Mr. Elston: Mr. Speaker, the minister will be told shortly, if he has not yet been told, that Dr. Chant has indicated there has been some consultation between himself and his ministry with respect to the numbers. Dr. Chant indicated today that no information was presented to him that would dissuade him from his original contention that half of the 1.5 million long tons of generated waste for which his corporation was responsible would not be treated.

I challenge the Minister of the Environment to reduce the 750,000 tons, which my leader spoke about, by half between now and 1986-87. Can the ministry reduce those wastes by half in that time?

Hon. Mr. Norton: That is a very interesting question, Mr. Speaker. How long do I have?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: You have 39 minutes and 27 seconds.

Hon. Mr. Norton: It is a very complicated question. I am not sure whence that question emanated, where the magic figure of a 50 per cent reduction came from. Is the honourable member suggesting I eat it?

There is a problem in terms of volume of waste, no question about it. Major strides have been taken in terms of recycling some of that waste, particularly oily wastes. That has now given rise to two new industries in Ontario that are thriving on the recycling of oily wastes.

We will continue to work with industries to try to generate that kind of utilization of organic waste material. Whether we can achieve a 50 per cent reduction in that time frame, I do not know, unless the member is suggesting we start shutting down industry in the province.

2:40 p.m.

WOMEN APPRENTICES

Ms. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the newly named spokesperson on women's issues. The reason I had hoped the minister chosen for this post would have been relieved of his other portfolio responsibilities is that women in Ontario occupy a second-class position in many fields.

Specifically, I want to ask the minister what is happening in the apprenticeship training field. Recent statistics from the Ontario government indicate that there are 856 fewer women apprentices now in Ontario than in 1981 and that whereas there has been an increase of nine per cent in total apprentices, there has been a 44 per cent decrease in women apprentices. We seem to be moving backwards in training women for skilled jobs.

What steps will the minister consider to ensure full access to mandatory skills training programs?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, as the honourable member will recall in response to the main question of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Peterson), there was some emphasis placed on this whole question of skills training. Indeed, as the member will recall, the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) has made an allocation of some $4 million in this year's budget, with a special emphasis on this idea of skills training. That will be administered, as the member knows, by the Minister of Colleges and Universities (Miss Stephenson).

I have no reason to want to dispute the figures mentioned by the member. What we have before us is a golden opportunity to impress upon guidance counsellors and people involved in the education system to ensure there is a broadening of the horizons with respect to the career opportunities that women see for themselves. I think that is a very important point.

I hope the resources which the Minister of Colleges and Universities has and this whole concern that is being expressed with respect to the impact of the advances in high technology, particularly on women, will provide us with an opportunity to attach an even higher priority to getting busy in the area to which the member makes reference.

As we reflect upon where we are, I point out to her that I think it was my colleague the member for Lincoln (Mr. Andrewes), when he was making his very excellent contribution in the throne speech debate on May 3, who used that opportunity to draw attention to this whole area of women's issues and brought us up to date on some of the progress that was being made. I commend him for that speech and for having included this particular area as part of his interest.

But I go back to what the member has urged on us and would attach some very high priority to that particular concern.

Ms. Bryden: I fail to see how it is a very high priority to provide skills training for women when the Treasurer said in his budget that he was going to introduce a number of new skills training initiatives in certain fields, only one of which would be for women. He did not give any specifics as to what that field was or what any of the other fields were either. That kind of vague promise from the Treasurer does not leave us with much to go on as to any action in this field.

Can the new spokesperson tell us whether he believes he can overcome the wage gap between men and women without adopting the principle of equal pay for work of equal value and mandatory affirmative action?

Hon. Mr. Welch: With the greatest respect, although I would like to address the matter, the supplementary is not related to the main question; it is a brand-new question. We were asked about—

Mr. Laughren: That's not for you to judge.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: Do you want to be Speaker too, as well as women's minister, Minister of Energy and Deputy Premier?

Hon. Mr. Welch: In all fairness, and I would hope that fairness would prevail, the main question was about the apprenticeship program; now we are talking about equal pay for work of equal value. I am simply asking whether that is supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Will the minister please not enter into debate? He may answer the question if he wishes.

Hon. Mr. Welch: If we are now talking about equal pay, I would think I would be correct in drawing to the member's attention the speech from the throne and the commitment of the government to want to continue whatever steps are going to be necessary to close the gap in salaries or wages earned by men and women. That commitment is set out there.

There has been some interesting work done by the advisory council and by a number of others to take us from where we are now, as far as the equal pay provisions are concerned, although I must be very honest to share with members that I have not gone into all the intricacies and ramifications of the new composite test, which is seen as a progressive step towards a fuller realization and appreciation of some of the problems.

Ms. Bryden: It was promised a year ago.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Certainly as of this appointment today, I tell my friend, one of the matters on my agenda is to translate the commitment made in the speech from the throne to close that gap.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, when the minister made his comment earlier about the poor record, trying to justify the lousy record of his ministry in hiring women, in which he said most people working in capacities in his ministry are working as professionals, it reminded me a little of some years ago when the banks were looking for women for their boards of directors. They started by telling the women of this country that the reason they could not get women on their boards of directors was that they did not have women qualified for that.

In coming at this portfolio, the minister has to come at it with an open mind that there are women who are professionals who could be working in his ministry to clear up his record.

Mr. Speaker: Question, please.

Ms. Copps: If the minister is really serious in going by the voluntary method, expecting the people of this province will bring in equal pay for work of equal value, how can he justify the fact that in his own ministry his record is substantially lower than the provincial average? For every dollar paid to a man in his ministry, 48.5 cents is paid to a woman. This is substantially lower even than the provincial average, which is not adequate for women in this province. How can he justify that when his own record in his past ministries is not acceptable and is intolerable?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, in all fairness, I would think the honourable member would want to be accurate. As a follow-up to the question of the Leader of the Opposition when he made reference to my ministry, I was not using the question of professional recruitment as an excuse. I was pointing out that in the Ministry of Energy there is a predominance of engineers, and I invited the member to look at the record as to the number of women who are preparing themselves for that profession.

I welcome the comment, as I welcome this member's comment with respect to the need to be aggressive and on the job with respect to that, but by the same token we have to make sure young women are being encouraged to see career opportunities in those other professions, of which engineering is one. That is the point I was making.

Because of the large numbers of, say, engineers in the ministry, it is perhaps not fair to make those judgements about that ministry. We have very few in the so-called middle management group. I am not here to try to defend what the situation may be now. I am here, I hope with the member's support and encouragement, to make improvements and progress.

We have a choice. We can spend all our time here talking about yesterday or we can get on and build on what has happened and make an even brighter tomorrow as far as equality of opportunity is concerned.

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Speaker, can the minister give us a commitment today that he will take one concrete step before this House adjourns in June or July to improve the condition of women with respect to equal pay for work of equal value, affirmative action and skills training and to reverse the scandalously low number of women in executive positions in the public service of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, the honourable member has the commitment of this government with respect to the appointment announced by the Premier today, the statements made in the speech from the throne and the progressive steps we have already taken in the budget. After all, with respect to the business of the Canada pension plan, the commitment in the budget on pension reform which will be announced by the minister, the whole tone is progress. I am quite prepared to be judged some months from now on that, which will be the fair time.

INSPECTION OF NURSING HOMES

Mr. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Health with respect to violations of unenforced regulations of the Nursing Homes Act and regulations.

It being after six of the clock on Monday, and the report not having been delivered as promised, let me ask the minister, since we dealt with Country Place Nursing Home yesterday and the violations there—by the way, they are still delivering meals in a golf cart, I understand—can he confirm or deny that his inspectors found violations of the regulations at the Lakewood Nursing Home in Huntsville, specifically violations of subsection 56(12) of the regulations which require adult-sized beds for adult-sized residents—in other words, the beds were deficient in size—and of clause 56(c), having to do with the requirement that a resident who is in a restraint should have his position changed every hour by a registered nurse or a registered nursing assistant?

Can the minister confirm that those or other violations were found at Lakewood?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that there are some violations at Lakewood. I also want to apologize to the honourable member. I mentioned yesterday that I thought the information he had requested and I had undertaken to provide for him on three nursing homes several months ago had already been put in his hands. Later, when I asked why he had not had it, I discovered the answer was that since in all those cases it had been determined that indeed there were violations, our legal staff, pursuant to our instructions to move immediately where there were any violations throughout the system, had commenced certain proceedings in each of those cases, and therefore the distribution of some of the details could perhaps harm the ultimate success of the prosecutions we had undertaken.

That covers Country Place, which has indeed been charged. With regard to Lakewood, Barton Place and Good Samaritan, final decisions have not yet been taken, but they will be taken in the next day or two.

Mr. McClellan: My concern is very simple. As in the case of the Ark Eden Nursing Home, one is free to draw the inference that the violations in each of these nursing homes took place under the nose of Ministry of Health inspectors and that the violations were not brought into enforcement until the matters were raised in the Legislature.

I want to ask the minister whether that is the case. In Barton Place, Country Place, Lakewood or the Good Samaritan Nursing Home were there violations of the regulations that were known to the minister's inspectors before February 21 or 22?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: As the member knows, we began to increase our inspection opportunities as long as a year ago, when a special team was brought into the ministry on contract to begin to review all the nursing homes in the province. That process took a number of months last year; so the simple answer to his question is that the crackdown had begun almost a year before the question was raised in this House. It took us most of last year to complete one inspection program of the province in some detail.

Finally, with regard to some of the other matters, those were done earlier this year. In the case of Country Place, which the member asked about, there have been six inspections done in the past month and a half.

Mr. McClellan: The minister is aware that as of April 14 the Ark Eden Nursing Home was still in violation of the act with respect to subsection 56(12), residents were still occupying cribs that were deficient in size, and the Ark Eden Nursing Home is still in violation even after the inquest.

Will the minister tell us whether it is true that there were adult-sized residents at the Lakewood Nursing Home living in infant-sized cribs, which, as the minister knows, produces curvature of the spine and respiratory difficulties? Can he tell us whether there are adult-sized residents at the Sunnyside Nursing Home at Sunderland who are living in infant-sized cribs?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: As I have indicated, if the member wants us to provide any details that our legal staff feel we can provide with regard to the new home he has raised this afternoon, we will try to provide them.

As I look briefly and quickly through the circumstances with regard to Lakewood, it appears that what we might call the crib or undersized bed problem is not one of those identified; but I would want to have another look at this in some more detail before I confirmed that.

ASSISTIVE DEVICES PROGRAM

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I also have a question for the Minister of Health in regard to his prosthetic devices program. The minister is aware that it has been close to a year and a half since his predecessor and the Provincial Secretary for Social Development (Mrs. Birch) announced a $13-million-a-year program to cover some 15,000 handicapped children in our province.

Is the minister aware that as of the end of March 1983, only 6,808 children, not even half the 15,000 in need of the program, had been covered at a cost of only $2,553,000 instead of the expected $13 million? Obviously the minister's program is being implemented very slowly, if at all.

Further, is the minister aware that the upkeep of a wheelchair over the three-year period which is allowed for in the program before replacement sometimes equals the cost of the device, that the life expectancy of a wheelchair is only between six months to a year and that batteries for mechanical chairs cost between $75 and $100 and have a life expectancy of two to five months?

Is he also aware that all maintenance costs and the cost of batteries have to be borne by the users?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, let us put the figures in some perspective. The phase-in period was well known when it began. That is, it was known it would take one year to phase in the entire program. No one in this House or anywhere else suggested that on July 1, 1982, there would be 10,000 or 15,000 young people covered on day one. The members of the advisory committee and the members of this House knew that.

A committee was set up so there could be an orderly and proper phase-in of the program as arrangements were made for each of the different devices. As of March 31—I think the figure the honourable member gave was somewhat low, but not that low—there were 6,445 covered; and without the introduction of some of the new programs that are coming on, just taking it on an annual level, that would indicate there would be 9,700 covered by the end of the first fiscal year. As well, with the visual aids program for which a subcommittee of the committee has been struck, if we introduce that as of September 1, 1983, that will add another 10,000 young people at one fell swoop.

All in all, wherever the member is getting his information, I think most members of the committee would report to him that there is an orderly and proper phase-in of the program, as was anticipated. It is not behind, either in numbers of people covered or in the moneys being spent.

Mr. T. P. Reid: It is nice that the minister, as usual, is so complacent about this, but there are a lot of people who need these devices. In view of the fact that the minister has got almost $10 million, regardless of what he is talking about as far as phasing in goes, it is obvious he is not going to find the 15,000 he was targeting. Once again I ask, will the minister consider expanding the program to cover those people who are over 18 years of age?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: When the program was introduced, my colleague indicated, and we have subsequently confirmed, that at the conclusion of one full year of operation there will be a total review of the program to see where, when and if the program should be expanded. I am also confident that at some stage, when we have got the necessary expertise and advice, there will be an expansion of this program.

I should also say the fact that as much moneys as anticipated may not be spent is due in part to the excellent work of the members of that advisory committee. It has turned out that some of the assistive devices have been obtained at more advantageous prices and under more advantageous arrangements than was the case in other provinces which leapt right into it without doing this kind of work in advance and ended up paying far more than was appropriate.

The extent to which the budget is not fully spent is something that is not a criticism, I take it, as long as the number of children who ought to be covered are being covered. We seem to be on target on that basis.

RIGHT TO REFUSE WORK

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour regarding the risk to the foetus of cytomegalovirus, or CMV, in that it can cause in utero death or severe retardation.

Does the minister not agree that any risk is too great for the three female teachers employed at the developmental day care centre of the Algoma District Mental Retardation Service in Sault Ste. Marie, since two are pregnant and one is planning a family? If so, will the minister intervene personally to ensure that these teachers are given the same rights to transfer as the female social workers of child-bearing age at the centre, who are represented by the Canadian Union of Public Employees, or at least are given the right of leave of absence at full pay?

3 p.m.

Hon. Mr. Ramsay: Mr. Speaker, in response to that question, I would advise the honourable member that I have already intervened personally. A meeting was arranged with the director for the board of education in Sault Ste. Marie, and it is my understanding that the concerns of the parties involved personally with this problem—and I share those concerns—are being addressed. The matter, if not resolved, is well on its way to being resolved. I am surprised to hear that question. It was my understanding that everything was straightened away.

Mr. Wildman: For the information of the minister, I was informed by the superintendent of personnel that the board of education and the Ministry of Community and Social Services had failed to work out an agreement on physical separation. As a matter of fact, the board of education has referred the matter to the regional office of the Ministry of Education in Sudbury. The teachers are on a temporary leave of absence with pay until the matter is resolved, but at this point it is not resolved.

Does the minister not agree that this case is similar to that of the pregnant worker at the Midwestern Regional Centre? That worker had the right to refuse unsafe work to protect her unborn child, under section 23 of the Occupational Health and Safety Act. Since teachers are excluded from the Occupational Health and Safety Act, they cannot protect themselves or their foetuses in the same way.

If the minister does agree, will he move quickly to amend the act to include teachers and all other workers who are not now covered, as recommended by the task force headed by my colleague the member for Sudbury East (Mr. Martel)?

Hon. Mr. Ramsay: The ministry, in consultation with the Ministry of Education, has been working towards exactly what the member is asking for; that is, coverage of teachers under the Occupational Health and Safety Act. We have that as an objective, and I am quite sure we are going to be able to reach that objective in the not-too-distant future.

Mr. Bradley: Mr. Speaker, is the minister prepared to allow me to ask a supplementary of the Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson). Is that all right with you, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: It is up to the minister to redirect if he so desires.

Hon. Mr. Ramsay: Mr. Speaker, I would just as soon the honourable member directed the question to me.

Mr. Bradley: I will direct it later to the Minister of Education.

HOSPITAL BEDS

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Health. His ministry has known for more than 10 years about the hospital bed shortage in Ottawa-Carleton. His own ministry's figures have brought out the fact that there is a shortage, at least this year and in 1982, of around 175 hospital beds. These are the figures published by his own ministry and by the Ottawa-Carleton Regional District Health Council. Yet the senior minister for Ottawa-Carleton does not buy these figures and is quoted as saying he does not believe there is a hospital bed shortage.

Given this situation, why would the minister refuse the new Ottawa General Hospital an additional 80 beds, for which apparently there is some $7 million available for construction? He would prefer, according to the reports, to see the money spent on what is called "community health care," when everybody in Ottawa-Carleton, including the district health council, says the highest priority should be to alleviate the hospital bed shortage.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, if the honourable member would read some of the comments made by his Health critic, he would learn that some of the community-based programs we have been talking about, which the New Democratic Party Health critic and I have been pushing for and trying to introduce, do alleviate the bed shortage. They enable people to stay in their homes, to be discharged from the hospital area and to make and be given better use of community resources.

The geriatric assessment program that is going into place at the Ottawa Civic Hospital, with the support of this government, will be one of the great milestones in this province in terms of making sure that a better assessment is made of those people currently in hospital who could be discharged and that they are sent to places, be it homes, community programs or other institutions, where they will have more appropriate treatment and thus alleviating some of the bed pressures that may be existing in Ottawa.

Most other areas of the province would like to get that sort of service. The Ottawa-Carleton Regional District Health Council in Ottawa has been pushing very strongly for it. In fact, that was the subject of its recent meeting in my office.

I also wish to take this opportunity to correct the record, Mr. Speaker. Not only has my colleague the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing (Mr. Bennett) been speaking to me about this matter for many months—long before the member dropped in this afternoon, having read this in the Ottawa Citizen—but also all my colleagues from the Ottawa area have been talking to us about this problem.

As a result, in addition to the geriatric assessment program, which will alleviate pressure on those beds, the Elisabeth Bruyère Health Centre has just opened 98 chronic care beds. Also, we are adding a palliative unit of 30 more beds; the geriatric assessment unit is 18 beds; 29 cardiac beds are being planned at the Civic and could open in September.

Later, the Civic will reopen 70 acute beds that were temporarily closed for renovations. Ambulatory care improvements will take place at Hal Montfort and the Salvation Army Grace General Hospital. The Royal Ottawa Hospital has expanded some of its outpatient services, which again will alleviate some pressures, and St. Vincent Hospital will receive $1.25 million.

Mr. Martel: Is this a statement?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It is a complete answer to the shallow allegations being made that the answer to the pressures in Ottawa would be to move to a strict bed guideline.

Having listened to the debates in this House, I would have to say that, with the exception of the member for Ottawa East (Mr. Roy), everyone has agreed the way to go in this province is to community-based programs, outpatient programs and the kinds of things we are doing in Ottawa rather than putting in more beds.

Mr. Roy: I am glad to hear the minister say his Conservative colleagues have lobbied effectively to see that there are additional hospital beds in Ottawa, because in yesterday's Ottawa Citizen the editorial said, "The attitude of local Conservative MPPs towards the well-documented problem of hospital bed shortages in Ottawa-Carleton is puzzling, to say the least."

That was what the Ottawa Citizen said about the minister's Conservative colleague.

Why will the minister not accept the recommendations of the Ottawa-Carleton Regional District Health Council and of committees in Ottawa which say clearly we are short 175 beds? Will the minister answer my question instead of just talking to the member for Ottawa South? Why will he not pay attention to my questions?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I heard the question very clearly. I am sure the minister did as well.

Mr. Roy: He was talking to the puzzling member for Ottawa South. May I complete my question, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: I think you did. I heard it very clearly.

Mr. Roy: Not quite. My question is, will the minister allow the Ottawa General to build an additional 80 hospital health care beds?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There are not very many areas of the province for which the minister can stand up and recite the number of new beds, which I think total 147, as I recited them a moment ago—

Mr. Roy: Is that why the minister was reading the answer?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If the member wants to talk about reaching the provincial average, let me tell him—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. That was not the question, with all respect.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, since the minister is making it quite clear that he is not prepared to bring Ottawa-Carleton up to the provincial average in terms of hospital beds provided, and since I presume he intends that Ottawa-Carleton is to be treated on a basis of equality with the rest of the province, is he now saying it is government policy that there are to be further cutbacks in active hospital treatment beds across the rest of the province?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I knew I would get the opportunity, and I thank the honourable member. In terms of the member making his final assessment with regard to overbedding or underbedding, there are two things he ought to keep in mind. First, there is the new hospital that is being built on the Quebec border. The member knows very well that will alleviate perhaps all the pressures and entirely change the ratio.

Mr. Roy: That's not what the health council says.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I hear a noise out of this ear.

Mr. Roy: Well, you should hear a noise.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Quite obviously, they do not want an answer.

Interjections.

DONATIONS TO POLITICAL PARTIES

Mr. Philip: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. The minister is no doubt aware that municipal funds have been spent by Mr. Frank Biss, Peterborough director of development and a prominent Conservative, to attend $150 per plate Tory dinners for the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) and the Minister of Health (Mr. Grossman). Does the municipal affairs minister not agree that making donations to the Conservative Party or to any other party is inappropriate use of municipal funds, and will he initiate a public inquiry under the Public Inquiries Act into this abuse as has been suggested by a number of residents of the city of Peterborough?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest if there is some wrong use of municipal funds, that is entirely a municipal responsibility. I have not received any request.

Mr. Philip: I wonder if the minister realizes that under section 17 of the Election Finances Reform Act, corporations may make contributions to political parties. Does the minister feel that municipal corporations should have that privilege or does he feel an amendment is perhaps in order to exclude municipal corporations from giving funds to the Conservative Party?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Let us go back for a moment. The very party now asking a question wants to have autonomy at the municipal level to make decisions by council. I trust this expenditure must go through the municipality at some point or other. Whether it has or not I do not know, but I am clearly saying it is the municipal council's responsibility, if it is levying funds to operate its industrial commission, to review those expenditures. I do not know whether the municipal council has approved it. I am suggesting to the member if he wants autonomy at the municipal level, then if the council has approved those expenditures, so be it. I have not had a request from any party at this point to examine any funds that have been expended—

Mr. R. F. Johnston: You just got one.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Just one moment; I have not had any request from that community at this point to review any of the expenditures of that commission.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the minister is aware of the situation. It obviously raises a number of implications, presumably many of which we will review as we look at amendments to the act. Has he, and if he has not, will he request the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) or the law officers of the crown to see if there have been any violations of the Election Finances Reform Act. I am referring specifically to subsection 20(1) in this particular case. Will he request that review to see if there have been any violations of the law?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to request a review of the situation if there seems to be an outstanding situation. Let me add only one other comment. Most of the industrial commissions that exist in this province, that is at the municipal level, do not exist entirely on municipal funds. There are contributions by the private sector to some of them to maintain the viability of their communities. The board of commissioners or directors of those corporations, generally speaking, are composed of members of council and the private sector. I am prepared to look at the situation.

Mr. O'Neil: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege: While we are on this point, the minister has just made a statement. I would like to accuse him of using funds from his ministry for political purposes, in that when he sends out or gives out cheques, or there are moneys being given to certain ridings, that he only allows his—

Mr. Speaker: Order, the member for Quinte; new question.

The minister, a point of privilege.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege: Since it has now been indicated by the member for Quinte that I have taken some privileges he believes I am not entitled to, as a minister of this government, I want to suggest to you, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I just ruled that it was not a point of privilege.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: But, Mr. Speaker, the accusation has gone into the record, unless the member wants to strike it out—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps you would like to correct the record.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, I would correct the record by saying that I never want to embarrass an opposition member in delivering any kind of a program on behalf of this government, which the members opposite so seldom want to support at any time.

Mr. O'Neil: On that same point of privilege. When the minister goes into our riding—

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is not a point of privilege.

Mr. O'Neil: I believe it is a point of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: No, it is not, with all respect. Order. The honourable member will resume his seat, please.

Mr. O'Neil: Mr. Speaker, I would like to correct the record.

Mr. Speaker: Order. You cannot correct the record on behalf of somebody else. This is getting into a debate, so we will have a new question.

FRENCH-LANGUAGE SERVICES

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Deputy Premier in the absence of the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. Wells). I wonder if the Deputy Premier would be aware that last week the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs tabled the annual report of the office of the government co-ordinator of French-language services in this Legislature.

On page 15, the report states, "The government policy and budget commitment to the expansion of French-language services is a high priority." On page 28 of the same report it quotes the Solicitor General (Mr. G. W. Taylor) as saying, "The ministry is pursuing this program to recruit provincial police officers with French-language capability."

If such is the commitment of the government, can the Deputy Premier tell us why, after the wife battering report stated there is "a severe lack of French-language services in the Ontario Provincial Police," the Solicitor General stated in a letter to me on January 28 that "No further advertising to attract bilingual candidates would be contemplated" and he was satisfied that less than 10 per cent of the applications came from bilingual officers?

Is the Deputy Premier satisfied with that or what does he intend to do about it?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I would be very happy to discuss this matter further with the Solicitor General. I think the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs, who has returned to his seat, would be the first to point out to the honourable member that the overall report shows significant progress in positioning services to accommodate the French-speaking population of the province.

REPORT

SELECT COMMITTEE ON THE OMBUDSMAN

Mr. Runciman: Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a special report from the select committee on the Ombudsman and move adoption of its recommendations.

This is not the sort of report from the Ombudsman's committee with which members are familiar. It is a special report on the ways in which the assembly may act to make its voice heard against political killings, imprisonment, terror and torture. This stems from a resolution brought forward by the member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick).

I would urge all members to take 10 minutes or so to read this brief report. In it we explain why the committee, along with the government of Canada, believes that although foreign policy is properly the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada, there is an important and useful role for the Ontario Legislature in speaking out against violations of human rights throughout the world. We also indicate a number of possible methods the assembly may choose for fulfilling this role. The committee looks forward to hearing a debate on this report.

On motion by Mr. Runciman, the debate was adjourned.

3:20 p.m.

INTRODUCTION OF BILL

INCORPORATION OF VAL RITA-HARTY ACT

Mr. Piché moved, seconded by Mr. Eves, first reading of Bill Pr25, An Act to continue the Corporation of the Township of Owens, Williamson and Idington under the name of the Corporation of the Township of Val Rita-Harty.

Motion agreed to.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

MISSIONARY CHURCH, CANADA EAST ACT

Mrs. Scrivener moved second reading of Bill Pr4, An Act respecting the Missionary Church, Canada East.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

DAVE HOLLIDAY LIMITED ACT

Mr. McKessock moved second reading of Bill

Pr8, An Act to revive Dave Holliday Limited.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

THUNDER BAY UNITED CHURCH CAMPS INCORPORATED ACT

Mr. Hennessy moved second reading of Bill Pr10, An Act to revive Thunder Bay United Church Camps Incorporated.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

THOMAS-HAMILTON-WEBBER LIMITED ACT

Mr. Breithaupt moved, on behalf of Mr. Van Horne, second reading of Bill Pr11, An Act to revive Thomas-Hamilton-Webber Limited.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

CHURCH OF THE VIRGIN MARY AND ST. ATHANASIUS ACT

Mr. Kennedy moved, on behalf of Mr. Jones, second reading of Bill Pr16, An Act to revive Coptic Orthodox Patriarchate of Alexandria, the Church of the Virgin Mary and St. Athanasius.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

THIRD READING

The following bill was given third reading on motion:

Bill 7, An Act to incorporate the Toronto Futures Exchange.

LANDLORD AND TENANT AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. McMurtry moved second reading of Bill 32, An Act to amend the Landlord and Tenant Act.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I want to speak on this bill.

Mr. Speaker: Sorry. The member for Waterloo North (Mr. Epp) was up first, and I did not see him.

Mr. Cassidy: He is just short, that's all.

Mr. Speaker: No, he is not. It is the rims on my glasses.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I had thought the minister was going to make a statement on this. Is he prepared to make a statement on the bill, or is he just going to introduce it?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, I have no opening statement. I really have nothing to add to what I said when I introduced the legislation last week.

Mr. Epp: I am pleased to be able to speak to this bill and indicate from the outset that my party will be supporting the proposed legislation, although we will have some amendments to make at the appropriate time.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, we have supported the rent review legislation for some time. I might draw to the attention of the members that it was my colleague the former member for St. George who introduced a private member's bill back in the early 1970s that first got on record the principle of rent review. It was only after that the New Democratic Party adopted this particular policy. So that being—

Mr. Cassidy: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Epp: Oh, he woke up.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order: If I might correct the record, my bill proposing rent review in Ontario was presented for first reading in this Legislature and debated before the member for St. George was even elected to the Legislature.

The Deputy Speaker: I do not know if that is a point of order or not, but it is on the record.

Mr. Epp: It may be a point of order, but it is not true. Anyway—

Mr. Stokes: Try to be factual.

Mr. Epp: I am. That's what I am trying to do.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Don't provoke them.

3:30 p.m.

Mr. Epp: Irrespective of what the honourable member from the third party says, we are very much in support of this bill and we want to indicate that the government has not gone far enough with respect to legislation governing rent review.

We know, for instance, that we had a restraint bill here about six months ago, and at that time it was fully debated. We introduced some amendments at that time. Members will recall that we took the position that we supported the five per cent restraint legislation.

The legislation covered financial costs but did not cover operational costs. We felt at that time and we still feel that when you are going to have restraint on a particular piece of legislation, that legislation should extend to the operations, because if people's wages are going to be limited to five per cent, there is no differentiation made in where their money goes, whether into financing or into operations. Therefore, we feel very strongly that the government should take it upon themselves to extend that legislation.

Of course, the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) understands this very well, because he has a number of tenants in his own constituency of Eglinton, and I hope he feels he should support this kind of legislation. So we feel the government should in the future embark upon a more extended course and bring in amended legislation.

The other matter we would like to draw to his attention is the fact of the registry. As members know, the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Elgie) has pigeon-holed this particular suggestion for some months now. In fact, the government has not done anything on it since it was suggested in the standing committee on general government back in 1978, when Bill 163 was being debated.

We feel a registry should be kept where rents would be itemized and tenants could see the different rents that other people pay, so that some people are not, so to speak, ripped off, as they are now because they do not have any idea of what the person paid before in that particular unit. It would be very easy for the government to implement this in the various apartment buildings across the province, in the several thousand apartment buildings that are located both in Toronto and outside Metropolitan Toronto.

So we urge the government to take this suggestion seriously and not to wait until two or three years hence. Eventually they will have to implement it. If they do not implement it within two years, they will not have to worry about it because we on this side of the House will implement it.

So they have an opportunity to go on record as implementing a very good suggestion; but if they care to leave it too long, then they will lose their opportunity. You know what I am referring to, Mr. Speaker, and you may be in a position where you will not even have a chance to vote on it. Who knows?

The third thing I would like to point out is on demolition control. A private bill was suggested to the Legislature more than a year ago to have some control over demolition so developers could not just take a building, demolish it and thereby eliminate X number of units from the rental market. As members know, we have a vacancy rate of less than one per cent in Toronto, and I know the Attorney General is very attentive to this matter.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Just off the record, who was the fellow you introduced me to in Ottawa at the constitutional conference—the president of some association?

Mr. Epp: Did I introduce you to the Prime Minister?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: No. Some fellow who was there. I just wanted to get his name.

Mr. Epp: Why don't you send me a note?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I wanted to send him a transcript of your comments on property rights.

Mr. Epp: Yes. You support that and I support it.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I just wonder, as long as you're being able to reconcile everything you're saying now.

Mr. Epp: Oh, I don't think that is inconsistent at all. You know it is not inconsistent, otherwise you would not be supporting these amendments and would not be supporting the principle of property rights. As you know, I had a resolution on the order paper—in fact, I still have it. I know you would not support anything inconsistent, and since you are supporting both those suggestions, then there was no problem.

Now, to deal with demolition control, before the Attorney General interrupted me—and I know he will be supporting this private bill in the future if he has not supported it in the past. It is to prevent many valuable units from being taken out of the market because some developers demolish buildings for whatever reason.

One of the suggestions is not to demolish just any building, and part of that principle was that they would not be able to demolish buildings if the number of units represented more than half of what is permitted under a zoning change in a particular municipality. Toronto has asked for that.

I know some of the colleagues of the Attorney General support that bill. I wish he would not embarrass his colleagues by being slow in introducing and supporting that legislation. They are putting pressure on him. It would make it easier for him and his family, himself and 69 members, if they were to support that bill. I look forward to his introducing that government legislation in the House again or supporting the private bill.

This bill will prevent some of the landlords from converting apartment buildings to condominium-style buildings. Unfortunately, in any kind of legislation, what has happened and will happen in this case, is that some people who have purchased some buildings, maybe for only a few people, and legitimately tried to convert them because their own group or families wanted to participate in the ownership and move in, are going to be hurt.

What has happened is that some of the developers and landlords and so forth who have bought big buildings and converted them to condominium-style complexes have hurt many of the tenants. The tenants have been evicted on short notice and because of the low vacancy rate, they have not been able to find similar accommodation at a similar rate in the neighbourhood in which they chose to live. The Attorney General and his colleagues should take very seriously the proposals made by this party, the third party, as well as by many other groups that more incentives have to be built into the market so more apartment units will be built.

One of the reasons that the tenant problem is so acute, the problem of finding units, is that not enough units are being built in the province. There are all kinds of reasons we can give. I suppose one of the most important reasons in the last 10 years for not building apartment units is not rent review, as some people have suspected and suggested it is. It may be part of the problem. I will not say it is not part of the problem. But one of the major problems has been the high interest rates.

What the government could very well do is build in some kind of incentives—they have done some of it, but I do not think they have done enough—in order to build many of the apartment units people so badly require across the province. When one has a vacancy rate of less than one per cent, then one knows what kind of difficulties people have in trying to find a single apartment of two or three bedrooms.

In my own experience only a few years ago, trying to find an apartment in downtown Toronto was very difficult. I had to be on a waiting list for some months before I was able to find an apartment. The Speaker and other members may have had the same difficulty. This is often for a second residence and is not as acute for members of the Legislature as it is for the family who only seeks a single apartment in which to reside.

Another point I want to raise has to do with hotel conversions. There are a number of apartment owners who have chosen to convert their buildings into hotels. It has happened in the constituency we are in. It has happened in Parkdale where my colleague the member for Parkdale (Mr. Ruprecht) resides. It has happened in the Eglinton riding of the Attorney General. It has happened in almost every riding in Toronto.

3:40 p.m.

Owners take an apartment building, evict the tenants, put in their own furniture and then bring in new tenants who pay on a weekly or monthly basis, whatever the case may be. It is another excuse for increasing rents and evicting tenants who often cannot afford to pay the exorbitant rates chosen by the landlord. It is a form of ripoff that the new hotel owners often use. They often do not provide the facilities one would find in Sutton Place or other hotels where they have dining facilities and other facilities consistent with a hotel. All they do is call it a hotel and have regular apartments. The government should close this loophole that is obvious to everyone, but it is very reluctant to do so. I hoped when this legislation was introduced, it would have been a natural place to introduce legislation to close that loophole.

There is also a proposal in this bill that apartment buildings with fewer than six units be exempt from this legislation. We will be introducing an amendment to decrease that to four units. We will also be asking the government to refer this bill to a standing committee so people who want to speak, either in support of the legislation or in opposition to it, will have an opportunity to do so.

I want to make it very clear we are not asking to have the bill sitting in a committee for some weeks or months and not coming back to the Legislature. We feel very strongly that this legislation should be passed by the end of the month. A number of tenancies will be affected by it and we do not want people to be evicted for reasons of condominium-style conversions. We do, however, ask the government to refer this to a standing committee for a day or two and then bring it back to the House so it can receive third reading and royal assent.

Those are my comments at this time. I want to speak further on the amendment we will be proposing, but I hope to do that in the standing committee rather than in committee of the whole.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, my colleague the member for Etobicoke (Mr. Philip) will speak on this bill a little later. I would like to begin our contribution to this debate by paying him tribute for Bill 11, An Act to amend the Landlord and Tenant Act, from which the minister's bill has been copied. In the end, the minister chose to respond with a bill whose wording absolutely mimics Bill 11, which came from the member for Etobicoke.

That member's bill was originally put forward in response to the problems that have been created by the court ruling, which permitted this purported occupation by somebody, the occupation of a whole building, where a group of people got together on a co-ownership, tenant-in-common arrangement. It is no surprise that the initiative originally came from here. In fact, there are a number of other related areas where I am sorry the minister has not chosen to act.

We share with the opposition and the government a desire that this particular loophole be closed quickly. There is a time element in this, because the application of the bill will be to any hearing that takes place after the bill has been proclaimed. Therefore, there is a note of urgency in all this. At the same time, I am disappointed that the government did not recognize long before now the difficulties we are having in areas where there is a substantial amount of rental accommodation. That includes my riding of Ottawa Centre and the region of Ottawa-Carleton as well as Toronto, Hamilton, Windsor, London and some other parts of the province. I am disappointed that the government chooses to act so slowly and with such reluctance when these problems come up, or to respond on such an ad hoc basis when it has been so clear for so long that we need more than just ad hocery to ensure a fair and equitable network of protection in implementing our commitments to protection of tenants in this province.

The spokesman for the Liberal Party has suggested the bill be referred out to committee. Since it is their prerogative to do so, I presume the bill will go to committee. If that is the case, we should make arrangements now by agreement within the parties so that the relevant committee is forewarned at this time and so that the committee will be enabled to have hearings at the earliest possible opportunity. When the bill goes out, if that is what is to be, there should be a deadline for it to come back in at the earliest possible time so that it is actually passed.

The problem is that there are other things my party and I would like to see happen with this bill, which are not going to be able to take place given the limitations on time. I would like to speak to those, though, because it seems to me it is important that the Attorney General know the kinds of problems we are experiencing with respect to tenants and with respect to actions by landlords, by lawyers, by developers and by speculators, which are having the effect of undermining the protections that were meant to be given by the Residential Tenancies Act and the Landlord and Tenant Act.

I was in my constituency yesterday and I went to see a constituent who had asked to see me. I sat down with this fellow in a small basement apartment and got chatting with him. This is one of hundreds of thousands of stories that could be told about Ontario today. This person had the misfortune to have been working with the Beach foundry when it shut down in November 1980. That was a part of the Admiral group. The mismanagement that led to the shutdown of Admiral in Mississauga was preceded by mismanagement that led to the shutdown of the company's factory in my riding in Ottawa Centre.

When this shutdown occurred, my constituent lost a good job that was paying $8 or $9 an hour, I am not sure which. Anyway, it was enough for him and his wife to be able to live comfortably and to be able to pay the rent. He was unemployed for most of a year after that. He finally got a job working as a cleaner, and just the other day he had an increase in his job that took him from $4.50 an hour to $5 an hour. His take-home pay is of the order of $340 every two weeks. His rent right now is $265, and his landlord has informed him that he is to be evicted with his wife at the end of June because the landlord wishes to acquire the basement apartment for the purpose, it is said, of renovation.

I suspect modest renovations will be done to the apartment and that subsequently it will be re-let at an extremely high rent. In the meantime this constituent, who is decent, hardworking, aged 47, may or may not be able to get a decent and secure job for the remaining 20 years of his working life, and he is now to be put on the street. He fears he may have to pay $350 or $400 a month in rent. How the devil is he going to be able to pay that when his take-home pay every two weeks is only $340? I do not know, but that is the kind of situation we are facing in my riding right now, and it is not addressed by this bill.

I met with a large group of constituents in the Mayfair Apartments on Metcalfe Street in downtown Ottawa. Some of them, including the former owner of the house I live in in Ottawa, have been living there for 10, 15, even 20 years or longer. It has been a stable group of tenants, some of them quite elderly. Along comes a new owner of the building, who suddenly passes around a notice saying, "We are awfully sorry, but the management has decided we are going to do some renovations, and you are going to have to get out."

When the tenants began to inquire into this, they found that before the notice was even given about these fake repairs to be made, the landlord had started to make a public offer for people to buy into the apartment on a tenant-in-common or co-ownership basis. The Ontario Securities Commission wanted to look at that. It has been a loophole that may have been closed for future applications.

3:50 p.m.

In the meantime the people who lived in that building have been kicked out. Other people, elderly tenants, were eventually told they could stay in return for agreeing to increases of up to double their existing rent, increases that are flagrantly illegal, but they simply fear too much to fight them. No action is being taken on legislation to prevent that kind of evasion taking place in the future.

The third thing, referred to briefly by my colleague from the Liberal Party, is the problem of conversion to apartment hotels. I have an apartment hotel in my riding. It is the Arosa Apartment Hotel, situated on MacLaren Street near Elgin in downtown Ottawa.

A year or a year and one half ago the apartments in that building were renting for $340 to $400 per month. The landlords then decided they would convert it to an apartment hotel. They successively converted the units as people moved out. They issued some eviction notices, if I recall correctly. Now those same apartments, with nothing done to them at all, are renting for as much as $40 per night. They rent on a monthly basis from $700 to as much as $1,200 per month, depending on how one chooses to rent them.

That has been deemed to be okay as far as the government is concerned. Somebody puts a few sticks of furniture into an apartment, calls it an apartment hotel, starts to rent it by the week or by the day or on a short-term basis and suddenly he has shaken himself free of the Landlord and Tenant Act and of rent review.

In the case of the Montebello Apartments, also in downtown Ottawa and also, as it happens, on MacLaren Street, the landlord has been systematically seeking to evict the tenants because of a change of use. The change is that the landlord wants to convert the building from rental residential property to an apartment hotel.

The fact is, the zoning in that area does not permit having an apartment hotel in the area, but that does not faze the landlord. There has been a series of court battles, and there are now about seven or eight tenants who are still hanging on and fighting, trying to establish in law that what the landlord is seeking to do is wrong and illegal.

In this case the building had something like 125 units. Most of the tenants were not in a position where they could afford the risks entailed in going through an eviction proceeding and trying to fight the eviction in court, in paying the legal fees and running the risk that if they lost, they would be put out on the street with perhaps a day's, a couple of days' or a week's notice to find alternative accommodation in an apartment market in Ottawa where the vacancy rate is currently between 0.2 per cent and 0.7 per cent, depending on which count is made.

That is the situation we face right now. The minister's amendments will not respond to the problems of the people in the Mayfair Apartments, the Arosa apartments and the Montebello Apartments. What they will do is respond to the needs of a narrowly defined class of situation, which was found in Metropolitan Toronto and which we have had the hint of happening in Ottawa as well. They do not respond to the overall problem.

Mr. Speaker, I am glad you are listening as attentively as you are. The overall problem is that, because of the failure of the government to have a commitment to prevent people from walking around rent review, all sorts of wide operators and fast-buck artists are seeking a way to evade the protections given to tenants in rent review and in the Landlord and Tenant Act. If you plug an individual loophole, they will come along and try to use another one.

That is what is happening now. I would contend very seriously that it is an extremely unfair situation as far as tenants are concerned. It does not represent what I thought the will of this Legislature was when we adopted rent review back in 1975. I believe it is also a situation that is inefficient in providing decent accommodation at a fair price, which should surely be our objective in Ontario.

When the minister goes back to his home and his riding, he must go up Avenue Road. If the member for Etobicoke (Mr. Philip) would stop talking with the minister for a minute, I would like to make a suggestion to the minister.

When he drives home up Avenue Road one evening, I would ask him to turn right at St. Clair Avenue.

Mr. Breithaupt: When he is driven home.

Mr. Cassidy: When he is driven home, that is right. I forgot about those perks. When he is driven home, would he ask his driver to turn right on St. Clair and would he look at a number of town houses that are on the north side of St. Clair at the first intersection east of Avenue Road?

Those town houses were built after the developer evicted a group of people from an older apartment house that occupied that site for probably 50 or 60 years. In some cases they had been there for many years. The rents were low; the location was good; the accommodation was decent. It provided a service for people, many of whom were on quite modest incomes.

Now six or eight town houses have been built there. They cannot be very attractive, or they are overpriced, because half of them are still vacant; they have been neither sold nor rented. We go from having maybe 40 apartments, which provided accommodation to people who now have to be subsidized in rent geared to income or senior citizen housing, or people whose lives have been disrupted, to a number of town houses that are not even being used. That, I would contend, certainly is not an adequate answer to the kind of housing problems we have in Toronto today.

We have those situations in Ottawa, London, Hamilton and other parts of the province as well because the government is prepared to see housing for greed as a priority over housing for need.

When it comes to the specifics of this particular bill, we would like, as I said earlier, to have a chance to spend some time in order to improve it. We would also like to suggest a number of other improvements to it. I think those changes are going to have to wait until we get Stuart Thom's report or until some of the legislation comes forward.

I hope those other matters I have adverted to will be responded to by amendments coming from the minister himself. We will be moving an amendment with respect to the number of units, because we think that six is too many to be exempted from this particular bill. My colleague the member for Etobicoke will be moving and speaking to that particular amendment.

I would like to suggest that if the Liberal Party wants this matter to go into committee, it should very seriously reconsider the suggestion that the matter go outside the House because of the delays in the passage of the bill that would be introduced as a consequence. Many people are going to be evicted from their homes on May 30 if this bill has not been proclaimed by that time. That is only 13 days away from today. Therefore, rather than send the bill out and run the risk of its not coming back, I would suggest the bill be kept here, that we have the discussion in committee of the whole House.

If anybody wishes to put forward a position, it can be put in the hands of a member from one of the three parties, who can perhaps introduce their concerns into the Legislature. It is also open to people who have more general concerns about the issues I have been raising to raise them before the Thom commission during the weeks it still is going to be heard. But I do have to ask—and the city of Toronto obviously is of this feeling as well—whether it is worth while to send the matter out to committee if people whose homes could be preserved will be evicted as a consequence of the matter going out to committee.

In conclusion, we will support the bill. We are sorry it is piecemeal and will only plug certain loopholes. We recognize that this particular loophole does need to be plugged, but on behalf of my constituents and on behalf of many other people across the province I certainly wish the government would be aware of the fact that there are these fast-buck artists who are looking for ways to evade the existing law and, in response to that, that the government would either come in with comprehensive legislation to plug all the loopholes we know of right now or look to the creation of certain powers to prevent people from taking end runs around what the law clearly intends in providing security of tenure and rental protection for every tenant in Ontario.

4 p.m.

Mr. Ruprecht: Mr. Speaker, this legislation meets the concerns of tenants with respect to the present right of multi-owners to evict tenants under clause 107(1)(b) of the Landlord and Tenant Act. The intent of this bill is quite laudable, but what it does not cover is one of the most important things that is happening at present in my own riding. I am happy to see that my favourite Minister of the Environment (Mr. Norton) is here, and also the member for High Park-Swansea (Mr. Shymko), in whose riding the effects and loopholes of this bill will be felt by the people there.

Let me briefly tell the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) what kinds of havoc and problems are related to the specific loopholes this bill does not cover. It is very important to ensure that the minister gets full counsel with respect to what will take place if this bill is passed, even though it is laudable and the intention is very good, without the amendments of the opposition parties. Let me tell him what will happen in certain districts, including his own.

I will first speak quickly to the minister about the purposes of the conversions that are at present taking place in some of the apartment buildings. As he knows, clause 4(a) of the Residential Tenancies Act exempts from its jurisdiction "transient living accommodation provided in a hotel, motel, inn, tourist home, hostel or other similar accommodation."

Under the Landlord and Tenant Act landlords are allowed to evict tenants when possession of a residential unit is required for "conversion to use for a purpose other than rental residential premises." The approach an increasing number of landlords has taken is that, by furnishing previously rented units and supplying those units with everything right down to linens and dishwear, the accommodation can be categorized as being "other than rental residential premises." Landlords are therefore calling these units hotel units and are raising the rents up to as much as three times the amount previously charged.

In Toronto, with which the honourable member is very familiar, the zoning bylaws state that hotels are not allowed in residential districts, but this does not mean hotel-like accommodations are outlawed. In fact, they are not outlawed under present zoning bylaws. The zoning bylaw in the city of Toronto includes in its definition of a hotel "a building or a part of a building used mainly for the purpose of catering to the needs of the travelling public by supply of food, and also by the furnishing of sleeping accommodation of not fewer than six bedrooms."

As we know, there is no common dining room in these former apartment buildings where it is claimed that conversions by landlords to hotel units have occurred. Therefore, despite whatever advertising a landlord may choose to do, the city zoning bylaw would not define those buildings as hotels and, as such, they are not illegal from a zoning point of view. That means the city of Toronto cannot outlaw conversions, nor under present legislation can it stop what takes place in these neighbourhoods from Scarborough to North York to Etobicoke and certainly in my own area of Parkdale.

Let me briefly provide the minister with a specific example of a case or cases so he can get his teeth into these problems in order to change this legislation and to have an open ear and an open mind to the amendments that are going to come from our party and the third party.

Let us look briefly at the case of 540 Sherbourne Street, I think in the riding of St. George. That apartment building contains 93 apartment units. The landlord, Toronto Apartment Building Co. Ltd., has through attrition over the past two or three years converted approximately 80 per cent of these units into, as they say, furnished hotel units. Toronto Apartment Building Co. Ltd. issued notices of termination of tenancy to the remaining tenants, claiming that the units were needed for conversion into hotel suites.

Judge H. Ward Allen ruled recently that the tenants could not be evicted on these grounds. His decision is being appealed in the Supreme Court of Ontario by the landlords, but we have no guarantee that the forthcoming judgement will plug the loophole. That is why the amendments are necessary in this specific Bill 32.

The next case concerns me directly, and that is the case of guarantee that the forthcoming judgement will plug the loophole. That is why the amendments are necessary in this specific Bill 32.

The next case concerns me directly, and that is the case of 200 Jameson Avenue, 96 Jameson Avenue, 109 Jameson Avenue, 166 Jameson Avenue and a host of other buildings in Toronto. In the case of 200 Jameson Avenue there are 97 units in the building; 39 have now been changed to furnished units. The landlord has applied to the Residential Tenancy Commission for rent increases for the remaining 58 units, claiming that the 39 furnished ones were exempt from the legislation.

Unless the minister is willing to plug this loophole, there will be tremendous damage done to certain communities and their stability. That is my basic point. If conversions to these hotel-like units were to be permitted, the first significant step that would be taken by the landlord would be that tenants would have to move. We all know that this specific conversion process is used for one purpose only, namely the purpose of tripling the rent and getting around the protection that was supposed to prevent tenants from being overcharged. Some landlords are moving in this direction to get away from the Landlord and Tenant Act, which protects tenants.

The minister is well aware of the shortage of apartment units in Toronto in the first place.

Consequently, if the loopholes are not plugged, these tenants are not only going to be asked to move and consequently and indirectly change the very nature of the community, as I will outline in a minute, but they are then going to be asked to find accommodation someplace else.

In Toronto, with a vacancy rate of less than 0.3 per cent, can the minister tell me where these tenants, who have been unjustly moved because of the greed of some of these landlords, are going to find accommodation? That is the unfairness of this situation. They are going to be kicked out and they are going to be looking someplace else; and as members know, there is simply no place else to go. That in itself will create a great hardship for these tenants.

Second and just as important, what happens to a community where these buildings are placed? When these tenants move, their children move along with them; that is obvious. The repercussions of this will be felt in the schools, by the teachers and in the very stability of the neighbourhood. When these tenants are asked to move—and there are hundreds on Jameson Avenue—it will affect at least two schools in the area when these children are withdrawn. It will affect the teachers; it will affect the very quality of education in that area.

While these repercussions will be felt indirectly, in a direct sense the area will deteriorate, and the people who have claimed in the past to be stable neighbours and stable tenants, who have looked after their properties and looked after the very streets in those neighbourhoods, will no longer be there to take an interest in the stability and cleanliness of that area.

4:10 p.m.

The Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I think all members will agree I have been extremely lenient in the discussion of this bill. Although the member's point is very well taken, I think he is straying a little on second reading of the proposed piece of legislation.

Mr. Ruprecht: I will sum up quickly. I am simply indicating to the minister that this specific bill does not cover a very important aspect of tenant rights. By accepting our amendments and amendments of the third party, by a stroke of the pen the minister can make a significant change to create a stable neighbourhood.

If the minister were to change this legislation, which, as I said earlier, is laudable, he would re-create and restabilize a neighbourhood—and neighbourhoods in all of Metro Toronto—that would in turn be very grateful to him. I would urge the minister to listen to the advocacy of our party and our official critic, who has indicated that he would wish this bill to be referred to either committee of the whole House or a standing committee or a special committee. In that way either people who have a direct interest in this bill could be heard or there could be an open discussion in this chamber so that amendments could be heard and made and legislated.

Mr. Philip: Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to speak in favour of this bill. I have pointed out before that this bill is pretty much a replica of Bill 11, which I introduced some time ago; indeed, it is word for word a copy of Bill 11, including the explanatory note. I appreciate that the Attorney General thinks so highly of my work and the work of my colleagues in the New Democratic caucus that he would follow with such exactness a bill that we introduced and called for some time ago.

This is not a new problem, despite the copyright laws and despite the fact that he as a university man, I am sure, knows there are certain rules about putting "ibid." and "op. cit." at the bottom of work that is copied. I realize that under the rules of the printing of bills there is no provision for that, but he might at least have shown some appreciation for the work of such people as Mary Bentley.

Mary Bentley is a real estate agent who saw that the kinds of things that were happening to senior citizens in the Lakeshore area not only were immoral but were creating real problems for those people in that community. Because of this she and groups such as the Lakeshore Tenants' Association and the Federation of Metro Tenants' Associations made their views known in no uncertain terms both in the media and to members of this House. The Attorney General might have mentioned those people when he introduced this bill instead of three Tory back-benchers. The tenants called me up and said: "What are they named for? Who are they? What did they do in all of this?"

The Attorney General might have had the good grace at least to acknowledge that I had introduced the bill, had written to him and had asked questions in the House some time ago and that, indeed, it was in response to questions raised by the leader of our party and by me that he made the promise that legislation would be forthcoming within 10 days. He did not make his deadline, but he came fairly close to it; and one has to compliment him on at least being in time to prevent what on the 31st of this month, we are told by lawyers acting on behalf of certain tenants in the Lakeshore area, will be court hearings for as many as 30 families. These 30 families, many of them seniors, will be faced with eviction unless this bill passes and passes quickly, as a result of the unfortunate decision in the Medeiros case.

I can understand the reasoning of the Liberal Party in asking to send this out to committee, but I am somewhat puzzled by it. I am somewhat puzzled by it because I am sure that as responsible people in this Legislature they would have done the same thing my colleagues and I and, indeed, it appears the Attorney General have done in consulting with some of the tenant groups. They would recognize the very serious problem we have that this bill must be passed and must be proclaimed by May 31 or a judge hearing the case of those 30 families may come down with a decision similar to the Medeiros case, and these people could find themselves out on the street.

It is fairly clear that if this bill goes to committee, there will be no time to advertise, to have the kind of public input that is desirable and that would have been commendable had this bill been introduced even a month ago.

So I ask the members of the Liberal Party to reconsider their position seriously. If there is some way in which this can go to committee outside the House, have some hearings and have the assurance it will come back and be proclaimed before May 31, then we in this party, who have on numerous occasions referred the Ministry of Housing and Municipal Affairs report or countless tenant bills out for public hearings, would be the first to agree. But I suggest to members that unless we have that assurance, it should simply go to committee of the whole House and we should deal with the bill and get it passed today, if possible.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege: With respect to the bill going to committee, coming back and being passed by May 31 so the tenants can be protected by this legislation, I made that one of the conditions when I spoke. Had the honourable member listened, he would have understood me to say that.

Mr. Philip: Mr. Speaker, I find the Liberal Party position confusing. The second speaker said "a committee or committee of the whole." We are not quite sure what they want. All I am saying is that I hope what they want is the same as what we want, which is to get the bill passed and to ensure that it is passed and proclaimed before May 31.

This is not a new problem. This is a problem that dates back to 1976, when there was the first attempt to get around condominium conversion bylaws by those people who wanted to sell a percentage interest in a building with an allocation of an apartment. It was called a tenancy in common. At that time I rose in this House—the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Elgie) will recall this—and I pointed out that an immediate stop had to be put to this kind of practice.

After the member for Scarborough Centre (Mr. Drea), who had recognized the problem when he was serving as parliamentary assistant to the minister, became the minister, legislation was brought through in the form of section 60 of the Condominium Act. At that time the government assured us the problem was solved. Of course, we saw that it was not solved, that there were still buildings, such as the Tandridge Arcot project, such as 41 Garfella, that had just the impossible situation where one had consumers, ordinary poor people, who thought they were buying a condominium or something like it, who were minority-interest holders in a building. We still had the same kind of frustration of one poor person trying to get possession of an apartment that was being occupied by someone of similar economic means who, of course, felt he had the right as a tenant to hold on to that apartment. This bill will not solve that problem.

Despite the fact that the Attorney General had assured the House, in answer to my questions in 1977 and 1978, that tenants were protected from eviction, the Medeiros case suddenly said they did not have that kind of protection. But in the interim, that period of time between 1976 and 1978, there were still a number of evictions going on—illegal evictions, evictions by harassment or, as happened in so many cases, people simply saying, "I am tired of somebody knocking on my door and saying, 'You have my apartment; please give it to me.'"

This bill will save those tenants who are willing to exercise their legal rights to stay in those apartments. But it does not solve the overall problem; people will still merchandise using this technique, certain individuals will still find a way around the condominium conversion bylaws and, later, around section 60 of the Landlord and Tenant Act, and the consumer, as well as the tenant, will still be the one being ripped off.

In one of the early conversions, which was 41

Garfella in Rexdale, the people in that building now have appealed to the borough of Etobicoke to allow them to convert that building to a condominium, notwithstanding the fact that they would not normally have that right because they would not meet the criteria of the condominium conversion bylaws. Their plea is very simple. They are minority interest holders in a building in which the principal landlord can do anything he wants. They cannot even get the information about what he is doing. They are placed in an impossible situation.

What is even more frightening—I predicted this would happen, and we are now seeing the light—is that nobody will give a mortgage on those things. Suppose somebody said to the president of a mortgage company or somebody working for a bank, "I want a mortgage," and he said, "Fine, what do you have?" He does not have an apartment. He does not have a clear title. He has a share in which some other guy has the majority of shares and can do whatever he wants with the building. Would one put out money on that kind of investment? One would be pretty crazy to. Even Greymac would not invest money in that kind of thing.

The people at 41 Garfella are faced with a very serious problem; they own a percentage interest in the building, the mortgages are coming due now on the building and the mortgage companies will not touch it. What the people are asking is for the borough of Etobicoke to approve something which it would not normally approve under its condominium conversion bylaws.

I feel sorry for the Attorney General and for the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Elgie). The Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations has tried to plug this; he has tried to protect the tenants by introducing some changes to the regulations under the Securities Act requiring disclosure. We have a case now in which the owners of 557 The East Mall are arguing that they are not in violation of the Securities Act because they did not file a prospectus.

We have two ministers, the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations and the Attorney General, who are trying to solve a problem for tenants, and I congratulate them on it. But they are both going through the back door to try to solve a problem that the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing could solve by an amendment to the Planning Act to give municipalities the right to pass judgement on any alternative use of buildings and to say either, "Yes, it is in the public interest" or, "No, it is not in the public interest and you may not do this."

We need that kind of legislation, the same kind of legislation that Toronto asked for in Bill Pr13, when it said, "We want the right to say 'yes' or 'no' when somebody comes to us and says we want to demolish an adequate apartment building," and that other bodies have asked for, saying, "We want control over this kind of end-run around the condominium conversion bylaws."

I feel sorry for these two ministers. What they are trying to do is prop up the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing, who has failed to act and who could solve the problem through the front door and stop this situation once and for all, not just with this kind of conversion but with the hotel conversion system that my colleague the member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy) has talked about and the mayor of Ottawa has pleaded with the Housing minister to solve.

What we are going to see is a continuation of conversions in this manner. What this bill does is very simple. It says to tenants, "If you want to go ahead and exercise your legal rights, you cannot be evicted." But it will not stop the sale of buildings like this. It will not stop the harassment of tenants by those who have purchased the shares.

I urge the Attorney General and the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations—knowing his concern for tenants, he is probably already doing this—to convince the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing to do his job, because they cannot do it for him. I am not responsible for whatever cabinet splits there are. The Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing has failed to exercise his job, and the Attorney General is in this situation. I feel sorry for him. I am glad the Attorney General has done something. That is more than the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing has done.

We will be supporting this bill. As my colleague has indicated, we feel the exemption of six units is too high in areas such as Lakeshore and York West ridings. In Humber riding, there are apartments along Dixon Road that are sixplexes, and I can see the same real estate companies that are merchandising the slightly larger buildings, ranging from 30 to 90 apartments, saying, "If Bill 32 has caught us, we will go out and find a bunch of people with smaller buildings, sixplexes and less, and we will merchandise them with this gimmick anyway."

At the same time, I can recognize that the minister wants to protect the rights of families that may want to buy a small complex to have their parents or grandparents living close to them and for tax or other reasons may want some kind of equity situation split up. Therefore, we will be moving an amendment that the word "six" be changed to "four." We think that protects families who want legitimately to buy buildings like this so that they can be close to older parents and so forth. At the same time it will protect tenants in many areas such as in Lakeshore riding where there are a lot of small apartment buildings.

I am pleased the minister has responded. We will be voting for the bill. We hope that it can be dealt with expeditiously in committee of the whole and that the tenants will be protected from eviction when their cases come up on May 30.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, in relation to a brief history of this legislation, I appreciate the expressions of support from the members opposite, and the concern that is shared on both sides of the House in relation to tenants.

It is rather unfortunate that the member for Etobicoke continually uses the word "plagiarism." The fact is that very similar sections were contained, as he knows and as I pointed out the other day, in the Residential Tenancies Act in sections of the legislation that were not proclaimed. I could compliment the member for Etobicoke, when he wished to introduce a private member's bill, for going to that government legislation for those sections, but I think he might have wanted to give some credit to the people who drafted those sections in introducing his bill.

4:30 p.m.

Mr. Philip: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, to correct the record: The legislation the minister says was not proclaimed could have been proclaimed by the government. In fact—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Cousens): That is not a point of order.

Mr. Philip: Will you hear me out, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker: I am telling you it is not a point of order.

Mr. Philip: You listened to the minister; now listen to my point of order.

The Acting Speaker: No. I am saying it is not a point of order.

Mr. Philip: It is a point of order. How can you tell it is not a point of order when you do not even listen?

The Acting Speaker: I have heard enough.

Mr. Philip: I am trying to correct the record, Mr. Speaker. The legislation did not come from the government; it was the work of the standing committee on general government. The wording is entirely different. If the minister had wanted to go that route, he would have copied that wording rather than my wording. I did not take it from the general government committee proposal. For the minister to suggest otherwise is simply nonsense.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, I invited members of the House to look at the legislation. Obviously with respect to that, we are talking about a residential tenancy commission about which there was a constitutional challenge. I congratulate the member for being wise enough to adopt that earlier wording with the change from "the judge" to "the commission." He should not get all hot and bothered about it, but I think he might have given the original drafters some credit, that is all.

When we talk about plagiarism, I remind the member for Etobicoke that both sides of this House are very well served in a most distinguished fashion by legislative counsel. Both sides of the House rely on legislative counsel to put into words the policy we agree upon. Legislative counsel advised members on both sides of the House about how to accomplish what we all wanted. To call that plagiarism, with all due respect, is indulging in some rather excessive and inaccurate rhetoric.

Be that as it may, I am pleased to have the support of members opposite. This is legislation to close a loophole. I agree with the comments of the member for Etobicoke that there is some degree of urgency. We did not expect the court to rule the way it did in the Medeiros case. We would like to have this legislation passed, and I know all three parties wish to see that happen as soon as possible.

A note that was passed to me a few moments ago indicated that the official opposition is now prepared to deal with this in committee of the whole. I thank them for that co-operation.

On the issue of six units as opposed to four, I think I can say now that we will not be accepting that amendment. But at the same time we recognize it is an issue about which reasonable people can disagree. Both four and six are relatively arbitrary figures. To accommodate the very type of situation the member for Etobicoke referred to, mainly large families or people with other close associations, it was decided in our caucus that six was a more reasonable figure for people who desire to acquire not a large unit for family use or for individuals with other close associations.

I am simply not in a position to accept the amendment, because this was something that was debated at great length in our own caucus and I do not have the authorization to change the wishes of our caucus and cabinet in that respect. However, I do respect the intentions behind the proposed amendment and obviously concede, whether it is six units or four, that it is an issue about which very reasonable people can disagree.

I will conclude by thanking members opposite for their support in relation to legislation that is needed at this time. I think all members are well aware that the other issues which have been raised will be addressed by the Thom commission. Whether it is hotel conversion or any of the other issues, these warrant some additional study and I hope they will be addressed when the Thom commission reports.

Motion agreed to.

Bill ordered for committee of the whole House.

PROVINCIAL COURTS AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. McMurtry moved second reading of Bill 1, An Act to amend the Provincial Courts Act.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, I do not think I have anything to add to what I said after the introduction of this bill. I would only be repeating myself.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, as the Attorney General mentioned, his comments on first reading of the bill were quite clear in that there were concerns expressed by the Court of Appeal in a recent decision with respect to the serving beyond ordinary retirement age of certain judges and the necessity to obtain a reappointment from the Lieutenant Governor in Council.

As the members will recall, this change in legislation is before us as a result of a variety of comments and activities which occurred concerning the matter of judges' independence and which appeared at some length in the media towards the end of 1982 and in the early part of 1983.

The result of the case, which was particularly the matter of Her Majesty the Queen versus Walter Valente, meant the impartiality of judges and their independence was called into question under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and the court viewed the circumstances with some concern.

Provincial judges' associations and others were concerned about whether a judge might be thought to be truly independent when he or she required certain salary arrangements, as well as other appointments and decisions, based upon the Attorney General of the day and whatever government policy might be.

Accordingly, to enhance the independence of the provincial judges, we now have Bill 1 before us. We certainly will support the bill. It is important to us to ensure every opportunity is taken to underline the independence of our judiciary. If there was some concern, because of the mechanics by which salary arrangements were reached or by the requirement for some approval to allow an annual continuation of employment after the normal retirement term, then those difficulties must be quickly laid to rest.

As I have said, the Attorney General set out quite clearly the purpose in this matter and we agree with it. The annual approval will now take place by the Judicial Council in these matters with respect to those who might choose to serve or be available to serve after the age of 70 and until the age of 75. I think it is most appropriate that there would not be appointments after the age of 75. Surely that is a sufficient term of service, and those burdened with the judicial cares and concerns could be allowed some retirement time as they approached what perhaps could at least be their latter years.

We support the bill and look forward to its implementation in legislation.

4:40 p.m.

Mr. Philip: Mr. Speaker, I was going to speak, but I will give the floor to my colleague the member for Riverdale.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, Bill 1 is before us to fulfil a commitment made by the Attorney General at the time of the case of Her Majesty the Queen and Walter Valente, concerning the independence of provincial court judges. It was decided by the Court of Appeal, with the Chief Justice of Ontario giving the judgement for the whole court.

In two places in that judgement, a specific reference is made to the commitment of the Attorney General to introduce this bill. On page 28 of the judgement of the court, the Chief Justice further pointed out that the Attorney General was prepared to introduce at the next session of the Legislature an amendment to the Provincial Courts Act which would substitute the approval of the Chief Judge for his approval as the basis for reappointment between the ages of 65 and 70.

Again, at the very end of the judgement of the Chief Justice, he states, "I have also noted the willingness of the Attorney General to introduce an amendment to the Provincial Courts Act in this connection substituting the approval of the Chief Judge for his approval." So we have a bill with the very limited purpose of meeting the commitment made by the Attorney General with respect to the question of the provincial court judges' independence.

Our caucus will support the bill. We have no amendments to propose.

I do want to take a moment or two, now that this question of the independence of the judges has come before the assembly for the first time in a formal way, to refer to some of the criteria and comments that were made by the Chief Justice of Ontario, W. G. C. Howland, at the opening of the courts on January 7 last.

In the course of his remarks, he refers to the report of Chief Justice Deschênes on the independent judicial administration of the courts and to the study that was undertaken by a 17-member committee under the chairmanship of Mr. Justice Osler; that is, a committee of the judges of the court. The committee comprised the heads of the provincial, county and district courts, the Supreme Court and other representative members of the judiciary.

In an unanimous report, the committee approved of the first two stages in the Deschênes report, namely, consultation and decision-sharing between the judiciary and the executive, but did not favour at this time the third stage of independent judicial administration. It considered that for significant judicial independence, the following were essential. First, the judges should be consulted concerning provisions respecting tenure and should be assured that provision will be made by statute for a regular review of judicial salaries and annuities, at some stage of which the various categories of judges affected will be consulted.

The second comment is not appropriate for the bill that is before us but deals with the line between matters to be dealt with by the judges and matters to be dealt with by the Attorney General in the administration of justice. Amongst the matters that must be within control of the judges is that of the activity of court personnel but not control of their salaries or the general terms of their employment, which is a matter we can refer to on another occasion when another bill comes before us.

I did want to ask the Attorney General, in the light of the comment made by the Chief Justice at the opening of the courts, what his intention will be now that the question of the independence of the provincial court judiciary has been established as a matter of law but nevertheless has left a number of matters that require legislative and executive attention.

Again I refer to the remarks made by the Chief Justice in the Valente case where he referred to matters that were not within his purview but were for the executive and for this assembly. I quote again from the judgement of the Chief Justice:

"It is appreciated that there are strong feelings on the part of some provincial judges that their independence should be secured in precisely the same way as the independence of superior court judges. This is a subject for the executive and the Legislature; it is not for me, in my judicial capacity, to enter into the merits of this controversy."

I end the quotation and ask, now that the specific limited matter contained in Bill 1 is before us fulfilling the commitment of the Attorney General, what comment he has to make about the intentions of the government with respect to completing and tidying up some of the matters that still remain of concern to complete, in the judges' mind, the other essential ingredients of their independence.

Personally, I am pleased the matter came before the court for clarification. I had no particular apprehension that the court was going to hold that they were not independent in the sense required by the Charter of Rights. That was not my major concern. Why it was not my major concern is quite obvious; I ran across nobody, in the course of my career in the practice of law, or amongst clients of my own or other people, who had any doubt whatsoever that the judges sitting in the provincial court were judges in the full sense of the term.

That was not a major concern of mine. But I did know that lurking in the background was this sense of apprehension, and at times frustration and concern, among the judges about some of these matters which may appear to be self-interest in some people's minds because they touch upon money matters, but matters of sufficient concern that dealt, not with the public's perception of the independence of the judges but with their own perception of their own independence. In some people's minds, that may be linked entirely with the question of their own self-interest. It did not appear to me that this was the main or only motivation, even though it may naturally have had a part in the action which Judge Sharpe and, subsequently, other judges took on the matter.

It should also be made very clear that, so far as I can understand the case that came before the court, it was not some arbitrary decision of Judge Sharpe to decide to make a determination that he did not fall within the specific qualifications required by the charter but it was a matter raised by counsel before the court. There were matters which the court then had to decide in the ordinary adjudication. It was not some unilateral, arbitrary decision that he was not qualified or lacked that degree of independence and impartiality which a judge should expect to have.

4:50 p.m.

Those are all of the comments. The lengthy judgement of the Chief Justice deserves reading by those interested in this question, but I would specifically ask the Attorney General simply to comment on the remark made by the Chief Justice which I quoted, namely, what does the executive and what does this Legislature, as a result of the decision of the executive, intend to do now to complete the circle and establish in the minds of the judges and everyone else that this problem has been settled once and for all?

With those remarks, we will support the bill. There is no need, from our point of view, to put it into committee of the whole House.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, I thank the members opposite for their support. There is no question that the perception of independence is an important issue. I do not think anyone in this Legislature doubted for a moment that the provincial court judges are independent, but one always has to be as concerned with the perception of independence as we are with so many other matters in the area of justice.

As far as the Valente case is concerned, I have two preliminary observations. The substance of this legislation was an undertaking or a suggestion that I made to the Provincial Court Criminal Judges Association as to where I would be prepared to proceed in the issue of the perception of independence in this area. This undertaking, if it was in the form of an undertaking, was given before the Valente case was dealt with by Judge Sharpe. In any event, the Valente case understandably attracted a good deal of attention both within and without the profession, and certainly in the public as a whole. I have to point out that there has not been any final determination of the Valente case as it is currently before the Supreme Court of Canada.

The issue of the perception of the independence of the judiciary has long been a concern of the Ministry of the Attorney General and of this particular Attorney General. I think it was as far back as 1976 that I tabled in this Legislature a white paper on courts administration which dealt in a very frank fashion with our concerns with respect to the perception of the independence of the judiciary. There are some who feel that our white paper did provide a certain degree of inspiration for the Deschenes report.

[Interruption]

Mr. Martel: You're burning the place down, Roy.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Is that a Liberal caucus going on?

Mr. Breithaupt: It might be. They wouldn't tell me about it.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Why is the fire alarm sounding?

The Deputy Speaker: Wait a minute; we will get clued in as to whether or not we should leave. Is it okay? I am told it is.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Our Courts of Justice Act, which we hope to introduce before the end of the spring, will deal with certain additional issues with respect to the independence of the judiciary or the appearance of independence of the judiciary.

They have not been finally determined; but, for example, I am confident one issue the Courts of Justice Act will deal with is in relation to the removal of a judge. That would be done by the Legislature as a whole and not by order in council. This is a matter of some interest.

We have not made a final decision on the issue of provincial judges' salaries. There are some who argue this should be a matter of determination for the Legislature as a whole. This is not something about which any consensus has been achieved so far as the judiciary is concerned.

There was, for example, a period in the federal Parliament when adjustments of salaries of Supreme Court and county court judges were delayed for a considerable period because of problems in scheduling legislation. Certainly, many of our judges of so-called superior jurisdictions during those years made it known to this particular Attorney General that they would much prefer the provincial system of making these adjustments by order in council because they could be done on a more regular basis.

When it comes to judicial compensation, whether it is salaries or pensions, we have established in this province a mechanism with the potential for greater independence than that established by the Parliament of Canada. With respect to salaries and pensions, the Minister of Justice for Canada will have the advice of a committee, whose members are appointed by him, to give independent advice about the level of judiciary remuneration.

In Ontario, we have a provincial courts compensation committee, which is made up of a representative of the provincial court judges, a representative of the government and a neutral chairman, who is agreed upon by both parties. So in this respect we have created a mechanism that is more independent than that established by the Parliament of Canada.

There will be other administrative matters that will continue to be addressed in order to maintain a high level of perception of independence, as well as the reality that has fortunately existed in this province from virtually time immemorial.

The Deputy Speaker: Just to subdue everyone's curiosity, the fire alarm is due to pipe smoke in the government caucus office.

Motion agreed to.

Bill ordered for third reading.

SOLICITORS AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. McMurtry moved second reading of Bill 25, An Act to amend the Solicitors Act.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I have no opening statement other than what I stated earlier.

5 p.m.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, this bill is simply to make changes that would allow interest to be charged on unpaid accounts at the effective prime rate of the chartered banks, rather than at the traditional five per cent, which has been the case over past years.

It is clearly unfair, at least from my point of view, that someone who has an obligation should not be paying the equivalent rate that the borrowing of that money would occasion. Of course, even at the prime rate of interest which, according to section 36 of the Judicature Act, is the lowest rate of interest by a chartered bank to the most credit worthy borrowers for prime business loans as determined and published by the Bank of Canada—at which perhaps none of us as individuals could borrow—the basis is, however, set for an appropriate interest charge on outstanding accounts.

There are certain protections in the amendment which require the taxation of solicitors' bills on occasion and the disallowance of interest or certain adjustments to be made if considered appropriate. Certainly the changes in the bill are satisfactory to us and we will support the legislation.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, it may surprise you but we will oppose the legislation. I do not have any great concern in particular about the change in the interest rate in connection with the bill but unless I am satisfied otherwise, it is not just a matter of the interest rate which is covered in the bill. The present Solicitors Act provides that, "A solicitor may charge interest at the rate of five per cent per annum on his disbursements and costs." That is what is in the Solicitors Act at present.

This bill will change that provision so, "a solicitor may charge interest on unpaid fees, charges or disbursements" at a rate not exceeding the prime rate. Others may be concerned about the prime rate and the question that is related to it but there is a very significant ambiguity at least, if not a very clear indication in the statute, that the words "disbursements and costs" did not include solicitors' fees.

We are being asked in this assembly to provide in the statute for interest on the fee portion of a solicitor's account. Some people may think I am raising some kind of a quibble, but I have read the definitions very clearly. I am not going to read them into the record, I leave it to the work of legislative counsel and counsel for the ministry. If one reads the definition of "costs" in the Canadian Law Dictionary; if one reads the definition of "costs" in Black's Law Dictionary, fifth edition, which is an American one; if one reads the definition of "costs" in Stroud's Judicial Dictionary, which of course is an English judicial dictionary; and if one reads the term "costs" in Sanagan's Encyclopaedia of Words and Phrases, Legal Maxims, which is a Canadian book; one will not find any solace that the word "costs" has anything to do with fees of a solicitor.

Costs is a matter awarded by the courts to a successful litigant as compensation and as an amount to be paid. It has no bearing on the question of what the money is then used for. He may use it to pay his lawyers' fees, but the point I am making as best I can is that if one reads through the Solicitors Act, very clearly one will find the occasional reference to the word "costs."

In most instances, apart from one or two where it deals with a specific cost on a reference, the word "costs" is conjoined with a number of other words, "fees, costs, charges and disbursements." That is the litany of terms which are provided.

It would appear to me that under our Solicitors Act—and I certainly thought so at the time when I was practising and was bothering to submit accounts for work which was done—the fee portion, as distinct from the disbursement portion or the charges portion, was not subject to an interest charge because of the section of the Solicitors Act which we are being asked to amend.

There may well be some slight solace that one could derive from a statement in Jowitt's Dictionary of English Law, an English dictionary, which in 1977 said that costs include the solicitor's fee. One may find some slight solace in that, but one certainly will not find any solace with respect to the present statute which says that, "a solicitor may charge interest at the rate of five per cent per annum on his disbursements and costs." One will not find any solace that the word "costs" includes his fees.

I have not appeared before the taxing master on any accounts. Naturally, when I practised law, the work which I did was, of course, always totally acceptable to my clients and they would never dream of taxing a bill against me. I am certain there are other lawyers in the assembly who have had their bills taxed against them and it may well be that by some mistake interest has been charged.

I do not intend to labour this particular point, but I am going to draw the Attorney General's attention to the Solicitors Act and simply, for example, point out to him very clearly that in section 2 of the Solicitors Act, it states, "No action shall be brought for the recovery of fees, charges or disbursements for business done," etc. It then goes on to state very clearly in section 17 of the Solicitors Act that, "'services' includes fees, costs, charges and disbursements." If one reads the rest of that, one will find in every case where the term "costs" is mentioned in any of the sections of the Solicitors Act they are conjoined with fees, charges or disbursements. I suggest that fees are quite distinguishable from costs.

It is a point that only the member for Riverdale would be interested in, but when we are introducing a bill into the assembly which purports only to change the interest rate which may be charged from five per cent to something not to exceed the prime rate, when in fact there is a very real question as to whether or not fees could be subject to an interest charge under the Solicitors Act, to then simply change the words "disbursements and costs" to read "unpaid fees, charges or disbursements," seems to me to be playing just a little bit too fast and loose with the exact meaning of the Solicitors Act.

I would hope that at some point members of the Attorney General's staff would look at the comments which I have made on this particular point. That is the reason. It may have been that if it had been simply the change of interest, that my colleagues would still have wished to oppose the bill. Lawyers are not amongst their closest friends, except for myself, of course, and the leader of the party. But apart from that question, this bill changes a matter of law which should not be changed without a direct reference in the bill to the change being made; and that is, on my interpretation which I had always followed, one could not charge interest on the fee portion of a solicitor's bill. It was that simple. It is that clear in my judgement.

We are now making a change that the fee portion of a solicitor's bill can have an interest charge added to it. In my view, that is a very significant and fundamental change. A good part of it may simply be a matter of practice. A good part of it may be that nobody has bothered to look at the ambiguity within the bill.

5:10 p.m.

If this matter had come up and I had the opportunity to look at it, I would have drafted the amendment to provide that the bill would change the provisions so a solicitor might charge interest on unpaid fees, costs, charges and disbursements, in order to use the same language that appears elsewhere in the Solicitors Act. I would have drawn clearly to the attention of the House that at least there was a very real question as to whether or not the fee portion of a solicitor's bill was subject to an interest charge under the present act. I leave that for my esoteric friends in the ministry to ponder.

For that reason, we will oppose this bill.

Mr. Roy: I had a long dissertation and speech prepared which would make the comments and research of the member for Riverdale look amateurish. I was prepared to give all that—

Mr. Martel: Well, give it to us then.

Mr. Roy: It does not take much to get them going, does it?

As I was listening to the member for Riverdale and closely reading this bill, it struck me that if I were to vote in favour of this bill or oppose it, I might well be accused of conflict of interest. Given that situation, I would be better to limit my comments and not say anything at all about Bill 25, although I would have welcomed the challenge to respond to my colleague the member for Riverdale.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: As the member for Riverdale states, if there is any question about the right of a solicitor under the existing section 35 of the Solicitors Act to charge interest on overdue accounts, the effect of this legislation is to clarify that and simply give solicitors the same rights as any other professionals in this regard. I think the legislation accomplishes that.

Motion agreed to.

Bill ordered for third reading.

SMALL CLAIMS COURTS AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. McMurtry moved second reading of Bill 28, An Act to amend the Small Claims Courts Act.

Mr. Breithaupt: There are two particular areas in this bill to which I would address my remarks. A certain number of other sections deal particularly with the repeal of matters that are obsolete and areas that have been changed by other legislation. I shall not refer to them.

The two areas in which I am particularly interested flow from a series of letters a number of members of the Legislature received, particularly from credit bureaus in their own constituencies. They dealt with post-judgement interest as well as the matter of the ability to give instructions to the local sheriff as agent for a judgement creditor.

In the first instance, the matter of post-judgement interest was of concern because the credit bureaus were denied the right to charge interest after judgement on small claims court actions for their clients. As we are all aware, interest is allowed in the county courts, and there was the general feeling that equivalence should be available, particularly as the jurisdiction value in dollars within the small claims courts now is much greater than it was in the county courts only a few years ago.

There was then the interest in having this matter resolved so that judgements would be paid forthwith by judgement debtors whose debts otherwise would be subject to the accumulation of interest.

The second area dealt with a recent directive handed down by the office of the director of the courts administration to county sheriffs which barred an officer of a limited company from giving instructions to a sheriff in a proceeding. In effect, this would have required more lawyers to be involved in the administration of the proceedings which would allow the attachment of certain assets or the eventual collection of these obligations. That was thought to be an unnecessary additional expense when a credit bureau, as was often the case, had been given instructions by its client to proceed to the final realization of a debt and the obtaining of payment for it.

The directive to which I have referred, accordingly, required unnecessary expense and it is certainly appropriate that we see by the amendments to Bill 28 that situation has been resolved. Those expenses have to be passed on to the ultimate client. By the addition of costs in the administration of these collection procedures they are paid eventually either by the judgement debtor or by all consumers who have to pay the charges for collections as part of the overall business expenses which are added to the price of goods and services.

As a result, a variety of credit bureaus had written to members of the Legislature setting out these two themes. I am pleased to see they have been attended to in this legislation. We will certainly support the bill and agree with the other matters that have been sorted out in this, the first amendment to the Small Claims Courts Act that we have seen for some time.

5:20 p.m.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, this bill covers a number of points in a series of sections. I have no problem, nor do my colleagues, with sections 2, 3, 5, 7, and 8; but we have serious problems and reservations about sections 1, 4, and 6. Let me deal with section 6 first.

It is the view of our caucus on the theory of the small claims court that the expeditious settlement of disputes for monetary matters between litigants within areas which are small, even with the increases passed by the assembly for the jurisdictions of the court, are the kinds of matters which should be settled as expeditiously and efficaciously as possible, including the payment of the judgement.

Lawyers like to think every time a judgement is issued by a court they should have a right to attach the land belonging to the judgement debtor in order to enforce payment. However, when we are talking about a small claims court and the jurisdiction of that court, even at the enhanced levels that we know, and the fundamental purpose of the court—for people to settle these claims—we think, not as a matter of logic following on from the superior courts but as a matter of the principle and the philosophy of those courts, there should not be a capacity to enter an execution against the lands of a small claims court judgement debtor. That is our view.

The reason for our feeling about it is that on balance we believe the great bulk of judgement debtors are ordinary people. It is very seldom the ordinary person goes to a small claims court to sue some corporation that owes him money or to sue his landlord for failure to return the interest on his rent deposit. Very seldom does that take place.

It seems to me the logic of applying Supreme Court and county court preconcepts to the small claims court and permitting a judgement creditor to file an execution against the title to the lands of a judgement debtor, which is my understanding of section 6, is something we are not prepared to accept.

Even if one could overcome that fundamental opposition to the concept in the small claims court, we certainly would not agree that collection agencies, which are the main people promoting this particular aspect, should be able, as agents for the judgement creditor, to file executions against the lands of the judgement debtor.

Those are matters of balanced judgement. They are not matters of logic, they just make sense. Anybody who knows the work we have tried to do in this assembly over the years to make the small claims court work does not in my judgement lead to any conclusion that a judgement debt should be filed against the title to the land.

There are some precatory—that is a strange word—but there is a loosely-phrased clause in this bill which then says if they do file it and do not remove it, the fellow can go against them and make certain they do remove it if the debt is paid. We do not particularly buy that quid pro quo that the judgement creditor somehow or other will remember to raise the execution against the lands upon receiving payment. Even my friend, the Deputy Speaker of the assembly, would agree with me on that particular point, had he a voice in this assembly to speak about it.

Those are my comments on section 6.

With respect to section 4, the provision of interest on judgements at the Bank of Canada prime rate, given the concept, the philosophy and the reason about the small claims court, we do not think that in any way facilitates the expeditious settlement of claims we call major for the participants and minor in the bigger world of the Supreme Court or the county court. Not as a matter of logic because the logic says, "Why should you not have interest on your judgement?" But as a matter of the concept and the philosophy of the small claims court, we do not think it is at all appropriate to provide for that kind of interest at this late date in the Small Claims Courts Act.

It is not there now. I do not know why this assembly at this time should bow down to some false logic and now provide, as this bill would provide, for interest on judgements in the small claims court when in our view and in any view of the concept of those courts, it is not at all appropriate. So we oppose the bill as well because of the provisions of section 4.

The other provision which is of concern to me, I raise simply because it raises a somewhat broader question. If it were the only point, we could agree to disagree on the other two points. On this first clause—and I only raise it in order to stimulate a little bit of debate—we will want to move an amendment in committee on section 1 of the bill for the purposes of discussion. We intend, of course, to support the amendment which we will be putting forward, but we have no intention of dividing the assembly on the issue.

I was concerned, and we had an interesting discussion in our caucus about it, where it says in section 1 that the appointment of clerks, bailiffs and referees will now be by the Lieutenant Governor in Council rather than simply by the Lieutenant Governor. I am not going to argue about that. I do not find that a matter of particular concern.

The section then goes on to provide that the appointment of a referee shall be on the recommendation of the judge and the judge is in the best position to know the local conditions and to know of a suitable candidate. In my particular amendment I am not going to accept that. The interesting part of section 1 of the bill is not with respect to the question of appointments—but I will come back to that in a moment or two—it is the other clause in the bill which states, "and shall hold office during pleasure."

The section we are being asked to amend will be amended to read: "There shall be a clerk and one or more bailiffs for every small claims court, who shall be appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council and hold office during pleasure."

I have a very real concern about the principal officers of the small claims court, extended beyond it to other courts, simply holding office during pleasure. There are some of my colleagues who would go so far as to indicate that the appointment of clerks for small claims court and the appointment of bailiffs for small claims court are a part of the patronage web of the Conservative Party in Ontario and that if we were to ever assume office it may well that we would want to have people with some different qualification.

I, of course, for a moment do not accept that patronage has anything to do with the kinds of appointments which have been made. I have had the highest respect for the clerks and bailiffs in the small claims court in exercising very onerous duties, but I do not think at this point in the administration of justice in Ontario that the principal officers of those courts should hold office during pleasure and that is what we are going to be asked to enshrine in the Small Claims Courts Act.

Therefore, for want of some better way to deal with it, I had a look at the Judicature Act and had a look at what seemed to me to be very good provisions related to the tenure and removal from office of Masters of the Supreme Court. It may seem a long way from clerk and bailiff of the small claims court to Master of the Supreme Court, just the very term Master of the Supreme Court as distinct from clerk of the small claims court, but in any event the Masters of the Supreme Court are protected by a reasonably sensible due process arrangement setting out the terms and conditions of their tenure. When we go into committee I want to move the amendment I have provided to my colleague the critic for the official opposition and to the Attorney General.

I am not saying that is the answer to it. I am saying that I think there is a serious question when the principal officers of those courts simply hold office during pleasure. I accept the principle that the appointments to the courts of their principal officers rather than the functioning of those officers is a role of the executive.

Some of my colleagues go so far as to indicate that they think the principal officers of those courts should be protected under the Civil Service Commission and not simply by the kind of appointment in question. This raises some philosophical differences that I do not need to deal with at this particular point.

5:30 p.m.

There may well be worthwhile and very useful thinking that could be directed towards the terms and conditions of employment of the principal officers of the small claims court. It is with this in mind that, when we are in committee on the bill, I will move the amendment, a copy of which I have provided to the Attorney General and to the justice critic of the official opposition.

However, we have opposed the bill, as I have stated, for the reasons I have given, not only with respect to section 1, which I would be prepared to say was a matter of debate and discussion in committee of the whole, but principally because of the provisions of section 4 and section 6 of the bill.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, it would have been nice, since I am now taking responsibility for financial and commercial affairs, if in fact the opportunity had been taken to look more profoundly at the role and functioning of the small claims courts, with respect to whom they are meant to serve and what kind of access to what kind of justice is being provided.

The small claims courts have been around for a long time. They were originally intended, so it was argued, to provide a cheap means of settlement of debts and so on that would protect small people, be people's courts. What they have become is collection agents' courts.

Collection agencies, I believe, are the single largest users of the small claims courts. Some of that activity is presumably legitimate. They are working on behalf of small businesses that need to be paid if they are going to stay in business.

However, I believe the members are also familiar with the practices of some collection agents. Frankly, they are not entirely what I or anybody would like to see with respect to the harassment and the type of letters issued that stay just barely within the guidelines issued by the ministry. They are simply not tolerable in Ontario.

When, on the other hand, an individual seeks redress because he has been sold shoddy goods or has in some sense been badly treated within the commercial system, access to the small claims courts is extremely difficult. How to get to these courts and how to use them is a mystery. Even if the individual gets a judgement, the enforcement of the judgement is also a mystery unless a lawyer is used. If the individual uses a lawyer and pays the usual fees, the lawyer's fees quickly extinguish any benefit that might be gained by any order that is made by the small claims courts.

I cannot vouch for this in terms of having a comprehensive knowledge. However, I have heard from time to time stories that have been brought to me about rather perverse judgements made in small claims courts that have worked against the interests of individuals. These people sought justice through the small claims route because their concern neither justified, nor could they afford, going to the county courts for that kind of settlement. It seems the small claims courts found it difficult at times to have—I hesitate to say this—the impartiality one would hope to see between the interests of people generally and the commercial interests that mainly use the small claims system.

One of my concerns would be the manner of appointment of bailiffs and other people who run the courts. These are order in council appointments. I have had some discussion about this with my friend and colleague the member for Riverdale, who has pointed out that all court appointments in Ontario are, technically speaking, order in council appointments.

To that extent all appointments to judicial positions in Ontario are open to the same problem. They tend to be made for reasons that include patronage. In fact, many of them were made for reasons that can only be described as patronage—that is, service of the government that happens to be in power in Ontario. It is a government that has been in power for a very long time.

We somehow expect that people who go to their reward by getting a judicial or small claims court appointment will automatically purge themselves of their political affiliations. Oddly enough, in the case of the higher courts, for example, more of that happens than perhaps we deserve to achieve.

Nonetheless, it narrows the group of people from whom these particular officials are chosen. It narrows the range of experience that is represented on the bench and in the small claims courts. It also tends to install one point of view with respect to the type of view that is taken by the officials of the court involved.

Where it is the higher courts there is a legal tradition that is pretty strong and may also lean too heavily on property and so on, but one cannot blame that only on the fact that in this province it is often Conservatives or people with Conservative connections who get appointed to the bench. That is part of the traditions of British law that have descended to us here in Ontario. There is a conservative and a property-leaning tendency in the law.

When one gets into the small claims court, however, there is much less reliance on precedent; there is much less oversight because of appeals, because of higher courts stepping in or because of a kind of body of common practice in law that has been built up into the courts. Everybody tends to work a bit on his own.

The consequence of this is that the natural origins and prejudices of the appointees perhaps have greater sway in the small claims court than they do in other courts of the province. This in turn means that collection agents and other people who go in there to collect debts from small people and who are often supported either by lawyers or else by people who, although not lawyers have a great deal of experience in the application of the law as it is applied to small claims, have a tremendous advantage. They know the law; they know what to do and they also are appearing in front of people who are naturally very sympathetic to their point of view and less sympathetic to the problems of the people who for various reasons become objects of the claims that have been put in that small claims court.

The member for Riverdale has indicated our position on the bill as a whole. I simply wanted to share with the House those concerns and my concern that the Attorney General once again has perhaps avoided the opportunity of being a genuine innovator in finding ways by which this important part of the judicial system can work on behalf of all of the people who are its users and not just on behalf of the collection agencies and people of that ilk, who are the major beneficiaries and initiators of actions through the small claims courts of the province.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, I think the member for Ottawa Centre is perhaps a little unfair, to put it mildly, with respect to his general criticism of the small claims courts in this province. I think we have a very good system of small claims courts. We have a number of dedicated people at both the judicial and the official level who work very hard to serve all of the citizens in their particular communities.

I think he is also confusing the role of some of the officers of the court, some of the administrators, with respect to those who are serving in a judicial capacity. As the honourable member knows, those who are serving in a judicial capacity are either those appointed as full-time small claims court judges on the recommendation of the provincial judicial council or those serving as part-time judges, as deputy judges, who can do so only on the initiative of the local county court judge.

With respect to the member for Riverdale's very thoughtful amendments with respect to the security of tenure in so far as some of these officials are concerned, I think it should be pointed out that officials, clerks and registrars throughout the court system, Supreme Court and county courts, have been appointed at pleasure, and there should be some consistency in relation to that system. It should also be pointed out that many of these people are part time, which I think is another reason for appointing at pleasure.

I suggest, with respect, to the member for Riverdale, that we would be happy to discuss these amendments with him. We think they should be considered in relation to the new Courts of Justice Act, as they would represent a very significant and major departure from established practice.

With respect to the sections of the legislation allowing interest on the same basis as the county courts and Supreme Court and the filing of executions against land, our position is simply that the judgement creditors in these courts should have the same rights as the judgement creditors have in the county courts and Supreme Court. What we are dealing with here are courts that are very accessible to the ordinary citizens of the province, many of whom are small business people. The small business people of this province represent the backbone of the province in so many ways.

It is true that their interests are often represented by agents and collection agencies, because that is the only economical way in which they can assert their claims; but to suggest that the ordinary folk should not have, through a judgement in small claims court, the same rights of enforcement and collection of interest as those who obtain judgements in the county courts or Supreme Court is a difference in philosophical approach that we cannot agree with.

We think it is in the interest of all citizens in this province that people be encouraged to pay their debts, allowing reasonable post-judgement interest in the same manner as is allowed in the other courts. The filing of executions can only encourage that attitude, which is so clearly in the interest of all citizens.

Motion agreed to.

Bill ordered for committee of the whole House.

ESTATES ADMINISTRATION AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. McMurtry moved second reading of Bill 29, An Act to amend the Estates Administration Act.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, I have no opening statement.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, on November 27, 1980, a bill was introduced in this House by the member for London South (Mr. Walker) in the absence and on behalf of the Attorney General. That was Bill 210, An Act to amend the Devolution of Estates Act. I will quote briefly from the statement the member for London South made that afternoon.

He said, "Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to introduce today a bill to amend the Devolution of Estates Act. Within the past year, certain problems encountered in attempting to deal with the estates of persons dying in Ontario who leave beneficiaries in the Soviet Union have been brought to the attention of the minister.

"It appears that exorbitant charges by the Soviet government, or its agents, and the low exchange rate for conversion of dollars into rubles result in a beneficiary receiving less than the amount he should receive. While it is clear that Ontario legislation cannot completely rectify such problems, we should attempt to prevent such abuses to the extent this is possible."

The member for London South continued with other background information concerning equivalent law, particularly with respect to some procedures in New York state. That bill, which was introduced in the House some 29 months ago, was followed by a bill introduced by my former leader, Dr. Stuart Smith, to amend the succession law legislation following a somewhat more expanded view of the problems that we had at the time.

The third step in this chain of events was the introduction of a bill similar to Bill 210 on April 21, 1981. The Speaker will recall that that was the opening day of a new session. In the presence of a crowded gallery and with the floor crowded with various notables and worthies, seated on the chairs brought in for that purpose, we had the Attorney General rise in his place and introduce that bill.

It was, of course, well received. The Attorney General himself introduced the bill, and we had, on behalf of my former leader, Dr. Smith, his private member's bill on succession law, which again repeated the complementary approach and referred at that time to the prospect of some $10 million to $20 million being involved in these matters.

As I have said, that bill was introduced on April 21, 1981, just two years ago, but there was no particular progress as a result of that introduction. Therefore, on April 22, 1982, a year after that event, I introduced Bill 87. As a result, we had a further attempt to bring this theme before the Legislature and, I hope, to encourage the government of Ontario to become involved further in this subject. It has been well over two years since we first saw the province moved by some suggestion in this area.

The bill I introduced dealt with the apparent intervention by some communist governments in the disposal of estates by Canadian citizens to relatives living in certain eastern bloc countries. It had been brought to our attention that in many cases beneficiaries living behind the Iron Curtain were receiving far less than the full amount of their bequest from the deceased Canadian relative because the governments involved were apparently deducting large legal fees and, of course, currency exchange charges were being applied before the funds were transferred. Indeed, it was estimated, for instance, that a beneficiary living in the USSR or in other eastern European countries would be lucky perhaps to receive one tenth of the money left to him or her in a Canadian will.

Where an Ontario resident stipulated in a will that a bequest be transferred to the beneficiary living behind the Iron Curtain in the form of parcels and gifts, a heavy duty fee was also imposed on the recipient of that gift. Moreover, it appeared often that an application would suddenly be made to Ontario courts on behalf of the apparent beneficiary to vary the manner of payment. That is, the court was asked to change the manner of payment from the use of parcels and goods to hard currency. Of course, present Ontario law generally allows for such a variance in how payment is made from a will.

At that point—and this is just a year ago—we had serious concerns that the relatives living behind the Iron Curtain were often being coerced by their government authorities into authorizing those applications to our courts. Normally, the signature on the document was taken as sufficient proof to our courts of their wishes.

Once a change in manner of payment was made, the authorities, of course, were taking their appropriate cut.

Finally, there were instances where claims from persons behind the Iron Curtain were entered against the estates of Ontario citizens. Those claims alleged the existence of a bona fide relative who was entitled under our laws of succession to a portion of the estate; and there is a real concern as to whether some of those claims were legitimate. For instance, there was a case where, upon the death of an Ontario man, Soviet authorities alleged the existence of a long-lost wife. The Soviets obtained a power of attorney from the alleged widow and also produced a copy of marriage certificates. This all came as a great surprise to the close friends of the deceased. After four years of an intense legal wrangle and the fortuitous discovery by friends of the deceased of some further evidence, the Soviets eventually backed down from the claim.

As can well be imagined, the use of our courts by communist authorities for their own advantage in the guise of promoting the claims of certain beneficiaries living behind the Iron Curtain is, of course, cause for considerable grief and consternation among many Ontario citizens of eastern European origin.

5:50 p.m.

It was the intention of the bill I introduced a year ago to help prevent the potential for abuse in this regard. The bill was based on three principles. Upon an application being made to the court, the court must be satisfied, first, that the foreign beneficiary is entitled to property from the estate; second, that the foreign beneficiary should receive substantially the full benefit of the payment being made to that person; and third, that the result would be a just and equitable one, having regard to the intentions of the deceased person.

The bill I introduced further gave the court the authority to consider a broader range of circumstances and evidence that might not normally be admissible in a hearing of this nature. It would allow, for instance, the admission of evidence relating to the general practices of Iron Curtain countries in these cases.

In addition, the bill would allow for the introduction of evidence to ascertain what would have been the deceased person's intentions in the circumstances. For instance, this might include evidence of friends and relatives concerning the alleged foreign beneficiary, the introduction of personal letters of the deceased and so forth.

Finally, the bill gave the court a broad range of options in carrying out its responsibilities. The court could order that the payment be made by way of parcels or goods or it could hold the payment in trust. Indeed, it might finally direct that the payment not be made and instead be divided among other legitimate beneficiaries.

In short, I believe our bill addressed the problem in three ways. It gave the courts jurisdiction to examine the broad context of an application of this nature; it gave our courts the wherewithal to examine all the relevant considerations; and finally, it gave our courts the flexibility to deal with the application in a just and equitable manner.

At this point I want to refer to a seminar held on February 3 at the University of Toronto under the sponsorship of the political science department of that university. Professor Gleb Zekulin was the introducer and the moderator of the seminar. The importance of this estates and wills area was once again stressed. Those attending the seminar were informed that perhaps 200,000 Canadians might be subject to Soviet law because they were born within areas controlled by the present-day Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. Under Soviet citizenship law it is jus sanguinis and not jus soli: that is to say, it is the law of the blood by which citizenship and obligations are traced rather than by the law of the location where the person lives.

Dollar values of these estates also came under discussion, but as a result of the Soviet law any person leaving the territory of the Soviet Union after December 15, 1921, is apparently still considered a Soviet citizen for matters of beneficiary claims and other responsibilities. His descendants are also involved. As indicated at that seminar, perhaps 1.5 million Canadians could be technically involved, supposedly with claims, as some aspect of Soviet citizenship law might be applied there.

Comments were also made at that time about the amount of money, as I have said. Once again, the range of some $10 million to $20 million annually seems to be the expectation and the result of those problems. The dollar value is uncertain. A lawyer who acts on behalf of the Soviet authorities in these matters, and whose name I will not even bother to mention, apparently stated that there are some 30 to 40 cases a month and the average size of the estate is $40,000. He later repudiated this in an interview with the Ottawa Journal, but in a letter to another lawyer he said he had some 400 files open regarding Soviet estates. So some $14 million to $15 million may be involved annually for the Soviet Union alone and, indeed, another equally large amount may well go to other countries in the Soviet bloc. We do not have any details of the amounts of moneys involved, because statistics are not kept on those subjects.

The monitoring of that area by Statistics Canada—or, indeed, under some federal theme, since that would be a better national approach than only a provincial plan—or at least by having some companion legislation in other provinces, would be useful, but we are not able to deal with those matters at this point. There were questions from the audience during that seminar that commented not only on the government's legislation but also on my own, in that the matter of falsifying evidence was not being otherwise particularly looked into. We, of course, are moving towards many more electronic methods within our courts, but many of the affidavits upon which decisions would have to be made would be documents from the USSR with no proof of the validity of signature, the contents of the document itself or any of the authorization by court officials as to whether it was appropriate or not.

I understand, of course, that the Attorney General has clearly been interested in this subject for some time. Indeed, as a result of that seminar Professor Yuri Lurij was involved in the discussions and was apparently one of the sources for the draftsmanship of the legislation we now have before us. The Attorney General accordingly was clearly interested in this subject, but we did not see in the dying several days of the last session whether we were going to have legislation or not, and I look forward to having a new bill proceeded with in this session of the Legislature.

On February 15 I gave the Attorney General a modest stimulus by suggesting that in the first week of a new session we should reintroduce the bill. I did not know whether that would stimulate him to proceed or not, but it was certainly my intention to do so. Accordingly, on April 19 I again introduced Bill 8, which was a copy of Bill 87, which had been before the House, now in the present form that we see, Bill 8.

This legislation's time certainly has come. We have been talking over this subject for well over two years, and it is a serious matter that affects a lot of people and is a concern to them, particularly among the ethnic communities in Metropolitan Toronto. As one who has received much support and consideration from those communities, as has the Attorney General, it is certainly an area about which we must be mindful and proceed to deal with this legislation.

Now at last we have before us Bill 29. It is, of course, a copy of that Bill 1 effectively, which was proceeded with several years ago. Just two weeks after its introduction, here we are debating it on second reading.

As I have mentioned, there is a particular problem, and this bill proceeds to deal with portions of that problem. It deals particularly with the requirement that our court must be satisfied both that a beneficiary is entitled to the payment and that he or she will receive substantially the full amount. Those are the two themes of this bill.

I suggest to members that the bill I had presented before the Legislature as Bill 8 would go further and might be better legislation. It might be better, for example, because in addition to deciding whether the beneficiary is entitled to a bequest and is likely to receive the full amount, the court would also be empowered to determine what would have been the wishes of the deceased person. That is, of course, particularly relevant in cases where no will has been left and where Soviet authorities have made claims on behalf of potential beneficiaries. For those cases the bill would have permitted the courts to hear a broader range of evidence than might normally be allowed, including evidence relating to the deceased person's intention.

Where it is clear that the deceased would never have either anticipated or intended that any payment be made to a beneficiary behind the Iron Curtain, the court could decide that no such payment would be made or it could decide that under the circumstances the estate could pass instead to other remaining relatives outside the communist bloc countries rather than tie the estate up in a trust for someone who might never be able to benefit from it.

In the comments the Attorney General made on first reading he suggested that those aspects of my Bill 8 amounted to confiscation and said he did not feel able to support that theme. I would ask him to reconsider, because I think there is the opportunity to base a better decision in circumstances such as these cases bring to us than we are going to see through the government legislation. I look forward to having the Attorney General consider the broader use of evidence and the ability of the courts to look behind some of the documentation that is presented.

Our bill would apply to real estate that might be transferred by way of succession law. Of course, it is more specific in its approach to the various situations involved. It would allow our courts to consider the broader range of factors, and I suggest it would be useful.

We on this side of the House will support this legislation. It has taken several years to bring forward. I know the Attorney General has looked forward to proceeding with the bill and for a variety of reasons, some beyond his control, was not able to do so until now. I commend the suggestions made in the companion legislation I have introduced and the changes presented in Bill 8. It would allow the courts a broader opportunity, and I suggest it might be worthy of consideration.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

Tuesday, May 17, 1983

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

ESTATES ADMINISTRATION AMENDMENT ACT (concluded)

Resuming the debate on the motion for second reading of Bill 29, An Act to amend the Estates Administration Act.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, if anybody in the assembly wants to have a friendly fingerprint taken by the Metropolitan Toronto Police, he can go up to Sherway Plaza tonight. The police want to accustom us as best they can to the whole process. One can visit a bomb shelter or have a friendly fingerprint taken. They did not say anything about a friendly photograph. Apparently the police want to acclimatize us to having our fingerprints taken.

Mr. Breithaupt: It is not even 1984.

Mr. Renwick: Not yet.

I know the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) will want to put this bill into committee; so we will not have to request that it go into committee, but I am going to suggest that it does.

Unfortunately, this is one of the occasions on which I agree with the Attorney General and disagree with the critic for the official opposition, my good friend the member for Kitchener (Mr. Breithaupt) with respect to Bill 29.

Our caucus will support the bill. Our caucus has agreed that we will support the bill on second reading. We agree with the end which the bill attempts to achieve. But achieving that end is a lot more difficult than I think my friend the member for Kitchener will agree or, I am sure, the Attorney General has found in the length of time it has taken to get the bill in a position where he was prepared to proceed with it.

I am not certain. I do not have the connections with the community of concern that the member for Kitchener obviously has, but I want to say to the member for Kitchener that I would be extremely concerned if the Attorney General were to accept the extension of the bill, meritorious as it may appear for the purposes of the end, to the question of what will happen to those funds and to provide through the court some method by which a redirection of funds could take place.

I do not think one can fool around in an oblique way with the fundamental question with respect to the devolution of estates and the way in which property can be dealt with. If one is going to deal with it in a way different from the expressed, written intentions of a testator or the expressed statutory provisions of the province on the death of a person, then I think one has to have compelling reasons for doing so.

To ask the court to do so in the sense that it is to reinterpret the intention of the testator or in some way try to come to a conclusion about what a testator or a person dying intestate may have desired with respect to the disposition of his property is a course on which one should not embark lightly, at least in my view of the question.

We support the intention involved in the bill, but I have serious concerns about achieving the goal the bill is intended to achieve. In my view, that is reflected in the language of the bill. For that reason we would like to discuss the principles of the bill in committee.

One can be quite certain that if there is a significant number of dollars tied up in estates because of this bill, there will be any number of efforts made to divert those funds to persons other than a testator, or the laws of this province in the case of an intestacy, would have provided.

I recognize that I speak without the ambit of authority with which the member for Kitchener, who has been interested in this bill for some considerable time, speaks about it. Indeed, I think it is fair to say that the first I heard of this problem was from the former leader of the official opposition, and it was the first occasion I had to consider it. Therefore I would like to have the opportunity to explore in a give-and-take way exactly what this bill does say when it is in committee of the whole House.

We have no amendments to propose, but it is the kind of bill which, even though it has been drafted in a careful way, raises some questions in my mind about what we are asking the courts of the province to do with personal property that would otherwise go in one direction, which is to divert that money in another direction.

For example, I am particularly concerned where, on the application, the money does not go the way in which either the laws of the province on an intestacy or the laws of the province in the case of a testacy respecting the will of the testator would direct it to go.

Even in the low-key way in which it is expressed in the bill, I have a concern about the provisions of subsection 4 where it says: "Where, upon an application under subsection (2)"—of course, the subsection should read "subsection 3," not "2" as printed in the bill—"the court is satisfied that a person other than a foreign beneficiary is entitled to the personal property, the court may by order direct its distribution to the person entitled."

I think that is an immensely onerous provision to impose on the courts. I do not pretend to know the answer, but I do think the record of the debate of this assembly on this rather extraordinary bill should show that we have considered the implications of it in supporting it, as we do in this party, because of the concerns I have expressed.

8:10 p.m.

I am not quite certain whether the member for Kitchener has discussed with his friend the member for Waterloo North (Mr. Epp) the implications of the proposal made by the member for Kitchener in the light of the resolution of the member for Waterloo North with respect to entrenching property in the constitution of Ontario.

Perhaps during the dinner hour the member for Kitchener has had an opportunity to talk with the member for Waterloo North and can enlighten us on the resolution of the apparent conflict which I see in the proposal he makes, which the Attorney General would say in a very soft, understated way was confiscation of property.

With those remarks on second reading, we would like the bill to go into committee of the whole house; but I understand the Attorney General will put it into committee because of the numerical errors in subsections 4 and 5.

Mr. Shymko: Mr. Speaker, I join the honourable members from the opposition in speaking in support of this bill. I am very happy, as we all are, that there is obvious unanimity in support of the act to amend the Estates Administration Act, namely, Bill 29.

I do concur with the previous speaker that perhaps for the benefit of those who are not aware of the details of the implications and tragic consequences of some of the actions taken by legal representatives on behalf of relatives in the Soviet Union, this should be discussed in committee because of the educational nature of what we are trying to do.

I wish to point out that over the past number of years, as the member for Kitchener certainly knows, various delegations have approached both the governing parties and the parties of the opposition, not only here in the Legislative Assembly but also at the federal level, to take some action to stop the shameful exploitation of estates by certain governments, and more specifically the governments of Communist regimes in central and eastern Europe.

What is tragic is that more than $10 million a year, the figure I have seen, is ripped off from Canadians by these actions. This is a form of blackmail and often leads to fear. Hard currency is something these regimes are after. I do not have to remind the members that Canadians of Czech and Slovak origin are required to pay between $2,000 and $5,000 if they want to renounce their citizenship. This is a very interesting example of how these regimes are seeking hard currency.

The procedure for obtaining hard currency is outlined by the manner in which the regimes collect it. First of all, if there is a beneficiary in the Soviet Union, for example, they demand that the estate be delivered in hard currency, not in parcels, even if a will left by the deceased states the beneficiary should obtain the estate money in or through parcels rather than in hard currency.

Very often, as the member for Kitchener has indicated, the Iron Curtain representative—and the prominent lawyer Gordon Price is a classic example—has demanded that if an application is made to Ontario, these applications specify that Ontario courts, on behalf of the beneficiary, change the manner of payment from parcels to hard currency.

If they do not succeed in their court action, an unprecedented heavy tax or duty, often five times that normally paid on parcels going to the Soviet Union, is imposed on these parcels. So the first thing the Soviet representative has always demanded is that the payment be in cash.

I do not have to remind honourable members that the real rate of exchange is less than the official rate of exchange of one dollar to one rouble. Currently on the black market in the Soviet Union the exchange is 80 roubles per US dollar, a little less for the Canadian dollar—from three to 12 times the official value of our currency.

It is interesting that in April 1983 in Radianska Ukraina, the largest-circulation daily of the Soviet Ukraine, there was an ad on behalf of the Soviet version of our Canadian Bar Association, an organization called In Jure Collegium. This ad called for people to come forward and indicate whether they had any relatives who had died in Canada, the United States or any of the countries outside the Soviet Union.

There is no doubt that great efforts are made to keep tabs on our senior citizens and to keep track of the obituaries in our dailies and in the ethnic press so that immediate action may be taken to proceed with an estate.

This collegium, or Soviet bar association, automatically collects 10 per cent of the estate before the case is even presented here in Canada. In addition to this, men such as Mr. Gordon Price, the well-known representative of the Soviet Union in this area of Ontario, collect a fee whose amount to this day we do not know.

There is also an estate tax, the figure of which we do not know, which is collected by the Soviet government; in addition, there is a local administration tax. So, as the member for Kitchener has pointed out, sometimes no more than 10 per cent of the original value of the estate finally ends up with the beneficiary.

I do not have to remind the members of the famous Toronto Star front-page announcement three years ago concerning the Ivan Franco senior citizen home in my constituency. All of a sudden a representative for Mr. Gordon Price appeared and said he would like to have details about Mr. So-and-So because of his estate. The man was still alive, and here they were ready to collect payment on a person who had not even been given a chance to leave this world. That is the type of urgency the Soviet Union has for hard currency.

I do not have to tell the members of cases of fraud or of forgeries. We have no control whatsoever today over the veracity of many of these beneficiaries.

I would like to point out that if a will has been drawn up, usually the Soviet government or its representatives are not as eager to contest it. But that challenge would be before the court. Many of these communities are seriously concerned and educating their members to draw up wills that will offer some protection to their estate when they are not around any more. That educative process is certainly recognized and is being stressed by various organizations, church groups and so on.

I stress that the member for Kitchener is to be congratulated on the initiatives he has taken on the part of Her Majesty's loyal opposition to sensitize all of us to this terrible ripoff of Ontarians and Canadians. I certainly congratulate the Attorney General for the determination to have this bill presented and passed before this House adjourns.

There are those of us who may have had the impression or may have tried to give the impression that there was no willingness on the part of this government to reintroduce the bill, that it was a pure façade of concern with no genuine intention. As a member of the caucus and having spoken to the Attorney General, I point out that we were ready last year to proceed with this bill. I will not say the time consumed in the ringing of bells and other incidents was the greatest obstacle that stopped the Attorney General from proceeding, but rather the other priorities, perhaps exaggerated, of some opposition members.

I give total credit and recognition to the member for Kitchener for his sensitivity, his understanding and his willingness today to support the bill and not to play around with amendments and other things. He is to be congratulated.

I wish to point out that most of these people have relatives—be they parents or their own children; and it is by force of tragic circumstances they are not with them today—and they would like these benefits to return to them. I do not have to outline that, no matter how terrible the Communist regimes feel this capitalist system of free enterprise is, they are certainly trying to rip off as much as they can from our system and the land of opportunity these people where these people have lived and cherished our free democratic society and free enterprise system.

There is a desire that the beneficiaries receive maximum benefit from the estate. The intent of the Attorney General and this bill is to assess whether the property will be unduly depleted and to guarantee a maximum return for the beneficiaries.

Most important, what this legislation will do is to signal to the Soviet Union and to other regimes in central and eastern Europe that they will not be able to play this game of exploitation as blatantly as they have in the past. That is the importance of this legislation.

With time, perhaps we will see whether some of the aspects that are termed as confiscatory in the member for Kitchener's bill will need to be implemented. We will see whether further amendments are needed.

I certainly support the bill and, in doing so, I point out that it is one of those very few occasions in the House when there is unanimity among all members in understanding an area that is of acute need because of the tragedy involved.

Mr. Kolyn: Mr. Speaker, it is certainly a pleasure for me to make a few comments on Bill 29. I have been looking forward to the bill coming here and being passed.

I would like to thank the member for Kitchener for his support and dogged determination to keep the issue alive. The member for Riverdale (Mr. Renwick) indicated he supports the bill in principle. Last but not least, the Attorney General should be thanked for giving this all the consideration he has given it, because it is a rather complicated bill.

I am not a lawyer, nor do I profess to be, but I have been involved with this for the past couple of years. Mr. Roy Kostuk has been involved in this type of operation and has always pointed out the pitfalls he has had when it came to wills and estates that went back to Iron Curtain countries.

With that, on behalf of all the ethnic communities, I thank the Attorney General for bringing the bill forward. I hope we will see it passed very soon.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I also want to take a few moments to pass on some comments. I think the bill has come about because of some urging from my riding of Haldimand-Norfolk. I know there were a couple of legal firms concerned. They dealt for many years with many foreign countries, such as the Soviet Union and Czechoslovakia. They had their families there.

It came to my attention that some changes should be made, which were passed along to my colleague the member for Kitchener and I think were passed on to the Attorney General.

I am certainly pleased some changes are going to be made to make sure that estate money earned here in Canada and Ontario will go to the proper people rather than to the state. Again I would like to congratulate my colleague and the Attorney General.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, this is an issue about which emotions can run deeply for understandable reasons. The thought of a Communist government ripping off estates, as has been expressed, is obviously a matter that has caused a great deal of concern within our Ontario community, a concern harboured by many of our citizens.

At the same time, it is important to keep in context the fact that governments do tax estates. In Ontario, we used to have something known as succession duty, and there used to be currency regulations of one kind or another; so the idea of governments benefiting as a result of a succession is not entirely a novel one.

This is legislation that is important and an issue about which we have been very concerned because fundamental to our concerns is that while, in the words of the legislation, we do not wish these estates to be "unduly depleted," on the other hand we do wish to respect the wishes of a testator and the fact that it is important the beneficiaries receive some degree of entitlement.

It is unfortunate that this legislation has not proceeded before. I attempted earlier to explain to colleagues the matter of not having sufficient House time. There were also concerns about the actual wording of the legislation. But it is quite clear that members from all parties are determined to get this legislation passed well before the end of the sittings. For this, I am very appreciative.

I appreciate that the member for Kitchener has made a thoughtful presentation in respect to his Bill 8. Without taking an undue period of time, I want to read into the record some of our concerns with his efforts, which were certainly well motivated and obviously the result of a good deal of care and effort on his part. These are several of our concerns:

"Firstly, since the purpose of the legislation is to ensure that beneficiaries will receive substantially the full value of any payments, it is unnecessary to extend the bill to real property. The beneficiary takes the property in specie, which is hardly ever done. The foreign government is powerless to seize a portion of it for itself. The land is converted to money before distribution. It then becomes personal property.

"In cases of intestacy and claims on estates by dependants, the intentions of the deceased are very difficult to determine and may well be irrelevant." As a matter of fact, they usually are irrelevant. "Regardless of intention, the law of Ontario provides that certain people are entitled to inherit property on the death of a person domiciled in Ontario or to make a claim for support against the estate.

"To rewrite the law only for potential beneficiaries in eastern European countries seems to us to be extremely unfair.

8:30 p.m.

"The private member's bill of the member for Kitchener, in our respectful view, goes beyond its stated intention, which is to ensure that payments are not made to foreign beneficiaries who are unlikely to receive substantially the full value of any payment. Even if a court decides that a beneficiary is entitled to the property and is likely to receive substantially the full value of the payment, the court can still refuse to direct any payment where it feels it would not be just and equitable, having regard to the intentions of the deceased person to do so.

"I should also like to state that a principle of the government legislation is that it is a custodial statute and is procedural in nature. It offers no threat to an heir's right to inherit, but his right to possession is held in abeyance until certain conditions have been satisfied. The estate is held in trust until the court is satisfied that the property will not be unduly depleted before it is received by the beneficiary.

"The private member's bill, in our respectful view," as I stated when I introduced the bill again, "is confiscatory in nature. Unless the court is satisfied that a beneficiary will receive the substantial benefit of the payment and that it is just and equitable, having regard to the intentions of the deceased, the beneficiary can be forever excluded from the estate. If there are no other heirs, the estate would cede to the crown. In our view, there simply is no justification for this approach."

I have read these comments into the record not to engage in an unnecessary or prolonged debate with my respected colleague the member for Kitchener, but to indicate to him that my advisers looked at his bill very carefully and they respected the effort that had gone into its preparation. I did not want him to think we were just dismissing it out of hand because it was a private member's bill. I am still mindful of the fact that he is the same private member who introduced the first amendment to our historic family law legislation, which was accepted and passed. That is an indication of our respect on this side of the House for the member for Kitchener.

I just wanted to indicate to him that we had looked at his bill very carefully. We respected the motives that prompted it, and I wanted to let him know that some thought had gone into our rejection of this approach. It is obvious whatever legislation is passed is going to have to be monitored. I should say in conclusion there is no doubt that much of the problem can probably not be alleviated totally satisfactorily by any legislation. It simply requires a significant educational effort and educational initiatives in the community that is concerned about this problem, so that wills may be properly drafted. I think they can be drafted in such a way as to avoid to a considerable extent some of the problems that arise, for example, in the very nature of the bequest.

As an illustration, if the testator wishes the beneficiary to benefit, it has been suggested that where we are talking about hard currency, instead of "hard currency," there could be "monthly packages of clothing" and other matter such as that. That is one approach that has been suggested. Quite apart from any legislative initiatives, which are important, there is no question that the educational value of a campaign to ensure that people, for example, do not die intestate and that their wills are properly drawn, probably in the long run will be more effective than any legislation.

I certainly would like to thank as well my distinguished colleagues, the member for High Park-Swansea (Mr. Shymko) and the member for Lakeshore (Mr. Kolyn) for their encouragement and their participation in the drafting of this legislation. I assume, Mr. Speaker, that this legislation is going to go to committee of the whole House and there will be an opportunity there to discuss further some of the issues that have been raised, particularly those issues raised by the member for Riverdale.

Motion agreed to.

Bill ordered for committee of the whole House.

House in committee of the whole.

LANDLORD AND TENANT AMENDMENT ACT

Consideration of Bill 32, An Act to amend the Landlord and Tenant Act.

On section 1:

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Philip moves that section 1 of the bill be amended by deleting the word "six" in line 2 of clause (c) of subsection 7 of the amended section 107 of the Landlord and Tenant Act and substituting therefor the word "four."

Mr. Philip: In moving this amendment I might indicate to the House that I have noted that at the same time I drafted this amendment, the Liberal Party drafted a similar one. They are both equal, and therefore it matters little which of us moves the amendment because we both had the same idea at the same time independently.

I wonder, Mr. Chairman, since my next amendment is a complementary amendment—it deals with section 2 of the bill and in effect deals with the same issue—if we might consider them both together and allow me to move my amendment to section 2. I think that will speed up the process somewhat.

Mr. Chairman: I would be willing to do that, except your first amendment deals with clause 107(7)(c) as set out in section 1 of the bill, does it not?

Mr. Philip: Yes, essentially though they deal with the same problem. What we are trying to do is to make this bill apply to all buildings which have four or more units, rather than six or more units. That is the essential thrust of both of these amendments. I would suggest that we will save some time if we debate that issue by moving the two amendments.

Mr. Chairman: I am in complete sympathy but I think that we do have a procedural problem of trying to deal with two amendments on the floor at the same time. I think we will just have to stick to the one.

8:40 p.m.

Mr. Philip: The purpose of this amendment, Mr. Chairman, is very simple. What we are dealing with is the fact that a great number of buildings will be exempt if the bill is passed in its present form. I am suggesting that the area that has been most affected, namely the community of Lakeshore, has a great number of six-plexes. A six-plex is not the kind of building normally bought by families.

While I can understand that the minister in bringing in his bill, Bill 32, would want to exempt small family buildings, I suggest that six units is high. It will simply mean that the very people we are trying to stop from evicting tenants—those merchandisers of that process of selling a building as a percentage interest with an allocation of an apartment and evicting the tenants in that process—will simply start merchandising smaller buildings using the same method and evicting the same kind of tenants.

In areas such as Lakeshore, where we have had some 800 tenants affected by the present end run around the Condominium Act, and the Attorney General has seen fit to respond to tenants and the opposition by introducing Bill 32, those same people will simply go and merchandise smaller buildings. That is the reason both the New Democratic Party and the Liberals saw this problem. We have moved that we simply reduce the size to four.

That will still allow families to buy a building and have provision for apartments for the grandparents and the sons and daughters. We think that four is a reasonable substitute.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Chairman, about whether it is the figure “four” or “six,” as I said earlier, it is something about which reasonable people can disagree. Both the member for Etobicoke (Mr. Philip) and the government caucus are attempting to accomplish the same thing by maintaining some degree of flexibility for families or people who have a close association.

With the greatest respect, on this issue of four or six to accommodate what we thought was a legitimate concern for families or people of close association, we thought we should leave it at six. This was the result of a debate. Whether the number “four” would be better as time goes on, only our experience will be the appropriate guide.

I urge the member for Etobicoke to consider that we have moved this legislation ahead, certainly in part as a result of his urging and that of other members of the Legislature. If it turns out that the figure “six” is a problem from the standpoint of people marketing this type of unit, then it is something we can look at again. But I am afraid I do not have any authorization at this point to take the figure “six” and substitute for it the figure “four.”

I would like to give the member for Etobicoke my assurance that if this turns out to be something that is being abused and people are being evicted as a result of individuals who do not have any particular relationship entering into occupancy agreements, this is something we can consider down the line.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Philip has moved an amendment to section 1.

All those in favour will please say “aye.”

All those opposed will please say “nay.”

In my opinion the nays have it.

Vote stacked.

Mr. Philip: Mr. Chairman, I have some questions to the minister on section 1 since we are in committee of the whole. It is on the principle of the bill that one may ask a fairly wide range of questions.

I have been raising this problem over a number of years as different lawyers come up with different ways of getting around the condominium conversion bylaws. The minister indicated he would be meeting with the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing (Mr. Bennett) and the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Elgie) to discuss this problem and would be bringing forth legislation within 10 days. He almost made his deadline and I congratulate him on that.

Can the minister give us any indication whether there is any legislation forthcoming from those three ministries, particularly the Ministry of Municipal Affairs and Housing, that would stop this problem once and for all? I am sure the minister understands this is a stopgap measure; it will prevent some 30 families from being evicted when they have their court hearings on May 30, but it really does not deal with—

Interjection.

Mr. Philip: There are 30 that I know of. There may be even more. None the less, we do know there are at least 30 that are scheduled for court hearings on one day alone this month. Some estimates indicate there are as many as 3,000 who may be affected by this bill.

Can the minister give us any indication of the results of those conversations with those ministers and of whether some substantial legislation to stop this practice once and for all, such as an amendment to the Planning Act, might be forthcoming?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Is this vote going to be stacked until 10:15 p.m.?

Mr. Chairman: No, he is just talking generally now.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I just wondered about—

Mr. Chairman: That is what I understood from members of the opposition. It is going to be stacked until the committee rises, which could be soon.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations is considering other legislation. I am sorry I cannot give the member for Etobicoke (Mr. Philip) any time frame.

I think the member is being quite fair. I do not want to be quarrelsome about it, but this 10 days was not the time frame for introducing the legislation; it was the time frame within which I would state the intention of the government. It is true I was just outside the time frame, but we did introduce the legislation on the same day.

The Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations is considering other legislation. I cannot give a commitment on behalf of that ministry that they will be introducing legislation prior to the report of the Thom commission. It is quite conceivable they will. I do not know of any intention on the part of the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing (Mr. Bennett) to introduce legislation in this area in the foreseeable future, but that is a question that could be directed to the minister during question period.

On section 2:

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Philip moves that section 2 of the bill be amended by deleting the word "six" in line 2 of clause (a) of the new subsection 4 of the amended section 110 of the Landlord and Tenant Act and substituting therefor the word "four."

Mr. Philip: The arguments are the same, Mr. Chairman.

8:50 p.m.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Philip has moved an amendment to section 2.

All those in favour will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the nays have it.

Vote stacked.

Sections 3 and 4 agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: We cannot do section 5. We will stand the bill down.

SMALL CLAIMS COURTS AMENDMENT ACT

Consideration of Bill 28, An Act to amend the Small Claims Courts Act.

On section 1:

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, when we were speaking on second reading this afternoon in connection with section 1 of the bill to amend the Small Claims Courts Act, Bill 28, which is before us, I raised the question of the tenure of officers of the courts. We were speaking about the clerks, bailiffs and referees of the small claims court. The Attorney General very properly and appropriately, because of what the statute provides, simply said, "That is the way it is in all the courts." That is exactly the issue I want to raise with him.

I am quite aware that under section 83 of the Judicature Act provision is made with respect to the Supreme Court as follows: "There shall be such officers of the Supreme Court as are considered necessary by the Lieutenant Governor in Council for the due dispatch of the business of the court, and such officers, subject to section" so and so, which is not applicable in this case, "shall be appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council."

I am also aware that the Interpretation Act specifically provides that authority to the Lieutenant Governor to make an appointment to an office shall be deemed authority to appoint during pleasure. Not being particularly knowledgeable about these matters, I had assumed the tenure of the officers of the Supreme Court was somewhat more secure than the provisions relating to the clerks, bailiffs and referees of the small claims court. That did not turn out to be the case and I was surprised. I had never had occasion to look at that.

I suppose the two contrasting poles are appointment during pleasure on the one hand and appointment during good behaviour on the other hand, illustrated by the present status of the clerks of the small claims court, for example, who have the least secure tenure and the judges of the Supreme Court of Canada, for example, who have the most secure tenure, because they are removable only upon the address of both Houses of Parliament.

I had a sensation that in the area in between it was about time we looked at the question of tenure with respect to the principal officers of those courts where the great bulk of the citizenry come in touch with the system, which are the small claims courts. In due course when occasion arises, when the bill the Attorney General has referred to—I think he refers to it as the administration of the courts act?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The Courts of Justice Act.

Mr. Renwick: The Courts of Justice Act: when that comes before the assembly we may have a more extended opportunity to look into this question.

It did seem appropriate to raise the point of the nature of tenure of the court officers in the little time that was available to do it. I did notice that in the Judicature Act there are significant provisions for protecting the Masters of the Supreme Court; it is set out in some detail in section 96 of the Judicature Act.

It was with that in mind that I simply adapted those provisions for the purpose of the amendment which I would like to propose to section 1 of this bill, so that we could have both the proposed amendment on the record in the interests of furthering a discussion of this kind of question, have a brief discussion about it and then let the matter lay at this point where it would fall with the suggestion.

Basically, my position is, I would be very concerned if the principal officials of all of the courts, the provincial courts and the Supreme Court, did not have some clarity with respect to the process by which they could be removed from office.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Renwick moves that section 20 of the Small Claims Courts Act, set out in section 1 of Bill 28, be amended to read as follows:

"(1) There shall be a clerk and one or more bailiffs for every small claims court who shall be appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council on the recommendation of the Attorney General.

"(2) The Lieutenant Governor in Council may appoint a referee for each small claims court, on the recommendation of the Attorney General.

"(3) A clerk, bailiff, or referee may be removed from office before attaining retirement age only for misbehavior or for inability to perform his duties properly, and only if,

"(a) the circumstances respecting the misbehavior or inability are first inquired into; and

"(b) the clerk, bailiff or referee is given reasonable notice of the time and place for the enquiry and is afforded an opportunity by himself or his counsel of being heard and of cross-examining the witnesses and producing evidence on his own behalf.

"(4) For the purpose of making an enquiry the Lieutenant Governor in Council may appoint a judge of the county court who shall make the enquiry and report therein and a judge so appointed has for that purpose the powers of the commission under part II of the Public Enquiries Act, which part applies to such enquiry if it were an enquiry under that act.

"(5) An order removing a clerk, bailiff or referee from office under this section may be made by the Lieutenant Governor in Council and the order and report of the enquiry shall be laid before the Legislative Assembly if it is in session or, if not, within 15 days after the commencement of the next ensuing session.

"(6) Every clerk, bailiff or referee shall retire upon attaining the age of 65 years.

"(7) Upon attaining an age for retirement under subsection 6 a clerk, bailiff or referee may be reappointed to hold office during any period but shall not hold office after attaining the age of 70 years.

"(8) A clerk, bailiff or referee may at any time resign his office in writing signed by him and delivered to the Attorney General."

Mr. Renwick: In speaking, if I may, to that amendment, I believe it is self-explanatory. It may appear somewhat unduly elaborate with respect to the provisions of the due process involved, and for the terms of the tenure which are provided, but I do commend it, at least the thought contained in it, to the consideration of the Attorney General. I think it would be a wise move for us to make, when one considers that officers of the court, as distinct perhaps from other employees, have a split authority with respect to their appointment, and I refer particularly to the comments made by the Chief Justice of Ontario at the opening of the court when he was commenting on the committee that reported on the Deschênes report on the independent judicial administration of the courts. It makes this distinction.

9 p.m.

Among the matters that must be—I emphasize must be—within control of the judges is that of the activity of court personnel but not their salaries or the general terms of their employment. In that particular unusual division of the authority with respect to those officers I do believe they should be entitled to some higher degree of protection than merely to hold their office during pleasure, which, so far as I know, is the most insecure form of tenure known to the English law.

I would submit that this amendment deserves consideration. I would appreciate a brief comment from the Attorney General about it.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Chairman, as I said earlier, this proposal is very interesting. It is certainly without precedent, considering the nature of the employment of these clerks and registrars in the court system outside the small claims court.

I indicated earlier that I would be unable to accept the amendment, but I would like to express my appreciation to the member for Riverdale in so far as putting forward the amendment is concerned because, as he suggested, it will form the basis for further discussion. It is a useful document to have for that purpose, certainly, at the very least.

This would be a very substantial, very significant and very far-reaching amendment. In my view it would be unwise to accept it without a lot of careful thought and consideration. However, as the member has stated, it is on the record. It will be the subject matter of further discussion, and certainly if we were to make such an amendment we would have great difficulty in making such an important amendment separate and apart from our new courts of justice legislation.

I accept this very significant and far-reaching amendment proposal on the basis that it will be the subject for further discussion in relation to this very important and comprehensive legislation, which will involve all of the courts under the title of the Courts of Justice Act.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate that the Attorney General has accepted it pretty much in the spirit in which I proposed it, and I think the germ of the idea reflected in this brief consideration of it is well worth exploring.

Mr. Chairman: All those in favour of Mr. Renwick's amendment will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the nays have it.

Motion negatived.

Sections 1 to 3, inclusive, agreed to.

On section 4:

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, I simply want to refer to what the compendium says that was provided with the bill. Section 4 provides for interest to run on small claims court judgements at the same rate as in Supreme Court, county court and district court judgements. Previously, interest could run on a judgement only where it was enforced by seizure and sale of goods. Since few judgements are enforced by seizure and sale, the previous law was very inequitable to judgement creditors.

Section 5 was complementary to section 4. I have no problem with section 5, because it was for practical purposes to remove the particular provision and provide it in this more omnibus one.

My comments this afternoon were quite simple and direct. There is nothing I know other than a spurious logic that would tell us at this point in the history of the small claims courts in Ontario that we should provide for an interest on judgement. We have never had it before; that we should have it at this point simply in order that it would accord with the same interest as in the Supreme Court and the county and district courts is not to my mind a reason.

I suppose it can be reduced, as the Attorney General likes to reduce these things, to a philosophic difference. It is a practical philosophic difference in the judicial system because it runs entirely contrary to everything I have ever read about the nature of the small claims courts, the purposes for which they were instituted and the expeditious way in which they were to be operated. There is nothing that indicates to me that the provision of this kind of interest on judgements in the small claims courts will do anything either to speed up, delay or alter the settlement of judgements by judgement debtors to their creditors. I rest my case at that.

We will never be able to persuade this government that the small claims court is not some kind of miniature Supreme Court but a qualitatively different court with a different concept and a different purpose, designed to ensure the speedy settlement of monetary disputes between citizens of the province in a way that is inimical to the lengthy processes reserved for the wealthier citizens of the province in the county courts and in the Supreme Court. All the jurisprudence, all the writings about the small claims court appear to have made no impression on the government of this province, because it now tends entirely to try simply to make the small claims court into some other kind of adjunct of the superior courts.

Anything that has been written in the last 30 years with respect to the need to reform the small claims court flies in the teeth of the proposed amendment. A spurious logic tells us that on this day of our Lord, May 17, 1983, this assembly should now agree that interest should run on judgements in the small claims court. Why, I do not know. I would have thought any kind of jurisprudential evidence would have been submitted to this assembly rather than a false and spurious Aristotelian logic in connection with it. It is for this reason that our party feels quite strongly about this view of those courts.

Of course, the constituents of most of the members sitting on the government benches deal only in the higher courts, so they are not faced with the problem. If you are in my riding, you go out to the small claims court in Scarborough. You have to get from Riverdale to the small claims court in Scarborough when somebody sues you for your account at Eaton's, for example, on the question of whether or not the equipment you received was any good. If you fail to pay and they sue you in that court, just imagine the amount of time you spend in public transportation getting to and from that court, without Eaton's having the luxury of a penalty provision with respect to interest imposed on the judgement, which the people in the Riverdale area have enough difficulty paying. They have enough difficulty competing against the persons who make these claims against them.

I take off my hat to nobody in connection with the obligation of people to settle their debts. But these courts are settling disputed debts when the settlement is made by the arbitrary judgement of the court, and the Attorney General does not provide any information whatsoever except from the 18th floor, or whatever floor it is, at 18 King Street East, where they have decided it must accord with what is done in the county courts and the Supreme Court. I find that kind of approach to jurisprudence as it affects the people in the riding of Riverdale utterly without merit.

9:10 p.m.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Chairman, I think the member for Riverdale has somehow forgotten—and it is not usual for him—that in the small claims court there has been pre-judgement interest since 1977. Given his logical bent of mind, I would have thought that if we in this Legislature approved pre-judgement interest back in 1977, he would have seen some modest degree of logic in extending it to post-judgement interest.

I say with great respect to him that there is not a member of this Legislature who does not have a lot of ordinary people appearing in the small claims courts of this province. Certainly the majority of citizens who are likely to find themselves in civil court in the great riding of Eglinton are more likely to find themselves in a small claims court than in the other courts.

There is a further consideration. In cases where judgement creditors are going to the small claims court or would be persuaded to go to small claims court, in our view if interest is allowed, they are not going to be more likely to take it to a higher court if their claim can fall within that jurisdiction.

I think the very fact that we put the small claims court on the same basis as the other courts may encourage some litigants who might technically have a case that can be proven in the county court to restrict their claim to the small claims court jurisdiction with a saving of costs all around.

Sections 4 and 5 agreed to.

On section 6:

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, my point is again quite simple. Section 6 is going to provide for what is referred to in the compendium of information provided to us with the bill as some minor changes and so on. They are not particularly minor; they are going to grant to the collection agencies the authority to file executions against the land of a judgement debtor.

Assuming for the moment that judgement debtors in the small claims court have land, one will find in most of the cases—and I can state this just as categorically because there is no other evidence available to contradict it—that it will be the home of the person. I do not happen to believe in this day and age that the collection of this kind of debt awarded in the small claims court should be at the expense of levying against the land of the person when in most cases it is his private home.

I do not know whether the Attorney General has any idea of the trauma most people feel if they find out they have an execution levied against their home. It certainly is very traumatic for elderly people and it is very traumatic for people who are not aware of all the ins and outs of the law.

The method of collecting debts through the bailiffs and through the courts is adequate without judgement creditors having the benefit of this ancient and time-worn method of levying against real property. In the bill the Attorney General said, "All right, if they do levy it, what does it really matter, because what we are going to do is make certain that once you have paid your bill, it will be the responsibility of the person who placed the execution on the property to take it off the property."

One can imagine how convenient that will be when one reads the provision that is going to be added to carry it out:

"Where an execution against lands has been filed with the sheriff and the judgement is fully satisfied, the judgement creditor or his agent shall cause the execution to be withdrawn promptly and shall be liable to the judgement debtor for any reasonably foreseeable loss resulting from failure to do so."

Again, if my friend the Chairman were able to speak and participate in this debate, as a practicing solicitor he would well know how fraught with nonsense that kind of provision is with respect to the irritation and the frustration that can be caused by a judgement debtor, who, having had this iniquitous execution levied against his land, pays up his account, which he intended to do in any event, and then finds some time later, of course, that there is still the execution levied against his land, because the collection agency or the client of the collection agency has not quite gotten around to lifting it.

The day he turns around to sell his house, of course, his solicitor says to him, "What about this execution against your land?" "Oh," he says, "I paid that." "Well, we will have to get rid of it. Who put it on?" "Well, so-and-so, but so-and-so is out of business now. How do we get it removed?" "Oh, you can make an application to the court." "Will that cost anything?" "Of course it will cost—you know, a few dollars." That is how it will go.

We find that every time the encroachment is made upon ordinary people by the judicial system we have a little bit given on the other hand as though that evens the balance. I simply say to the Attorney General with all the force I can, and in the parliamentary way in which I want to say it, that the provision under the Small Claims Courts Act for executions to be levied against the land of judgement debtors, is iniquitous and it is contrary to the philosophy and the concept of the small claims court. It is a step backwards, I would like to think, only to the 18th century; it is probably a step backward to the feudal system in England in the 14th century. I and my caucus are quite opposed to this attitude that the Attorney General has towards small claims courts.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Chairman, I would like the member for Riverdale to tell the tens of thousands of ordinary small judgement creditors that he believes in having a small claims court system in which one can obtain judgements but one cannot enforce them. If that is what he wants, I do not think it would be acceptable to most of the ordinary folk in this province.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, let me just briefly respond. I am not against the enforcement of judgements. People should pay their debts; people should meet judgements made by the courts. But we do not need to give one party in the game an overwhelmingly strong position as against the other. The Attorney General knows that justice is generally known as a balance. There is an ancient statue of a blind person with two scales. It is a balance and it is an evenhanded proposition, and this is not evenhanded. Of course, it will have to await the incoming of a New Democratic Party government to deal properly with the Small Claims Courts Act, and I leave the matter at that point.

Sections 6 to 10, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill ordered to be reported.

ESTATES ADMINISTRATION AMENDMENT ACT

Consideration of Bill 29, An Act to amend the Estates Administration Act.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if in opening I should say that I am grateful to the member for Riverdale for pointing out, first of all, some typographical errors in the bill as printed, and we will be introducing the appropriate amendments.

9:20 p.m.

I would also like to say I was interested in the comments of the member for Riverdale on subsection 19a(4) of the act as set out in subsection 1(1) of the bill in relation to foreign beneficiaries. As I understood his brief comments and as I directed my attention to that subsection, it was my view that there was some confusion on the basis of whether a person is or is not a beneficiary. I would like to say in opening that it is our intention to amend subsection 19a(4) by striking out the words "foreign beneficiary" and substituting therefor the words "person resident in a country designated by regulation under this section."

I wanted to make an opening statement in regard to the direction in which we were going, because I think the member for Riverdale made a very valid observation in relation to this section and the confusion. What we are trying to do in that subsection is to provide for a situation where, if the purported foreign next of kin turns out to the satisfaction of the court not to be the next of kin, the court could make the appropriate substitution. I think the member for Riverdale is quite right, as I understood his comments, that either one is a beneficiary or one is not a beneficiary, and he naturally expressed some interest in the basis on which a court would be satisfied that a person other than a foreign beneficiary would be entitled to the personal property.

I am grateful to him for bringing this to my attention, as well as these other issues that will be the subject matter of amendments. I thought it would be helpful if I just made these brief observations in opening with respect to the legislation being in committee of the whole House.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Chairman, we have a further change to subsection 19a(4). I assume the Attorney General is going to place that as well, or shall we proceed to deal with those amendments, since they are all within the first section of the bill? If they can be agreed to, perhaps we can handle all three seriatim.

Mr. Chairman: I think we should deal with one at a time.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Chairman, my colleague the member for Lake Nipigon (Mr. Stokes) asked me whether Latin was an accepted language under the rules of the House, and I assured him it was.

I do not have any problems with the amendments. Indeed, I appreciate the Attorney General responding to that concern of mine. My concern, strangely enough, was that somehow or other the concept that the member for Kitchener, with the best of intentions in the world, was trying to introduce—which I, with great respect, disagreed with—gave some latitude in the court to pick and choose who was going to get the money. I was a little bit worried about that. I think that was why the anomaly of the term "foreign beneficiary" appeared when I read the bill.

What I really wanted to have a brief exchange about in committee of the whole House was the vast difference between the very low-keyed statement the Attorney General has always made and the statements made by the member for Kitchener, not by way of exaggeration but in dimensions of the problem, and echoed by the member for High Park-Swansea (Mr. Shymko), about the number of dollars involved, the number of estates involved and the number of countries involved.

We get a compendium of information provided by the Attorney General that simply says, "Within the past few years, members of Toronto's Ukrainian community, particularly lawyers of Ukrainian ancestry, have brought to the attention of the Attorney General certain problems they have encountered in attempting to deal with the estates of persons dying in Ontario who leave beneficiaries in the Soviet Union."

I would like to know whether the rhetoric is correct: that it is also a problem with a number of countries lying behind the Iron Curtain. In so far as the information the Attorney General has is concerned, is it limited to the Soviet Union in relation to the encroachment on the value of legacies and bequests going to persons in the Soviet Union? Which countries does he intend to designate? Is it restricted to members of the Ukrainian community, or have there been a number of other cases?

I think the member for Kitchener referred to a lawyer having 400 files and said that the number of dollars was in the millions; the member for High Park-Swansea referred to it in the same rhetorical terms. What is the dimension of the problem we are dealing with? Is it the limited problem the Attorney General refers to related to the Soviet Union and to members of the Ukrainian community—I am not diminishing the seriousness of the problem—or is this a much broader problem related to a number of countries behind the Iron Curtain?

I would appreciate it if the Attorney General, who must have the information, could put it into some kind of perspective for us.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Chairman, it is a little difficult to measure the extent of the problem, because no one has been able to monitor the actual amount of money involved. It is believed to involve a large amount; the term "millions of dollars" is frequently mentioned.

I do not know of any system we could implement that would monitor the actual amount of money involved. Certainly it is a strongly held view that a number of these estates not only in the Soviet Union but in the Soviet-bloc countries are being, in the words of the legislation, "unduly depleted." The beneficiaries, whether they are named or those under an intestacy, often receive a small fraction of the amount of the bequest.

There is another issue that has caused some concern. It is an issue that is not directly dealt with in this legislation, because it is really an evidentiary matter. This is the concern that when some of the beneficiaries come forward as a result of an intestacy in the Soviet Union and other countries—Czechoslovakia, the Ukraine, Hungary, etc.—there is some doubt as to the legitimacy of these beneficiaries. To put it in very blunt terms, are they the people they purport to be? This is not dealt with in this legislation, but it does help to increase the level of concern with respect to this issue.

When it comes to measuring the extent of the problem, I am afraid I cannot be of much assistance other than to say that on a number of occasions I have met with lawyers of eastern European origin who have acted on a number of estates. They have provided me and my colleagues within the ministry with a fairly convincing case that there is a significant problem, but the actual extent of the problem is very difficult to measure.

9:30 p.m.

Again, we have made it clear to them that our legislative approach is not going to eliminate the problem. We hope it will help to persuade the officials in the countries involved that if they are going to be unreasonable with respect to the various costs that are applied, legal or otherwise, a court in Ontario may come to the conclusion that the estate has been unduly depleted and simply hold the money in trust, as opposed to any escheat to the crown, until it is satisfied that the estate has not been unduly depleted.

Obviously this criterion as to what is an undue depletion is a relatively general one and the courts will have to deal with each case on its own particular factual situation.

Mr. Renwick: I appreciate those comments as well because the question of some form of fraudulent impersonation of who is entitled to it is a problem every court must be alert to regardless of the origin. I can appreciate the problems might well be compounded and I thank the Attorney General for the clear statement that this bill does not deal with that problem in any way. I think I have some sense of it.

I do not want to pursue this too far. Is the Attorney General in a position to tell us now which countries he intends to designate by regulation? My clear understanding now is that this does not grant any extra jurisdiction to the courts. Is that correct? Their obligation is simply to find out who the beneficiary is and, having found out who the beneficiary is, in the one case, if they are satisfied that it will not be unduly depleted, to pay over the money; if they find out it will be something called "unduly depleted," to hold it or to require the personal representative to hold it. That is the way I read this bill.

The obvious question is how long do they hold it? What is the open-ended nature of this trust which is created? Is that something we leave for some other legislators in this assembly at the turn of the century? I will probably be the only one still here when that comes around.

I am not criticizing. I believe this is the correct way to do it, but I think the record should clearly show that these funds are held either by the court if it is money, or by the personal representative if it is personal property other than money, and they are held indefinitely for the person who is determined to be the beneficiary. It is a very open-ended requirement.

I do not know the answer, but I would simply ask the Attorney General to let me know whether my understanding is correct on those two points, that is, the designated countries and the indefinite nature of these trusts.

Is the purpose of subsections 6 and 7 in obtaining these reports which are to be prescribed by regulations simply for the purpose of trying to monitor what is happening and provide information? What other purpose do they serve?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I can answer most of this fairly briefly by saying that all the observations that have been made by the member for Riverdale reflect my understanding of the legislation, with the exception of the designated countries about which he has asked me a specific question that was not dealt with directly. I expect the countries that will be designated—outside of the USSR—will be Poland, Hungary, Czechoslovakia, Latvia, Estonia and Lithuania. If there are any additional suggestions, we will consider them. But fundamentally those are the nations we expect to have designated.

On section 1:

Mr. Chairman: Hon. Mr. McMurtry moves that subsection 19a(4) of the act as set out in subsection 1(1) of the bill be amended by striking out “(2)” in the first line thereof and inserting in lieu thereof “(3).”

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: There is a further amendment to that same subsection.

Mr. Chairman: Is there? Let us deal with the first one.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Hon. Mr. McMurtry further moves that subsection 19a(4) of the act as set out in subsection 1(1) of the bill be amended by striking out the words “foreign beneficiary” in the second line and inserting in lieu thereof the words “person resident in a country designated by regulation under this section.”

Mr. Breithaupt: It is interesting to see that change. As I read it at least, the minister almost repeats the terms of his definition in subsection 19a(1) rather than leave the phrase “foreign beneficiary.” Is there some difference in not having the word “beneficiary” involved but instead the word “person”? Is there a reason for that? If there is, it has escaped me.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The member for Riverdale drew this to my attention. He wondered under what circumstances the court would be satisfied that a person other than a foreign beneficiary would be entitled to the personal property. The court may by order direct its distribution to the person entitled.

When he raised that issue, in looking at it, what occurred to me was that either one is a foreign beneficiary or one is not a beneficiary. What the legislation appeared to be stating was that, notwithstanding the fact that one is in law a beneficiary under an estate, the court would still have the authority to designate somebody else to receive the property in one's stead. That, to me, was not the intention of the legislation.

The intention of that subsection was, where, during the course of the application it became clear that the person resident in the foreign jurisdiction, the purported beneficiary, was not in fact the legal beneficiary, the court would have, in the course of the proceedings, the right simply to substitute, where it could be ascertained on an application. If there was an issue about this the court would have to direct a trial of the issue. The confusion I saw as a result of having this pointed out by the member for Riverdale was that either one is or is not a beneficiary in law.

I repeat that the purpose of this section was, where, during the course of the application it became clear that the purported foreign beneficiary was not the legal beneficiary, in other words, if the person on whose behalf the claim was made was not a legal beneficiary, the court on the proper evidence could substitute the “person entitled” in the words of that subsection.

Mr. Breithaupt: I suppose the minister could follow through on the theme that the law defines the term “beneficiary,” except that in this section there is a clear definition of the phrase “foreign beneficiary.” What he is doing in his amendment is replacing the term “foreign beneficiary” with what he has defined a foreign beneficiary to be. I am not quite certain why that is happening.

We see, and I have a note here, that if another person is entitled, then the foreign beneficiary—that is, the person upon whose account this application is being made—is not a beneficiary at all. Therefore the change is made to avoid using the word “beneficiary” at all in that subsection. That explanation makes somewhat more sense, but I presume that is because the counsel wrote it, and neither I nor the Attorney General attempted to define it.

9:40 p.m.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The foreign beneficiary, as defined in 1981, means a beneficiary as opposed to a person who is resident. That is the distinction. After it was directed to my attention by the member for Riverdale, it seemed to me there was some confusion. I relied upon our expert draftsmen to remove that confusion.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: Hon. Mr. McMurtry moves that subsection 19a(5) of the act as contained in subsection 1(1) of the bill be amended by striking out “(2)” in the first line and inserting in lieu thereof “(3).”

Motion agreed to.

Section 1, as amended, agreed to.

Sections 2 to 4, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill, as amended, ordered to be reported.

MOTOR VEHICLE DEALERS AMENDMENT ACT

Consideration of Bill 3, An Act to amend the Motor Vehicle Dealers Act.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2:

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Philip moves that section 2 of Bill 3 be amended by adding the following clause (s):

"Providing for the payment of claims by purchasers of a new motor vehicle to permit the replacement of such a vehicle which, before the first anniversary of its delivery to the purchaser, or before the vehicle has been driven 20,000 kilometres, has been the subject of four attempts to repair a defect by the manufacturer, the motor vehicle dealer or an agent thereof, has been out of service for an aggregate period of 30 days or more in the course of attempted repairs by the manufacturer, the motor vehicle dealer or an agent thereof, and whose defect remains substantially uncorrected."

Mr. Chairman: I am wondering, if it is all the same to the member for Etobicoke, if there is any discussion on clauses (o), (p), (q) or (r). No discussion? Carried.

The member for Etobicoke on his amendment.

Mr. Philip: Mr. Chairman, essentially this is a copy of Bill 20, which I introduced, known as the Lemon-Aid Act, or An Act to protect the Purchasers of New Motor Vehicles.

With the trend towards lower interest rates, there are some preliminary indications that with the upturn of new car sales we will once again face a proliferation of complaints by new car owners about the fact they have bought cars that are lemons, that have had large numbers of days in the repair shop for substantially the same faults and that the warranty is not working.

We know the difficulty of class action suits in this province, and in this country. My colleague the member for Welland-Thorold (Mr. Swart) has spoken on that topic on numerous occasions and indeed has introduced a private member's bill.

In the absence of such legislation it seems to us fairly clear that we need some protection for the consumer who happens to purchase a lemon. This is not an innovative idea on my part; in fact, it is a fairly close copy of the state of Connecticut's automobile warranty, or lemon law, which I have put into the Ontario statutes.

Those who have reviewed the literature on Connecticut and on two or three other states that have introduced similar legislation, know that this does provide some protection to the consumer.

I have a thick file on one case alone, which I have sent to the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Elgie), where a person who came to see me has shown that he has gone back time and again—over 25 times—for essentially the same complaint.

A couple of years ago I had the situation of a constituent who came to me with a car that was warped. The dealer could do nothing about it. Because of the way in which the frame was bent, he got an unwanted shower every time it rained. We never did resolve that problem.

When one called the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations they simply said: "All we can do is act as a mediator." Well, they act as a mediator and what invariably happens is that the dealer says it is not his problem, it is the company's problem, and the company says, "Go and see your dealer."

The Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations has indicated in a recent article in the Star that he would consider action in the way of protecting new car owners. I am facilitating that by moving an addition to this act of what essentially he and the Attorney General have expressed some interest in in my Bill 20. It will make it a lot easier if we pass this right at the moment rather than wait for my private member's bill to come up, at which time no doubt the government would rush to pass it.

Mr. Swart: It would steal it.

9:50 p.m.

Mr. Philip: I do not use the word "steal" because that is unparliamentary and the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) and I have now resolved our differences on that bill. It has been taken care of.

I urge all members of the Liberal Party carefully to consider our proposal. We hope the Liberals will vote for it and we hope the government will similarly support the amendment.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Chairman, briefly, as the member for Etobicoke knows, he introduced this bill only a few minutes after I had informed him I had a similar bill ready on the very same day that I was going to introduce, and we discussed that. I believe it was also on that very same day I flew in from Ottawa with the member for Carleton (Mr. Mitchell) on board the same flight and I informed him I intended to introduce a bill regarding "lemon" automobiles, if that is a proper word to use.

There are a couple of things that particularly concern me. One is the practice of automobile dealers repairing brand new cars and selling them without notifying the purchasers of such cars that those automobiles were damaged and subsequently repaired. As the member for Etobicoke clearly stated, the case of a bent chassis or undercarriage of an automobile is certainly an example of that.

Where an automobile may have been in a major accident in the process of transit from the manufacturing plant to the dealer, it would subsequently have been repaired by that same dealer under no obligation ever to report such damage to the new customer.

The dealer could repair that automobile using such products as putty, plastic and other kinds of body-filling material, and repaint it, never notifying the purchaser of the automobile and never breaking any law by doing so. Thus, the customer could be sold an automobile which would undoubtedly not last as long as one which had never been damaged, thereby causing on a long-term basis—maybe in some cases on a short-term basis—a very difficult situation for the owner of that automobile.

That only takes into account matters such as problems with the body of the automobile itself. Even more fundamental are issues such as truly mechanical problems, motor problems, transmission problems, drive train problems and so forth. The same situation occurs. Theoretically, a dealer could remove an automobile from the truck that delivers it, rev the engine and the engine could be defective; it could blow a piston or something like that. The dealer could repair that vehicle, never inform the customer and sell it as a new automobile because if it has not been previously owned it is still a new automobile.

A customer for such an automobile deserves to be afforded better protection. One of the methods of arriving at such protection, in the first year at least, is to have a bill such as Bill 20, proposed by the member for Etobicoke and also as proposed in this amendment which is similar if not exactly the same as Bill 20.

The owners of automobiles in other jurisdictions have such protection, as the member for Etobicoke has said. He has named the state of Connecticut. I believe California also has similar legislation. Massachusetts is contemplating or working on similar legislation right at this moment, as are several other jurisdictions in North America.

This amendment certainly warrants the support of each and every one of us, and it is our hope the member for Carleton, in his capacity as parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations, will see the value of such legislation and the great benefit it could have for the consumers of this province. I know he is a very concerned person and, as one who wants to protect the consumers of this province, will undoubtedly be in favour of such a bill.

Mr. Martel: He got his marching orders.

Mr. Boudria: As the member for Sudbury East (Mr. Martel) has stated, he may have received orders to the contrary and been told not to support this very important amendment, but we as a party would like to support it. As I said earlier, we had a very similar bill that I had myself proposed. It is our hope that the government is revealing a new philosophy that it has undoubtedly had since the recent trust companies incident, that it now has to take an active interest in the protection of consumers. We all know it will endeavour to do this.

Perhaps the member for Carleton will say that such a bill will be more effective if it was at the federal level. Undoubtedly that point will come up because it has been said in the past by others. Although we agree that other legislatures could do their share as well for the protection of consumers, I believe that certainly it is our duty and incumbent upon us as legislators to support this amendment to help the consumers of Ontario in purchasing new automobiles, either domestic or imported.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Chairman, when Bill 3 was before us there was unanimous support for the principle of this bill which gave some additional protection to purchasers of new vehicles against default on the part of the dealer. I would rather hope that this same sense of political ecumenism would apply to this amendment which has been put forward by my colleague from Etobicoke. It certainly adds to the bill; it provides a very needed additional measure of protection to purchasers of automobiles.

Of course I have an interest in it apart from the fact that I have had some part in consumer matters. Since I have been a member I can recall offhand at least three or four occasions when people had bought new cars which were lemons and they could not get the problems corrected. That had a substantial adverse effect on them, not only financially but psychologically.

One person had bought a car that turned out to be one of the purest lemons ever purchased by a consumer. It was a foreign car and that is another reason there is need for this legislation.

In our Canadian-made and American-made cars, we do have some avenues of appeal—not a certain measure of getting redress—directly to the manufacturers. When one gets into the purchase of a foreign car, one cannot follow that same route to the top. Therefore, it is more difficult—

Mr. Boudria: It is a little hard for the people with Ladas, for instance.

Mr. Swart: Particularly the people with Ladas, but even the Japanese cars; with all of the foreign makes it is much more difficult to get redress. Therefore this kind of bill becomes more essential.

The woman I referred to had bought this foreign made car from a dealer in the St. Catharines area and found it totally unsatisfactory. It was breaking down all of the time. She took it back and never did get satisfaction. Eventually, she wrote a book about it, which was published. I want to tell members that it had a long-term effect on her psychologically.

10 p.m.

On another occasion, a purchaser paid a substantial amount for a truck. After he purchased this truck, he found out the chassis had been altered from the specifications of the truck he thought he had purchased. I guess it was a special order that had been made. He had trouble with the transmission and with the drive shaft, and that continued. He lost literally thousands and thousands of dollars on that truck.

I suspect that if we had had this kind of legislation—and it may have had to be broadened somewhat—that it could have dealt with the issue of the Chevmobile. People bought Oldsmobiles thinking they were getting a car with an Oldsmobile engine and later found out it had only a Chevrolet engine in it.

The Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations at the time, the member for Scarborough Centre (Mr. Drea), blustered about that and said he would make these companies come to heel. He would not settle for the $200, as they had done in lots of other jurisdictions. The end result was the people got nothing. They were out entirely the difference in value between that Oldsmobile motor and the Chev motor.

More recently, there has been—and I have had some occasion to bring this to the attention of the current Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Elgie)—trouble with a light transmission being put in some cars. I have forgotten what make it was right now, but inadequate and light transmissions have been put in a cars which, by all specifications, should have had heavier transmissions.

As I say, it may be the legislation would have to be broadened to deal with all of these particular problems. The amendment by my colleague the member for Etobicoke might not quite cover all of these, but I suggest to the parliamentary assistant that even if it does not, it is a good start.

Although the member has intimated—and I take his word for it and perhaps he is going to make a further commitment when he gets on his feet—that there is in the works some consumer protection legislation with regard to lemons and these other problems, I would suggest the best way to prove good faith that they are going to bring this in is to accept this amendment at the present time.

If they bring in a bill to further amend the present Motor Vehicle Dealers Act to incorporate more consumer protection measures, they can always amend and delete this amendment by my colleague the member for Etobicoke. But if we accept it at this time—because this is a measure that is needed certainly as much as any other—then it does show a degree of good faith. On that basis, I would ask the parliamentary assistant to consider support of this amendment and to incorporate it in the legislation we have before us.

During the years I have been in this Legislature, we have had a great many commitments made on that side of the House about legislation they intended to table in order to correct problems. Time after time we have had both opposition parties move amendments to legislation brought before this House to incorporate those further provisions. The government has always seemed to turn them down on the excuse, "We are going to bring in more comprehensive legislation and, therefore, we do not want to touch this at the present time."

In many instances, I do not doubt the good intentions of the members of the government in doing this, but in practice the majority of those amendments have never been brought to this Legislature for a variety of reasons. Whether there is no time to deal with them, whether there have been changes in the ministries, or whether the ministers themselves have moved from one ministry to another, they have not come before this House. Therefore, more and more, regardless of good intentions, I am inclined to feel we must use every opportunity when we have amending legislation brought in by the government to tag on our amendments that we think will improve the situation.

I think this is one amendment that even the government would feel there could be no harm in passing, that it would only improve the situation as it wants to improve it. Although it may not be as comprehensive as it would hope it could be by bringing in its own legislation in the future, it would certainly show good faith on its part. The big thing is we would have it in place now.

I am sure the Liberal Party is going to support this amendment. If we could now have concurrence from the government side of the House tonight, we could make this improvement people have been waiting for for years.

In conclusion, I say to the parliamentary assistant, who talked to me about this privately, perhaps he can rise up now and say, "Yes, we are going to bring in legislation on our own, but because this is part of any legislation we bring in we will support it right now."

Mr. J. M. Johnson: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry to disappoint the member for Welland-Thorold, but the member for Carleton (Mr. Mitchell) is not going to rise up now in answer to his question because I want to make a few comments. Those members seem to feel they have the right to speak whenever they want, but I think some of the government members should have the right to express themselves.

Interjections.

Mr. J. M. Johnson: All right; calm down. I would like to go on record as saying I fully support the concept of the motor vehicle dealers compensation fund, but I have a bit of a problem with it. Perhaps it can be resolved with the ministry.

Mr. Martel: We hope you will support the bill then.

Mr. Charlton: It's your amendment.

Mr. J. M. Johnson: Just cool it. My father was in the car business all his life, 40 some years. I think I know a little bit about car sales and the background to that. I have 25 to 30 dealers in my riding. They are small dealers selling 20, 30 or 40 cars in a year.

I find a discrepancy in Addison on Bay Ltd. paying $150 a year and my small, individual dealers are supposed to pay the same amount to create a fund of $1 million. I think it should be related more to the policy in the travel business where the fee is based on volume.

Mr. Swart: Turn around and talk to the guy behind you.

Interjections.

Mr. J. M. Johnson: I do not see anything in here about lemons. I thought the member was talking about lemons.

I will be brief. The parliamentary assistant is getting quite agitated. He wants me to quiet down so I will only take a couple of minutes. All I am saying is I understand that when this bill is brought in there will be consultation with the car dealers. I hope they will take into consideration the fact that there should be some equity in the charges levied against the dealers based on the volume of the franchise. I hope that is reasonable. It does not seem to me to be out of the way. I would hope the members across the floor could support that type of proposition.

10:10 p.m.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Chairman, while I chat my colleague is drafting an amendment that I might be prepared to move which would incorporate that very idea being presented, unless the parliamentary assistant is prepared to do it. I would take my place if he is prepared to move that amendment.

I am sure those of us on this side of the House are all prepared to accept an amendment that would protect the small dealers. I understand what my colleague says. If the parliamentary assistant wants to move the amendment so that it does not come from the opposition, I am prepared to take my place. If he is not, then I—

Mr. Mitchell: There is no fee structure, in fact.

Mr. Martel: Let me make two points as a member who once had a lemon and over a two and half year period had 14 sets of brake shoes put on that car. When I finally got rid of it, it was still not working. I remember driving down Highway 400 going home one weekend in July and it let go in the middle of a holiday weekend. I was in the middle lane and the brakes let go again. I had 14 sets of brake shoes put on that one car. It was frightening.

They could not get to the basis of the problem nor would they take the car back. I was stuck with a car on which the brakes went on 14 different occasions, and there was no recourse for me. My dealer tried everything under the sun to find out what was wrong. He brought in the experts but they could not find it; yet there was no way they would replace it.

There I was out on the highway driving a car which was a hazard to me, my family and every other person who came remotely close to my vehicle. It was an eerie experience. I was absolutely delighted, in one sense, to get rid of it, but I knew that some other poor fish was going to have that car; and I had bought it new.

Mr. Treleven: Why did the member not junk it?

Mr. Martel: Unlike some of those legal people, those of us in the Legislature in those days could not afford it. Not being in the cabinet, I did not have a chauffeur-driven limousine like my friend the government House leader, so I had to put up with this ruddy car which was a hazard to everyone on the highway.

Let me make my second point. I totally agree with my friend the member for Wellington-Dufferin-Peel (Mr. J. M. Johnson) that it would be unfair to charge everyone the same amount.

Has he got that written out? I will move it.

Mr. Chairman: We have an amendment to the amendment?

Mr. Martel: Yes. Does the member for Wellington-Dufferin-Peel want to second this? Where is he? He is a man of integrity and principle, and I know he would want to second this motion. Therefore, I move that clause 2(b) of the bill be amended by adding the following after the word thereof, "proportional to their sales."

Mr. Chairman: We have already passed clause (p).

Mr. Martel: No, no.

Mr. Chairman: Yes, we have already passed clause (p).

Mr. Martel: It is clause (b) of section 2 of the bill.

Mr. Chairman: I do not see a (b).

Mr. Martel: Pardon me, (p). The writing is so bad. I would fail him in school. He could never get a grade with me.

Mr. Chairman: I see clauses (o), (p), (q), (r). We are dealing with clause (s) in a proposed amendment. Where does this come in? We have passed (p).

Mr. Martel: That section 2 of the bill be amended.

Mr. Chairman: It is out of order.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. If we get unanimous consent of the House, we could revert to that section after we deal with the section we are on at the present time.

Mr. Chairman: We will need unanimous consent because we did pass clause (p).

Mr. Swart: I am sure the members on that side would not cross up their own member.

Mr. Chairman: Let us get going with the other amendment, clause (s). One amendment at a time. Let us get this show going.

Mr. Mitchell: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I can address the whole question of fees in my wrap-up. There are no fees set as yet; there have been fees talked about in a specific area with the industry, but the regulation is yet to be drawn. The fees have not been finalized; in fact, there will be further meetings with the associations representing the dealers before the fees are struck.

They have talked in the area of $150 on a two-year basis because they are currently paying $75 to $100 for a bond. Once the fund reaches $1 million, they will get a holiday. Nothing has been finalized and that is quite clear. There will be a meeting with the industry prior to the regulations being formulated.

Mr. Chairman: Speaking to the proposed amendment from the member for Etobicoke on clause (s).

Mr. Martel: Is it the government's intention to deal with what my friend the member for Wellington-Dufferin-Peel is proposing? Is it the government's intention to bring in an amount based on sales or volume? It will not simply be one levy across the board, is that right?

Mr. Mitchell: All I can say is that it is something to be considered. The industry will have to be met with after the passage of this bill. They support this bill. The fees have not been established as a final figure.

Mr. Philip: I would like some clarification. We were dealing with an amendment to section 2 of the bill. That amendment was a new section, clause (s). But we have not passed section 2 as amended and therefore it is in order to—

Mr. Chairman: Make it clause (t) then. We have already passed clauses (o), (p), (q) and (r) and we are dealing with clause (s). Make your second amendment as clause (t).

Mr. Philip: We have not passed section 2 as amended.

Mr. Chairman: That is right. I agree with that.

Mr. Philip: Therefore it is surely possible to amend clause (p).

Mr. Chairman: No, I am going to rule that out of order. We passed that; everyone was present at the time. I said, "Since your proposed amendment is clause (s), can we deal with clauses (o), (p), (q) and (r)?" Everyone agreed. They are all passed.

Mr. Philip: Since this is obviously our attempt to accommodate a Conservative member, I am sure we could get unanimous consent.

Mr. Chairman: All right. Do we have unanimous consent?

Some hon. members: No.

Mr. Martel: If we were to follow what the member is saying, we could simply make that clause (s).

Mr. Chairman: No, clause (t). We have an amendment for clause (s) already. Let us deal with (s). One amendment is on the floor already, from the member for Etobicoke.

Mr. Martel: Would you read that for me, Mr. Chairman? I want to hear the amendment.

Mr. Chairman: "Providing for the payment of claims by purchasers of a new motor vehicle to permit the replacement of such a vehicle which, before the first anniversary of its delivery to the purchaser, or before the vehicle has been driven 20,000 kilometres, has been the subject of four attempts to repair a defect by the manufacturer, the motor vehicle dealer or an agent thereof, has been out of service for an aggregate period of 30 days or more, in the course of attempted repairs by the manufacturer, the motor vehicle dealer or an agent thereof, and whose defect remains substantially uncorrected."

That is the proposed amendment by the member for Etobicoke to be added as clause 2(s) to Bill 3, An Act to amend the Motor Vehicle Dealers Act.

10:20 p.m.

Mr. Martel: I would ask for clarification: why is it not possible to add to an amendment that is at present before you?

Mr. Chairman: Fine. Do you want to amend the amendment?

Mr. Martel: Yes, that would be the simplest way. Could we add those words then. Is that fine with you?

Mr. Chairman: That is fine with me.

Mr. Martel: I can then say, Mr. Chairman, that clause 2(s) be further amended to add the words "proportional to their sales." Is that quite acceptable to the Chairman?

Mr. Chairman: Do you have only one copy? I should have written it down. What does it say? Read it nice and clear so everyone can hear.

Mr. Martel: An amendment to that amendment by simply adding the words "proportional to their sales."

Mr. Nixon: Will the member get his act together over there?

Mr. Martel: I am doing this on behalf of the member for Wellington-Dufferin-Peel. I am simply trying to incorporate what he wants in the bill.

Mr. Chairman: Okay, thank you. "Proportional to their sales." I am obliged to follow through with the standing orders. I would like to put the amendment.

Mr. Philip: I have an amendment to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman: We can only have one amendment to the amendment. I would like to ask one question. Are we going to continue with this or can we put the vote?

We have all heard the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House that the amendment carry?

All those in favour will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the nays have it.

Motion negatived.

Is section 2 carried?

Mr. Philip: I have a new amendment.

Mr. Chairman: Well, I will have to call you out of order.

Under the standing orders we have to go to the vote.

Mr. Nixon: We'll finish the bill another day.

Mr. Chairman: Call in the members.

10:32 p.m.

LANDLORD AND TENANT AMENDMENT ACT

(concluded)

The committee divided on Mr. Philip's amendment to section 1, which was negatived on the following vote:

Ayes 28; nays 39.

Section 1 agreed to.

The committee divided on Mr. Philip's amendment to section 2, which was negatived on the same vote.

Section 2 agreed to.

Section 5 agreed to.

Bill ordered to be reported.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Wells, the committee of the whole House reported one bill with certain amendments, two bills without amendment and progress on one bill.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 10:36 p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

Thursday, May 19, 1983

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

RESPONSE TO WRITTEN QUESTIONS

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, I rise on what I consider to be an important point of privilege. It deals with what I consider to be a breach of the standing order dealing with written questions, standing order 81.

Back in September 1982 questions 264 to 268 were put on the order paper requiring an answer from the Office of the Premier. Standing order 81(d) gives the government or the minister in question 14 days to make some sort of response to these questions.

As it turned out, we did not get a response until October 29, 1982. At that time it was said with regard to questions 264 to 268, which were the questions I put on—and I read from the interim answers—"Every effort will be made to answer the following questions on or before December 17, 1982." December 17, 1982, went by, of course, and at the end of the session in February 1983 the questions were still not answered.

The questions were put on the order paper again on April 22, 1983, and this week a response was obtained from the Premier's office. Let me read that response, Mr. Speaker. They were very innocuous questions, simply asking which Conservative candidates since 1971 are basically on the government payroll.

The answer read, "Since the names of all appointees are already a matter of public record, the expenditure of time and effort required to provide the information in question would not be commensurate with the benefits to be derived thereby." That was the response we were given, Mr. Speaker, and you can understand our frustration.

I went back to research, knowing I would get your admonition if I was not right on the question of law and precedent in this House. I researched the point completely.

As you have told us on many occasions, you have no power to force the Premier (Mr. Davis) or any other minister to respond to a question. In addition, the standing order does provide, and there is precedent for it, that the Premier can refuse to answer a question. But I think what you can do, and I believe this is important to all members in this assembly, is ensure at least that the ministers on that side follow the standing orders, so that we are not put off and put off again, as we have been since September 1982.

Finally, I get the answer that the time and effort are not worth the answer. I think that is pretty cynical, and an abuse of standing order 81.

Just because an answer may be politically embarrassing to the government is not a reason to refuse to give the answer. Try as we may—and you can understand, Mr. Speaker, we are trying to follow all these appointments—it is very difficult for us on this side to follow which appointment was made when and at what remuneration. There should be some directive to the ministers on that side, and to the Premier's office, that they do not abuse standing order 81.

Mr. Speaker: I have listened intently and I am sure the member would agree that, interesting as his statement is, it is hardly a point of privilege. However, I think the point was well made. The standing orders are for the guidance and direction of all members, and I am sure the member to whom the question was addressed will take note of your remarks.

ESTIMATES

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, I have a message from the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor signed by his own hand.

Mr. Speaker: The Lieutenant Governor transmits estimates of certain sums required for the services of the province for the year ending March 31, 1984, and recommends them to the Legislative Assembly. Signed in his own hand, Toronto, May 19, 1983.

STATEMENT BY THE MINISTRY

DEVELOPMENTALLY HANDICAPPED PEOPLE

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, as I notified the House last October, the Bluewater Centre in Goderich is the second of six institutions for the developmentally handicapped that my ministry intends to close by the spring of 1986. This consolidation of institutional services is part of a five-year plan for expanding community living opportunities for the developmentally handicapped residents of this province. Of the $33.7 million in 1982 dollars we will spend on this program, $23.7 million will come from the closure of these six facilities.

Closing the St. Lawrence Regional Centre in Brockville was the first phase. As I reported to the House on April 28, the plans for that closure are complete and we are extremely pleased with what has been accomplished. When the centre closes in June, 74 of its 100 former residents will be living in group homes and family homes in the community. Another six residents will be ready to move back to the community within two to three years, after they receive the additional training they require.

Fifty of the 77 civil servants at the St. Lawrence Regional Centre have accepted new positions with my ministry and another seven are negotiating for positions with the Ministry of Health at the Brockville Psychiatric Hospital. I have already provided this House with the details of these staff transfers.

2:10 p.m.

I assured the parents of residents at the Bluewater Centre that we would not proceed to the second phase of our plan until I was satisfied with the progress in Brockville. I told the House last month that I was more than satisfied with what we had achieved there and that we would be developing closure plans for Bluewater in the near future. The program to close Bluewater began Monday.

My staff met with the parents of residents at Bluewater Centre during March in Owen Sound, Clinton, Stratford and Walkerton to discuss the five-year plan and explain the alternatives that will be available. Following these meetings, relatives had an opportunity to discuss individually their placement preferences for their sons and daughters with the Bluewater administrator and program director.

These individual meetings will continue until all relatives have had an opportunity to discuss their preferences with the staff at the centre. The members can be assured no final decisions will be made until full consultation has taken place on this individual basis.

I am pleased to report that almost all the residents who will require continuing institutional care will be moved to Palmerston, which is in the same catchment area as Bluewater, and most of those residents going to community settings will also be relocated in the same general area, near their relatives and friends. In the case of residents whose families live outside the Goderich area, every effort will be made to relocate them near their home communities.

My staff has also been sensitive to the fact that the residents have made friends at the centre over the years. Special care will be taken to move residents who require continuing institutional care to the same facility as their friends.

Letters were sent last Monday from my ministry to the parents and guardians of these residents, reporting on the successes we have achieved to date in the implementation of our five-year plan and informing them of our program to close Bluewater.

We also notified the staff and union at Bluewater Centre last Monday of our closure plans and gave them surplus notices effective November 18, 1983. We conducted the announcement as follows: We notified, first, the union head office; then we notified the management supervisors and union executive at the centre; finally, we ensured this information was communicated to the staff by having the director of human resources for my ministry and several regional officers at the centre on Monday to speak to the employees at every shift change.

Instead of the 90-day notice of a closure required by our collective agreement with the union, we are giving all employees a full six months' notice. We will also conduct personal interviews with each staff member and consult with them concerning their rights under the collective agreement. Finally, we are offering a range of supports for employees who are prepared to relocate, should that be necessary. These will, of course, include arrangements for job interviews and relocation expenses.

Once again I stress that no resident of any institution for the developmentally handicapped will move to the community without a properly supervised residential setting and, where applicable, a work, training or activity program. Every civil servant in the six institutions to be closed will be given preference for jobs in our remaining 11 facilities or in other areas within the public service where they may qualify.

As I have said many times in the past, we believe our program of providing community alternatives to institutional living for developmentally handicapped people, which began in 1975, will enrich the lives of thousands of residents of this province in the years to come.

ORAL QUESTIONS

AUTOMOTIVE PARTS INDUSTRY

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Industry and Trade if, for a moment, he can take his mind off the great questions of war and peace, or whether he will build a war machine in this province.

I would like to ask him an important question with respect to his response to the automotive task force report which has been made public today. I know the minister has seen it and I am sure he has a response. What is his response, and is he prepared to use his good offices to try to persuade the federal government and other parties that this report is taking the right approach?

Hon. Mr. Walker: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Speaker, in the task force report it is noted that the Ontario Centre for Automotive Parts Technology is simply not good enough. What is needed is significant help in identifying and exploiting opportunities for greater manufacturing of Canadian auto parts. This is an area where the Ontario government can make a direct contribution.

Can the minister point to any specific successes of his ministry, either domestically or through foreign offices, in identifying potential markets for Ontario auto parts producers, and can he tell us the concrete steps he is taking to enable Ontario parts producers to cash in on the opportunities in the future?

Hon. Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, one of the great benefits of the automotive parts technology centre is the fact that it will allow the 900 auto parts firms in Ontario an opportunity to get on the leading edge of technological innovation. Certainly, 50 of those 900 have in-house research and development capabilities, but the remaining 850 firms do not have that capacity. The technology centre in St. Catharines will provide those 800-odd firms with an opportunity to plug into the system and get the latest possible research and the latest possible access to technology.

By so doing, they will become competitive. Although there is a fairly competitive market now in auto parts, when the manufacturers are more competitive they will have the opportunity to ply the world with their auto parts and to continue selling their products already positioned in the international marketplace.

For instance, Trident makes the plastic windshield wiper; I do not think there is a car in Japan that is produced without the Trident windshield wiper on it. That is a company located here in Ontario servicing the Japanese market. We have other firms servicing the West German market and others, again, servicing Britain and other parts of our Commonwealth; so there are some areas we can point to where successes have occurred.

The auto parts technology centre we have established is only a beginning in the process. Ultimately, private enterprise will be able to fulfil its needs in this area and will follow the recommendations and suggestions put forward in the very good task force report, which I think will receive some support from Ottawa. I met with Mr. Lumley, the minister, on Tuesday afternoon, and I was satisfied that he had some knowledge of it and was quite happy with the direction it had taken.

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, the minister will know that if content legislation is introduced at the federal level, there will be a need to expand the Canadian auto parts firms in Ontario. Those firms will also need capital to increase their capacity, their productivity and so forth. Is this government prepared to introduce legislation or develop a vehicle whereby it can co-invest with the private sector to infuse capital into the auto parts industry, so that it can meet the demand that will result from content legislation—content legislation that this party has been pushing for many years?

Hon. Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, that vehicle already exists in the Ontario Development Corp., in the technology centres capability, in the Innovation Development for Employment Advancement Corp. and in a variety of other programs that exist. It will be there to meet the needs, the member for Windsor-Riverside can rest assured of that.

Mr. Wrye: Mr. Speaker, undoubtedly one of the important aspects of moving forward with this report and having offshore auto companies manufacturing in Canada would be the research and development aspect. Can the minister tell us what steps he has taken in discussions he may have had with offshore auto companies, or is prepared to take in the time to come, to ensure that the manufacturing aspect, as they move into Canada and into Ontario, includes the research and development factor which is so important to us? What steps is the minister prepared to urge and encourage them to take?

Hon. Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, it has to be recognized that the automotive industry is a blended industry, blended between the two countries of North America. That industry basically makes use of the automobile production technology that exists in the United States. Basically, we have assembly plants here in Ontario and in Canada. The assembly plants obviously assemble parts, and if I can use the saying, the whole is the sum of its parts.

We have the capacity for research and development as it relates to parts. We have the auto parts technology centre, which will be a very viable vehicle to bring that about. As well, we have the advantage of the R and D capabilities of the Big Three or the Big Four, but particularly the Big Three in the United States, because the moment something is developed there, it is transferred almost instantaneously into the Canadian market. So technology transfer does in fact occur there.

We will want to see more encouragement of it. Indeed, with the last arrangement with Chrysler two or three years ago my predecessor took steps that would have seen the establishment of an R and D facility. They chose not to pursue that particular course. It was up to them to draw down the moneys; they chose not to do it.

However, there have been some attempts made in the past and there will be attempts made in the future to coalesce here in Ontario more research and development capabilities for the auto makers we have here, regardless of where that auto-making firm might come from.

INDIAN BAND AGREEMENT

Mr. Van Horne: Mr. Speaker, I have a question to the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development concerning his statement on Tuesday regarding the government's revised mercury pollution agreement with the Islington band, a matter that still remains unresolved after five years of negotiations.

The provincial secretary's letter to Chief Isaac Mandamin of the Islington band states that changes in the revised agreement have only "improved the clarity and accuracy of the agreement but have not altered the major thrust of the agreement." How can the minister reconcile these comments with the two major changes he has in fact made to the February draft agreement which the band had signed?

The first is that instead of outright ownership by the band of a $1-million greenhouse complex, it is now to lease the land and the complex, and they can be retrieved by the government after 10 years. The second is that whereas the band was to receive an open licence to harvest wild rice in the new reserve lands to be created under the Hydro agreement, the revised version allows the government to change the licence unilaterally.

Is the minister aware that the band does consider these to be major differences, that there is a major difference between a $1-million grant and a demand loan, and would he not agree that this revised document is merely for publicity purposes and that he has no serious intention of ever arriving at an agreement settlement?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, the honourable member should have been around when the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Pope) and I were doing the negotiating with the band chief and his advisers.

Mr. Van Horne: I missed your invitation.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: If he had been, he would fully understand what is said here. One, there never was a time, not even for half a minute, when it was agreed that the greenhouse would go on band land. It was the understanding in the agreement from day one that the greenhouse would be built off the reserve on crown land. So there is no change there whatsoever just a clarification.

It was agreed that the native people would have the opportunity to grow wild rice in the lakes in a defined area, not in the overall defined area—in the lakes in the defined area, the area covered by water. The change made in the agreement was to say it would be the area covered by water in that defined area. There is not one bit of change.

The Minister of Natural Resources and I were both there for all of these negotiations. I believe I have answered the member's question. If he has further questions, I will be happy to answer.

Mr. J. A. Reed: Mr. Speaker, surely the minister would agree that a change from ownership to a lease renewable every 10 years is a major change in the document. Does he not agree the Islington band considered the agreement it signed to be a final agreement, subject to perhaps a few minor changes in wording?

Does the minister not agree these changes now leave the band with no alternative but to take legal action? It has advised us, and our information this morning is that it has now abandoned all out-of-court discussion with the government. How can the minister reconcile his government's inaction on this matter with reflection on Mr. Justice Hartt's words when he said, "What justification for immediate government action is required here other than common decency and restoration of human dignity?"

For heaven's sake, when is the minister going to act? This has been going on for years.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, again I must repeat that the honourable member apparently does not understand the agreement or any of the negotiations leading up to the agreement. There never was any agreement—

Mr. J. A. Reed: Chief Mandamin understood what he signed. You changed it.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Henderson:—verbally or in writing, that they would own the land where the greenhouse was to be. There was the agreement that we would build the greenhouse off reserve, and all the wording does is to define the area where the greenhouse will be built.

I believe I have answered his question; I am not sure.

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Speaker, I have both documents, the February draft signed by the band and the draft that the minister referred to on Tuesday.

Is it not the case that in the February draft it stated, "Ontario agrees to transfer ownership of the land and buildings to the government of Canada to be held in trust for the band," and that the draft he mentioned on Tuesday states, "Ontario agrees to lease the land for 10 years and to transfer ownership of the buildings" and then further goes on to say that those buildings could revert in ownership to the provincial government if the agreement with the Ministry of Natural Resources is not completed?

How can the minister claim this is simply a clarification? The minister has clarified $1 million out of this agreement. He has done more negotiations with Ben Ratuski than he has with Chief Mandamin. When is he going to try to stop hoodwinking the public of this province and come clean and have a settlement that will finally bring this thing to an end?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I would like to read that particular paragraph, if I may. A few words were taken from it.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I am in your jurisdiction. The agreement is 20 pages long. If members really want a full understanding, I should present the agreement; but again, on second thought I will present this four-page explanation of it.

I will start off by presenting just one paragraph to answer this honourable member, but if you feel it needs more clarification, Mr. Speaker, I will present the four pages and then the agreement, if that is your wish.

"Article 2: Economic development; the greenhouse," page 4.

"The May agreement has an additional subsection regarding the leasing of the land, and the renewal of the lease upon which the greenhouse will be built and the conditions of ownership of the greenhouse by the federal government in trust for the band. These matters were not addressed in our agreement in principle, and in less detail in the February draft agreement."

So all we have done, again, is to clarify the wording of the agreement.

Mr. Van Horne: On a point of clarification: It is our understanding that the February agreement in so far as wild rice is concerned indicates that this change would be made only through consent with the bands. But the new agreement says "with advice," which means they may advise not to do it and still the government could go ahead unilaterally and change it. That is a significant change. How does the minister explain it?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Again I would love to take the time, but in order that the honourable member can understand it I will read this. Maybe the opposition cannot understand it, but I think you can, Mr. Speaker.

"Wild rice," pages 9 and 10. It covers two pages in the agreement.

"In order to implement the commitment contemplated in the agreement in principle in the February draft agreement with respect to the 21-year licence to harvest wild rice and a special licence to harvest rice in the bay of Swan Lake, the May agreement stipulates the minister will recommend required changes to the Wild Rice Harvesting Act. In the May agreement 'reasonable use' in the wild rice section has been clarified to read 'reasonable harvesting of wild rice.'"

If those members over there understood the harvesting of wild rice, they would understand that.

ACID RAIN

Mr. Rae: Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Norton), I would like to address my question to the Premier. In July 1982, at the time Ontario Hydro announced it was shelving its proposals for the installation of two scrubbers, probably at the Lambton generating station, the Minister of the Environment was quoted as saying on that day, "We will be looking at their existing order with the view of tightening it up further."

In the light of the tremendous importance Ontario's own efforts in controlling acid rain have in getting the United States Congress and the American authorities to move to reduce emissions in the United States, can he tell us what steps his government is taking to ensure Ontario Hydro will install these scrubbers and speed up its reduction of SO₂ emissions in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the honourable member in his visitation to Washington yesterday and his, I am sure, rather detailed discussions with some members of the Congress and other people in the American government in relation to this problem, really made a genuine attempt to explain to our American neighbours that, while we have certain problems in this province with respect to emissions, on a total assessment there still are far more significant problems south of the border. I am sure he conveyed that to them in the very polite and subtle way he would do so. I hope he had some measure of success in explaining this.

The minister will be delighted to give him an update with respect to the control orders. I think he can assure the member that, in terms of the progress being made with respect to Ontario Hydro and Inco, we do not take second place to what is happening in the Ohio Valley or in some other areas of our great neighbour to the south.

I really appreciate the fact the leader of the New Democratic Party went to Washington on his way back from Dallas and returned here knowing full well that, in spite of the many problems he confronts this government with, he really did not want to stay in Texas or in the District of Columbia; he wanted to return here to the province of opportunity, although the opportunity does not extend, shall we say, to his political future.

Mr. Rae: I appreciate the Premier's warm wishes of welcome home. The fact the government of Ontario's publicly owned utility decided last year not to install two scrubbers has caused a problem, not for those in the United States who are opposed to moving on acid rain, but for those in the United States who are in favour of moving on acid rain, because they perceive there to be a major credibility problem with respect to what the government of Ontario is doing as opposed to what it is saying.

If he is really interested in seeing progress is achieved in the United States with respect to reducing emissions, the overwhelming consensus of the people I spoke to in Washington over the last two days—US government people, Canadian government people and other officials—was if Ontario could take greater unilateral action, that would do more to strengthen the hand of those who want to move on acid rain than almost anything else Canada could do.

Does the Premier not see the value, in reaching an agreement, of our publicly owned utility taking a leadership role rather than having to be dragged kicking and screaming into the 20th century with respect to pollution control?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I do not purport to be as knowledgeable on this subject as the honourable member, but I have been involved with this subject for a period of time. I too have had the odd discussion with some of our neighbours, including the governors of the surrounding states and some of the Environmental Protection Agency people on that delightful island of Mackinac, I guess it was last June.

I fully appreciate the view of some of our American neighbours that if Ontario would do more—without recognizing how far we have come, which is always the problem—it would be easier for those in support of the reduction of emissions in the United States to make some progress. I do not quarrel with that. What concerns me is that we have made substantial reductions and we have not seen quite the same enthusiasm in terms of commitments in the United States. I think the member must acknowledge that. I say in a very constructive fashion to our American neighbours that we have made far more progress on a percentage basis.

This applies to water quality as well. If the member goes into the area of water quality, which I know he did not explore in Washington but which would have been a useful subject, he would have found that this province—

Mr. Rae: You are wrong; we did.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am sure they told him this, and he must have come home feeling some sense of pride: if he did speak to them about water quality, the American authorities who are knowledgeable would have told him that Ontario has met its commitments and has done far more than any bordering state on the Great Lakes with respect to water quality. If he got objective advice from EPA or others, they would have told him that is factually correct.

Getting back to Ontario Hydro: the member makes a distinction because it is a public utility. I do not know how relevant that is. I do not say government is not involved if it is a public utility, but does it really matter whether it is a public utility or whether it is Consolidated Edison? Surely one is not going to have separate ground rules for utilities just because one is in the private sector and one is in the public sector. I do not think one can in logic draw that distinction.

If we go back to what has been said, surely the criterion is the reduction of emissions. The question of the technology or the process that is used is up to Ontario Hydro. As I recall it, and the Minister of the Environment can correct me if I am wrong, there has been no alteration in either the orders or the commitment of Ontario Hydro. There may be some thoughts as to how they meet the requirements of reduction in emissions. Surely the member is not going to say to Ontario Hydro that scrubbers are necessarily the only way it can be done.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, surely the Premier will agree that is not the point. The point is that he made a promise in his throne speech to install two scrubbers, and he broke the promise. That promise, which he and the chairman made on more than one occasion, has been trumpeted throughout the Congressional Record. It was referred to by Ambassador Gotlieb in his speech here in Canada a couple of weeks ago at the acid rain dinner as a major sticking point and an indication of bad faith by Canadians.

It is the Premier's broken promise that is the issue. Will he not agree with that and will he not now undertake to rectify that broken promise?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, this is one of the problems with the Leader of the Opposition. He does not understand what is happening.

I think the record will show that Ontario Hydro's commitment—and it was volunteered, as a matter of fact—was to reduce emissions by 50 per cent by 1990. The honourable member will find that is on the record. There is no question in our view that Ontario Hydro will meet that objective by 1990.

I cannot guarantee the Leader of the Opposition that because he becomes wedded to a particular technology—that is why his policies are so intransigent, those that do not alter from day to day—we will say to Ontario Hydro that is the only way it is to attack this problem. I am not going to dictate to Ontario Hydro, with respect to using scrubbers that may or may not be outdated in technical terms in two or three years, that it should not be approaching some other method of reaching that objective. Surely the objective is to reduce emissions; I really do not think how they do it is a subject of debate.

If the member has had some indication from responsible authorities in the United States, and I say authorities, that Ontario Hydro or Inco is in any way delaying the implementation of the existing EPA standards in the United States, I would like to see him produce that in some form of documentation because I do not think it happens to be factually correct. I would say the same thing to our Canadian ambassador if he were present in this House at this moment.

2:40 p.m.

Mr. Rae: The point the Premier seems to be missing is that the existing EPA standards have to be changed if we are going to see significant reductions. That is why to talk about the existing EPA standards as something we in Ontario should be proud to live up to is totally inadequate when it comes to attacking the problem of acid rain rather than simply living with it, which seems to be the approach the Premier is taking.

With respect to Inco, the last control order, regulation 301, mandated a reduction from 2,500 tons per day to 1,950 tons per day beginning in 1983. Given the fact that this still represents a major contribution in terms of SO₂ emissions, can the Premier tell us first whether it is the government's intention to bring in a new control order this year which will produce substantial reductions from that 1950 level?

Second, can the Premier guarantee that with respect to this control order, there will be a chance at last for the people of Ontario to participate in establishing the level rather than having it settled behind closed doors between the Ministry of the Environment and the company?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Perhaps the member misunderstood me. I was not saying EPA standards are acceptable from our standpoint or anybody else's. The point I was making to the Leader of the Opposition, who I do not think has quite grasped this issue yet, is that the existing EPA standards are not being met by many industries in the United States. If they did not tell the member that in Washington yesterday then he wasted his time.

Mr. Rae: I know that.

Hon. Mr. Davis: If the member knows that, why does he not say so? Why does he not give us some sense of balance? Surely he has come home from there understanding just how much progress we have made in Ontario compared to almost any other jurisdiction. Why does he not stand up and say that? One cannot come back from Washington without that awareness.

Regarding Inco, I cannot tell the member whether the existing control order will be altered. I am not in a position to give any indication of that nature. I know the member does not like government working with the private sector to solve these problems but, in terms of total percentage of emissions, the government in conjunction with Inco probably has made as significant an accomplishment in the time frame as any other single industry in North America.

[Later]

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege to correct the record. It relates to a discussion I was having with the Premier with respect to scrubbers. At a press conference on January 26, 1981, the then Minister of the Environment, Harry Parrott, and Ontario Hydro chairman Hugh Macaulay announced the Hydro acid gas control program. Mr. Macaulay stated: "The most significant component in our program will be the design and construction of two sulphur dioxide scrubbers by 1987. It will be a first for Canada, I might add."

Then, in a response to a petition signed by 139 federal MPs objecting to the General Public Utilities deal, Mr. Macaulay wrote a letter dated February 19—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Will the honourable member please resume his seat? It is not a point of privilege, with all respect.

Mr. Peterson: It is a point of privilege to correct the record. There was some discussion about the problem.

Mr. Speaker: No. It is a completely different matter. That was disposed of earlier. It was explained in some detail. It has nothing to do with being a point of privilege.

Mr. Peterson: There was discussion over the nature of the promise, and you know how a promise is very important—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

SECURICOR INVESTIGATION AND SECURITY LTD.

Mr. Rae: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General with respect to Securicor and the decision of the Ontario Labour Relations Board taken last Friday.

In answering questions in the House on Monday, the Solicitor General suggested that he and his staff were studying the decision with respect to the impact it might have on the licence being granted to Securicor and any other actions the government of Ontario might take. He has now had three days to study the award.

Does the Solicitor General now feel he should register a complaint with the registrar under section 17 of the Private Investigators and Security Guards Act and ask him to take away the licence of Securicor, given the very serious nature of the breaches of the Labour Relations Act and possibly other statutes, including the Criminal Code of Canada, which were found by the Ontario Labour Relations Board to have taken place? Is the Solicitor General now prepared to take those steps?

Hon. G. W. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, as I said in answer to the honourable member's question earlier this week, the investigation by the Ontario Provincial Police, which does the licensing, is ongoing. They are reviewing the decision of the Ontario Labour Relations Board regarding Securicor.

It may be slightly premature to say that is going to be the final result in this matter, because I understand it is going to be appealed. None the less, the OPP and the registrar are investigating the facts and reviewing the judgement. When I receive a complete report, a decision will be made as to whether charges will be laid under the provisions of the Private Investigators and Security Guards Act or if licences should be suspended or removed.

Mr. Rae: This government has delayed for more than a year. The OPP and the registrar have had the information with respect to the activities of Securicor for more than a year. They did not have to wait for the decision of the Ontario Labour Relations Board. That decision is not being appealed on a matter of fact. If it goes to judicial review, it will be reviewed on a matter of law that has nothing to do with the findings of fact by the board and the evidence that appeared. As soon as that evidence was adduced at the hearing, the OPP and the registrar should have been moving with respect to Securicor.

Here is a company and its employees that have been found over a period of time to have broken, and broken without shame or apology, the Ontario Labour Relations Act and to have attempted to subvert the purposes of that act. How long is it going to be before the minister is prepared to protect the employees in this province from this kind of spying and goon-like activity?

Hon. G. W. Taylor: In answering this question previously on many occasions, I have said there were many witnesses who had to be heard by the Ontario Labour Relations Board. I am sure the member would desire that. Indeed, much evidence was heard at that hearing, and there were many adjournments. I am sure the member would not have wanted the actions of another forum or of the registrar in any way to have inhibited or caused interference in that proceeding before the Ontario Labour Relations Board.

When the member states that we were delaying, I have to tell him that we were delaying to provide all sides an opportunity to have that hearing and to have that forum answer the questions. When he comments on our legislation, I am very proud on the part of government of the legislation we have put forward on behalf of workers. I would say the legislation put forward on behalf of workers in this province, through the Minister of Labour (Mr. Ramsay) and through this government, exceeds and excels any other piece of legislation of any other jurisdiction.

This situation will be resolved in accordance with the legal procedures of this province so that everybody will receive a fair hearing and an opportunity to resolve the matter in a way that will be fair to all parties.

Mr. Wrye: Mr. Speaker, apparently the minister is concerned about a fair hearing for everybody but the employees of places such as Automotive Hardware, who did not get treated very fairly for a matter of months.

The minister referred to further investigations by the OPP and a decision. When is this decision going to be taken? As part of the ongoing investigation and review, is the minister taking a look at issuing new instructions to the OPP and other police forces in Ontario in terms of their activities in these cases of industrial espionage and specifically in the kinds of cases where they were aware of an agent provocateur, as was the case with Securicor in this instance?

Hon. G. W. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, when I hear the honourable member commenting on the particular judgement—the judgement is in excess of 66 pages and is very detailed both in law and in fact—and the investigation leading up to that by the Ontario Provincial Police, I have to tell him that it is now being reviewed, and I am sure he would not want any precipitate action as a result of the investigation or the material contained therein without some thorough review, without some determination both as to the law that may be the result of changes and as to the charges that may flow out of any of the actions.

When I hear the member state that the police are less than neutral in these cases, I take exception to that, since this is Canadian Police Week. When he can make statements that he believes the police are less than neutral in labour relations and matters of this kind, I must state on behalf of the police that this is totally not correct. Indeed, they are the most neutral participants in situations where it is very difficult at times for them to perform their tasks, in volatile situations that sometimes rise out of strikes and picketing.

Mr. Rae: In the light of the Solicitor General's answers, I wonder whether he will allow me to redirect a question to the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry). If he says yes—I gather he has—I wonder whether I could redirect my final supplementary to the Attorney General with respect to this decision of the Ontario Labour Relations Board.

Mr. Speaker: Did the Solicitor General redirect?

Hon. G. W. Taylor: I did not reply "yes" to that, Mr. Speaker. If the member wants to ask another question of the Attorney General, that is within his limit and within the rules of the procedure.

Mr. Rae: I take it then that the minister is saying he does not want the Attorney General to answer a question with respect to this.

Hon. G. W. Taylor: No. I think the Attorney General has great liberty to answer any question—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The member for York South; final supplementary to the Solicitor General.

2:50 p.m.

Mr. Rae: I will put the question to the Solicitor General. Is he prepared to enter into discussions with the Attorney General with respect to possible criminal prosecutions in this matter, given the statement in paragraph 63 by the Ontario Labour Relations Board about the kind of conduct that occurred and given the clear statement made by the Minister of Labour in April 1982 that where there has been some kind of conspiracy, or attempt to enter into a conspiracy, to breach the Labour Relations Act that in itself amounts to a breach of the Criminal Code? Is the Solicitor General prepared to enter into this discussion?

Hon. G. W. Taylor: I am prepared to discuss anything, any time, anywhere with my colleague the Attorney General. He is very knowledgeable of the routine in police matters. Investigations done by police are often done in consultation with the crown law officers; and at a particular time, when the investigations are complete, they are usually reviewed by the Attorney General in collaboration with the Solicitor General. Sometimes a determination is made to continue with the procedures, be it under a municipal statute, a provincial statute or the Criminal Code, and those procedures are carried out in consultation with the Attorney General.

I reiterate to the member that at no time would I not want to talk to my colleague the Attorney General.

CONVERSION OF RENTAL UNITS

Mr. Ruprecht: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. The minister has received various requests to help stop the conversion of apartment units into hotel-like accommodations. He is aware that these conversions take place right across Metropolitan Toronto. Has he informed himself how many units and how many tenants are involved in these conversion processes and how that change has affected community life?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, I think we have to put the whole issue into perspective. The issue really relates back to a time of minority government, when the Residential Tenancies Act was passed. The Legislature in its wisdom decided at that time that, under certain conditions, certain types of residences such as hotels would be exempt from section 4 of the legislation. That in no sense meant that section was to be used to subvert the purposes of the Residential Tenancies Act.

The honourable member knows full well the position taken by the Residential Tenancy Commission in many cases, particularly in many that are under appeal now, has been that the conversion attempt was not appropriate. Since those decisions are under appeal, I am not prepared to discuss them further at this time.

The member also knows there was a motion by one of the landlords to declare that such evictions for the purpose of conversion were outside the Landlord and Tenant Act. That position was not upheld and it is under appeal.

He knows very well these issues, which were attempts to subvert the purposes of the Residential Tenancies Act, are before the court.

Mr. Ruprecht: I am sure many people are looking to the minister for some guidance and leadership to try to solve the problems being raised by these specific conversions. I do not want to give the minister another chance to hide behind the Thom commission, or another commission, and have him say, "I can't talk about this, because it is before a commission," or "I can't talk about this, because it is before something else."

Is the minister aware that some tenants in these buildings are being asked to sign a form, upon moving into their apartments, that is in effect an undated agreement determining the tenancy? The landlord then uses this form to evict tenants without proper notice, when it suits his purpose, by filling in the appropriate date.

In a decision dated November 5, 1982, concerning a case of this nature, county court judge Haley found the landlord's behaviour was "a deplorable attempt to subvert the mechanism of the Landlord and Tenant Act." The tenants who went before Judge Haley were lucky, but dozens of other tenants in similar circumstances returned home to find themselves locked out. Many of these cases have been documented, but even when landlords are caught, there is no automatic penalty that can be imposed on them, because the act does not contain appropriate provisions.

I am sure the minister does not condone this kind of action. If he does not, is he prepared to stand up here and tell the House how he will stop this practice?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: If I may address the ad hoc prologue first of all, I think any attempt, by the member particularly, to try to pretend that this minister hides behind anything is so ridiculous that everybody on his side of the House should be laughing at him; and I think most of the time they are, to tell the truth.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I am just enchanted, as I am sure all the other members are, that the only specific example the member gave outside of his generalities was the specific case where the judge said that the practice was deplorable. Let us have some more specifics instead of his generalities.

INCREASED ARMAMENT PRODUCTION

Mr. R. F. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, my question is for General Walker, the Minister of Industry and Trade. Forgetting for a second the moral question of whether or not we should be promoting the increase of armament production in this province, let us look for a second at the economic reasons for getting involved.

Is the minister aware that Sam Gindin, the United Automobile Workers research director, is quoted as saying: "Resources spent on the military are a diversion from resources spent on goods and services. In fact, a number of studies done in the US show that each billion dollars invested in the military could have provided more jobs if invested elsewhere?"

Does the minister know that for that $1 billion the military would create, directly and indirectly, 76,000 jobs? In construction it would create 100,000 jobs, in health services 139,000 jobs and in education 187,000 jobs. Would he not agree there are better ways of creating jobs in Ontario than by encouraging increased arms production?

Hon. Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, I suppose there are tens of thousands of veterans in this land who probably think the honourable member's comment, which is really about giving in on any kind of deterrent around the world, is the way he would like the world to be. That is the kind of Neville Chamberlain approach that has been around a little bit too much.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Walker: I think the member might realize that in this country—

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Walker: The member has to realize that something approaching 50,000 jobs in this province are related to it; and if he thinks it is a diversion, if he thinks we should shut down all of the industry in Ontario that might be related to defence, then I suspect maybe the member should start looking at his own riding.

The first place they would shut down is the Canada Metal Co., and the Energy and Chemical Workers Union might have some concern about it; the member might speak to them in his riding. He might speak to Bayview Metals in his riding, because they too would have to close down under his formula. He might also speak to Amphenol Canada Inc.; they also would have to close down. He might speak to the hundreds of workers there who think that what they are doing is a very legitimate industry.

Before the member wipes away an industry, he should think about some of the jobs in the process. When he starts to think about some of the jobs, maybe he will reconsider a little bit some of his rather foolish thoughts.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: The minister might have noticed that I did not suggest we should be shutting down what we are doing. What I said was that we should not be advocating an increase in our armaments.

What more would the minister want us to do to increase our armament production? In the past two years our federal budget has increased by 35 per cent in armament production and defence spending in Canada. We have a defence production sharing agreement with the United States that right now guarantees us access to the US market with exemptions from their tariffs. We also have a defence incentives program by which the Canadian government encourages companies to bid on American defence contracts as if they were already tooled to meet the requirements. If the company gets the contract, our government picks up the cost.

What does the minister think Ontario should do to add to the present incentives that are already there for the armaments reduction?

3 p.m.

Hon. Mr. Walker: I never made any comment that would suggest Canada should increase its expenditures in defence, although I must say we should maintain our obligations under the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and we should maintain our obligations under the North American Air Defence Command. The member for Scarborough West talks about a nuclear-free zone. Is "No-Nuke Johnston" what they call him?

When I look at the kind of production we already have in this province, the kind of capability we have, the obligations we have around the world in terms of the defence of Canada and the defence of the western world, I think we have to take our fair stand. For the member to stand here and suggest, with the kind of gall he is putting forward, that we should ignore all the freedoms that have been fought for, is absolute hypocrisy on the member's part.

Interjection.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I ask the minister to reconsider the use of that word.

Hon. Mr. Walker: Which word was that, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: It was "hypocrisy."

Hon. Mr. Walker: I do not think "hypocrisy" necessarily applies to his words.

Mr. Mackenzie: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege: As a veteran, I feel I have been insulted by the minister's sleazy remarks about appeasement and the inference that we are Neville Chamberlain types.

FLOOD PLAIN MAPPING

Mr. Haggerty: Mr. Speaker, a question to the Premier: Is the Premier aware of the recent article in the Welland-Port Colborne Tribune dated May 12, 1983, concerning flood plain policy changes? The article stated that the executive of the provincial Progressive Conservative association had been informed by the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Pope) that "flood plain criteria will undergo some major changes in the immediate future." Alderman Len Hallborg was quoted as saying the minister specified three major changes, including "the one-in-500-year storm will be replaced by a one-in-100-year determination" and "a two-zone concept will be implemented wherein building will be permitted within flood lines."

Can the Premier confirm now that changes in the flood plain policy will take place and that concerned citizens in the regional municipality of Niagara can expect some measure of relief from the present land restrictions now in force under present flood plain criteria?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the honourable member will recall a very pleasant day a few days ago that I shared with him and his colleague the member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Kerrio), the former at the opening of a major new facility in his riding where incidentally—he was not at all embarrassed—the virtues of the government were extolled by everyone present. After leaving there I went to the opening of the new Ontario Paper plant where, once again, the member for Niagara Falls enthusiastically applauded what was being said.

Mr. Ruston: This has nothing to do with the question, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Davis: It does, and they both enjoyed it. I do not know whether they were the member's constituents, but I met with some of those interested in this subject. Actually I think it was at the Ontario Provincial Police detachment in Welland. They conveyed their concerns to me. I told them the member for Brock (Mr.

Welch) had already made representations on this particular issue.

I understand certain documentation has been sent to many members, including myself. Members of my staff are taking a look at it. There will be conversations with the Minister of Natural Resources, and I think there were two or three individuals in Welland, not too far distant from the member's riding, that we will be back in touch with fairly shortly.

Mr. Haggerty: In his last comment the minister says, "It shows that we have a provincial government that is caring and willing to respond to the people's wishes."

When can the Niagara region expect some new policy guidelines in flood plain mapping? I am sure the Premier is aware of the heavy expenditure by the Ministry of the Environment to put in hard-core services in the town of Fort Erie. Now, because of flood plain mapping criteria, the town cannot develop either the industrial park or subdivisions. When can we expect an answer?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I think I heard the early part of the question when the member said we had a caring and sensitive government. I totally agree with that and I thank him for the statement. Is that not what he said?

Mr. Haggerty: I was only quoting.

Hon. Mr. Davis: He did not tell me when he was quoting. If he does not want to distinguish, I just accept what he said.

Mr. Roy: They will keep voting for him no matter what the Premier says; so the Premier should not worry about it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I do not worry about it.

Mr. Speaker: Never mind the interjections, please.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The member will tell his colleague that on that lovely morning in his community I made no attempt to discredit him. I just pointed out to him the error of his ways and how philosophically all he had to do was walk 22 feet. I think that is roughly what I said. We will be in touch shortly.

AUTOMOTIVE PARTS INDUSTRY

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Premier whether he would be willing to place before the Legislature an all-party resolution that would endorse the content provisions recommended by the auto task force and put additional pressure on the federal government to implement that legislation as quickly as possible so we can get the jobs here in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I was intrigued by the opening question by the Leader of the Opposition, because all he really asked the Minister of Industry and Trade (Mr. Walker) was whether he agreed with what was in the throne speech.

I had no advance knowledge of the task force report, but my recollection is that one of the main ingredients in the report found its way into the excellent speech by the Lieutenant Governor. Is that the honourable member's recollection?

As to whether there would be a resolution of this House, I do not minimize the potential of that, but with the greatest of respect I say that I think a lot of homework needs to be done; the report itself has to be assessed. I cannot give a commitment that a resolution passed by all parties of this House would necessarily have that impact or is necessarily the right route to go.

I understand the point of view of the New Democratic Party. Let us assess what is happening in Ottawa at the same time as we are assessing the report here.

Mr. Cooke: I specifically mentioned the one aspect of the report. The government went on record after we pushed it into going on record in favour of content legislation; at the provincial level the Liberal Party has finally gone on record in favour of content legislation; and this party is on record in favour of content legislation.

Will the Premier start negotiations with all three parties to draft a resolution that could be presented in this Legislature and passed quickly, putting pressure on the federal government for content legislation? If the National Assembly in Quebec can do it, surely Ontario, with 90 per cent of the jobs in the auto sector, can do it.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Before the members over there become so enthusiastic—and I will not go through the chronological order—I think one may find the government of this province introduced this concept as early as, if not earlier than, the New Democratic Party.

3:10 p.m.

Mr. McClellan: Bravo! Did you invent the radio?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am one of those who look for practical solutions to problems and, with no disrespect to the concept of an all-party resolution calling on the government of Canada to pass content legislation, I really think in fairness that it is perhaps overly simplistic. It might not produce the desired results, although I am prepared to assess it.

If the honourable member is asking me today whether we should introduce such a resolution, I cannot give any such commitment. But I have made note of the support of the member for—where is he from?

Mr. Cooke: Windsor-Riverside.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Windsor-Riverside.

GOVERNMENT HIRING POLICIES

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the secretary for resources management, if he would like to—

Mr. Roy: It's a big day for you, Lorne; two questions.

Mr. Speaker: Proceed, please.

Mr. T. P. Reid: In the absence of the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Pope), I would like to ask the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development if he is aware of the hiring policy of the various ministries in his resource field with respect to seasonal and contract work. Can he assure the House, for instance, that particularly in northern Ontario but also in the local regions those people will be the first ones to have the seasonal and contract jobs, especially those through the Ministry of Natural Resources, and that they will not lose out in getting that employment to people who are referred from head office in Toronto, either through the ministry's office or through certain ministers?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, the minister happened to mention to me recently that he had a recommendation from this honourable member for someone who needed work. The government is doing everything in its power to make work for the young people and the native people across northern Ontario, and it is looking after our people. Beyond that, I will ask the Minister of Natural Resources to respond to the question.

Mr. T. P. Reid: When the minister talks to the Minister of Natural Resources, will he ask him—and perhaps this minister would like to involve himself in it as well—to ensure that people who have worked on seasonal and contract work in the past for four and five years, especially for the Ministry of Natural Resources, should be hired first and not be bumped by people from southern Ontario particularly?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I will certainly bring this to the attention of the minister, but I can tell the honourable member that our Ministry of Natural Resources takes care of the people in the local areas.

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Speaker, will the minister ensure when he is discussing this with the Minister of Natural Resources that those individuals who have been working for the ministry on seasonal jobs and contract jobs for a number of years will not now lose their positions to people who are being hired on Canada-Ontario employment development projects, since the ministry seems to see this as a way of saving money?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, the honourable member is bringing in another aspect. As he knows, the government of Canada requires us to hire those people through that program; they are really not the regular contract employees whom the member for Rainy River (Mr. T. P. Reid) was referring to, I do not believe. I think he is confusing two different levels of contract, but I will bring it to the attention of the minister.

RESPONSE TO ORAL QUESTIONS

Mr. Speaker: I would just like to comment on something perhaps all honourable members are not aware of.

I hear interjections from time to time that various ministers are not addressing the question at hand, and I would point out that the standing orders do not provide me with any authority to rule or to persuade any minister to answer any questions. In fact, the standing order says quite clearly that ministers may, if they so wish, decline to answer.

Mr. Nixon: On that point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: It is not a point of order. I just thought it was a point of information.

Mr. Nixon: May I raise a point of order with your permission?

Mr. Speaker: All right.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, is there not some other reference to relevancy there?

Mr. Speaker: Not that I know of.

Mr. Nixon: Is it not your job to see the answers are at least somewhat relevant to the questions and not just excursions out around the garden path? I think you will find your responsibility is in some degree to keep the answers relevant; and I would certainly hope that if you do not read it as such, you would accept the responsibility so to do, although it is a very tough job, I can see.

Mr. Speaker: If I may comment further, I do have that authority and discretion in debate, but not during the oral question period.

NOTICE OF DISSATISFACTION

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to standing order 28, the member for Algoma (Mr. Wildman) has given notice of his dissatisfaction with the answer to his question given by the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development (Mr. Henderson) concerning the changes in the draft agreement between the provincial government and the Islington band. This matter will be debated at 10:30 this evening.

POSSIBLE CONFLICT OF INTEREST

Mr. Di Santo: Mr. Speaker, on a point of personal privilege: I wonder if you could make a ruling. Recently, I have been appearing before the Residential Tenancy Commission. Commissioner Sheldon Kert made some remarks on May 13 that MPPs should not appear before the commission, that they were there to intimidate the commissioners and that, in view of the fact that MPPs represent the riding, by choosing to represent tenants before the commission they are in a position of conflict of interest.

In view of the fact the tenants—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Could we have the indulgence of the House? I ask all honourable members not to carry on their private conversations in the House please, including the member for Huron-Bruce (Mr. Elston).

Mr. Di Santo: I wonder whether the Tories are interested in listening. Of course, they do not have those problems; they do not represent the tenants.

If we accepted the proposal made by the commissioner that the MPPs may not represent their constituents, the tenants, because of a supposed conflict of interest, we would end up with a situation where the tenants would be deprived of representation. Is that not a deprivation of our privileges as members of the Legislature?

Mr. Speaker, could you make a ruling on that or make representation to the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Elgie)?

Mr. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, very briefly on the same point: This is a very important point of privilege my colleague has raised. It has to do with our capacity to represent our constituents. Before you make a ruling on this matter, sir, I want to request that you consult with the minister responsible for the administration of these tribunals—I understand it is the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry)—and determine from him whether there is some policy in force against citizens appearing at the rent review tribunal being represented by members of this Legislature, or whether that commissioner was acting in violation of policy.

Mr. Speaker: Interesting as it may be, it is not a point of privilege, personal or otherwise. I would venture a guess that the commissioner was offering an opinion. I would be very surprised if members of the Legislature were precluded by legislation; I just do not know. I am sure both the minister involved and the Attorney General will take this matter under consideration and will correspond directly with the members involved. It does not constitute a proper point of privilege.

PETITION

TRAILER PARK AT ELLIOT LAKE

Ms. Coppins: Mr. Speaker, I have a petition to the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario, which reads:

"We, the undersigned, beg leave to petition the parliament of Ontario as follows: That you will persuade Denison Mines Ltd. to lease or sell to the municipality of Elliot Lake the land now occupied by the Stollery Lake Trailer Park in order to preserve the homes of its 80 resident families."

This petition is signed by more than 100 residents and calls upon all the members of the Legislature from all political parties, and the ministers of the present government, to make a most sincere and concerted effort to encourage Denison Mines Ltd. to be most generous in its response to the request from the municipality of Elliot Lake for control of the trailer park.

REPORT

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, for the first time as chairman, it is my privilege to beg leave to present a report from the standing committee on social development.

Mr. Speaker: Thank you.

STANDING COMMITTEE ON SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Robinson from the standing committee on social development reported the following resolution:

That supply in the following amount and to defray the expenses of the Provincial Secretariat for Social Development be granted to Her Majesty for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1984:

Social development policy program,
$11,624,800.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

INSTITUTE OF MANAGEMENT CONSULTANTS OF ONTARIO ACT

Ms. Fish moved, seconded by Mr. Robinson, first reading of Bill Pr26, An Act respecting the Institute of Management Consultants of Ontario.

Motion agreed to.

COMPENSATION FOR VICTIMS OF CRIME AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Kennedy moved, seconded by Mr. Jones, first reading of Bill 44, An Act to amend the Compensation for Victims of Crime Act.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Kennedy: Mr. Speaker, this bill is to extend the eligibility for compensation under the Compensation for Victims of Crime Act, 1971, to persons who have been imprisoned for an offence and whose convictions are subsequently quashed. The victim would receive compensation for expenses actually incurred and pecuniary losses resolving from the imprisonment.

HUMAN TISSUE GIFT AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Van Horne moved, seconded by Mr. Nixon, first reading of Bill 45, An Act to amend the Human Tissue Gift Act.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Van Horne: Mr. Speaker, this bill is intended to facilitate the obtaining of human organs for transplant purposes. An automated central register of consents and objections to the use of organs for transplant purposes after death is contemplated to allow physicians to ascertain deceased persons' wishes more readily.

Where no objection by a deceased person has been registered and there is no reason to believe the deceased had or the deceased's next of kin have any objections, removal of organs for transplant is authorized without the specific consent that otherwise would be required.

Section 29 of the Coroners Act deals in a similar fashion with the removal of human pituitary glands used in the treatment of persons suffering from growth hormone deficiency.

LANDLORD AND TENANT AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Boudria moved, seconded by Ms. Copps, first reading of Bill 46, An Act to amend the Landlord and Tenant Act.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the bill is to provide increased protection for tenants residing in mobile home parks who are forced to move from a park by a landlord who requires possession of the park for certain purposes. The act currently requires the landlord to give the tenant at least 120 days' notice before terminating the tenancy agreement. The bill increases this notice period from 120 days to one year.

This is a reintroduction of a previous bill that was vetoed by the government. I hope this time the member for Algoma-Manitoulin (Mr. Lane) will not veto the bill.

MOTION TO SET ASIDE ORDINARY BUSINESS

Mr. Mackenzie moved, seconded by Mr. R. F. Johnston, that pursuant to standing order 34(a), the ordinary business of the House be set aside to discuss a matter of urgent public importance, that being the conspiracy between Automotive Hardware Ltd. and Securicor Investigation and Security Ltd. to subvert the laws of the province, particularly the Labour Relations Act; and whether the actions of Securicor were known to and condoned by police as alleged by Securicor and reported in the Ontario Labour Relations Board's decision of Friday, May 13, 1983; and the continuing threat posed to Ontario's collective bargaining system by the use of undercover agents, provocateurs and strikebreaking firms such as Securicor by employers in this province.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to advise all honourable members that the motion was indeed received in time, at 11:40 this morning. I will be prepared to listen to the honourable member for up to five minutes as to why he thinks the ordinary business of the House should be set aside.

Mr. Mackenzie: Mr. Speaker, the motion before us is a serious one because its implications strike at the very heart of equal justice in Ontario.

On page 32, section 1, of the Ontario Labour Relations Board decision concerning Securicor and Automotive Hardware, Securicor argues, "If the board finds its involvement to have been inherently unlawful, it will be breaking new ground on the basis of actions which were known and condoned by two sets of police."

Clearly, the police knew from the beginning of the strike that a private security investigator had infiltrated the union. In testimony before the OLRB on May 27, 1982, Ontario Provincial Police Constable Larry McClure testified that both the OPP and the Metropolitan Toronto Police knew that a Securicor agent was amongst the pickets from the beginning of the seven-month strike. They knew that David Ivers was licensed as a private investigator, had infiltrated the picket line and was receiving strike pay. McClure testified there had been problems in past strikes where an agent had infiltrated.

When pressed in February by the steelworkers as to the status of Ivers, McClure did not acknowledge that he was a security agent until he had first warned the president of Securicor.

Sergeant Gaylor of the Metro Toronto police force was asked Ivers's status back in October and suggested they should ask Ivers themselves. The president asked him if he was a spy or a security agent and he denied he was. From the beginning the police were aware that Ivers had infiltrated the union and the board's decision clearly states this infiltration was illegal.

3:30 p.m.

Does anyone believe that if the union infiltrated the company's personnel department to pass on information, and the police knew of the situation, they would not have immediately notified the company?

I now quote from one of the OLRB reports, one of September 17. Immediately prior to the strike, Mr. Ivers asked Automotive Hardware if there is any "specific information the company requires or any misinformation they would like delivered and any suggestions I could make to the union on behalf of the company that could help them in the situation?"

Clearly, there was a conspiracy and the board is harsh in its condemnation. There is clear evidence of the counselling of theft and a variety of illegal activities. Apart from these actions and whether or not the police knew that he would be involved in these actions, they did know that he had infiltrated the picket line. The purposes are obvious and that in itself has clearly been ruled as being illegal.

A reading of the Private Investigators and Security Guards Act clearly establishes that a company carrying on the business of providing private investigators must be licensed. This act also provides for suspension or cancellation of a licence in section 14. At the discretion of the registrar of private investigators and security guards, he may suspend or cancel a licence where,

"(a) the licensee is convicted of an offence under the Criminal Code (Canada) or under this act or the regulations;

"(b) the licensee is in breach of a term or condition of the licence; or

"(c) in the opinion of the registrar, to do so is in the public interest."

It is also interesting to note that the registrar is a member of the OPP.

We have asked repeatedly in this House for action against professional strikebreakers. One can refer to Hansard of July 2, 1981, and April 2, 1982. Here, I would like to give a quote from the Minister of Labour (Mr. Ramsay) at the time, in dealing with our questions about Securicor: "it is a criminal conspiracy for two or more persons to act in concert with the intention of contravening federal or provincial legislation." That is exactly what went on in this particular case.

We also raised the question in 1982 on April 15, 16 and 19, May 7, June 18 and October 12, and on February 15, 1983, and since, outlining some of the serious allegations that have been made.

It is not just the activities and the undercover work and the counselling of theft we are concerned with, it is the fact that it was clearly outlined as an illegal activity to infiltrate in itself. From the beginning of the strike the police were aware—both the Metro police and the OPP—that an agent had infiltrated this picket line. The question has to be asked as to how we or workers can expect justice when the minister seems unwilling to act in the presence of overwhelming evidence before him. We feel it is a matter of urgent public importance that this issue be debated if we are going to have equality of justice in Ontario.

Mr. Wrye: Mr. Speaker, our party will support the motion of my friend the member for Hamilton East (Mr. Mackenzie). I am somewhat bothered by it in one sense and I want to explain that at the outset. These motions for emergency debates—and this one specifically—may not be in the narrowest sense of the words "of urgent public importance," but we are urged and persuaded on our part that this is a very important and very serious matter.

The report the honourable member has just referred to is a damning document on this government and on the failures of this government to protect workers in this province, not in the specific narrow instance of Automotive Hardware but in a general policy framework.

It is the view of this party that such important matters are of extreme importance to so many thousands of workers that they deserve the attention of this Legislature. It would have been our wish, it would be our hope, that in the future, for example, these would be the kinds of issues that could be subject to referrals and to a full in-depth discussion with members of all parties and with the ministers involved, but that is not the way we can do things today.

Of course, we could send out the annual report of the Solicitor General or that of the Ministry of Labour, but with a Tory majority we know what would happen to those. It happened in the case of Astra/Re-Mor, and it happened with Hydro, Morley Rosenberg and Cadillac Fairview. The fact is, we would not have a forum to discuss the contents of the report.

It is very important that the content of this issue be discussed on the floor of this House in full assembly at the first possible opportunity. That is what we hope will happen this afternoon.

I am rather bothered by the Solicitor General's response to me in this House this afternoon. He tried to set up, I thought, the phoney war as if we on this side were being anti-police and attacking police. I think all members in this assembly have the greatest respect, in Canadian Police Week and every other week, for the forces of law and order which have done so much in so many positive ways in this province. We are concerned, however, not so much because in a sense we are going after the police but because this government has not indicated to the police forces of this province the actions, legislatively, it wishes them to follow—to restore full and obvious and complete neutrality.

It is clear to me, it was clear to the board, that in the case of this single instance, and in previous cases, the essence of neutrality was indeed missing. Very clearly, both the Ontario Provincial Police and the Metro police were aware at a very early stage of the infiltration of the union by Mr. Ivers, and of the fact there could be some activity which could have a very detrimental effect on the strike.

The evidence brought before the board indicates that is exactly what happened, yet it was not until the moment at which the Steelworkers union was in effect about to unmask this gentleman that the police came forward and said there was an agent provocateur and confirmed the matter to the union.

It is very important for good labour relations between employers and employees in this province that we change the activities of these professional strikebreakers, whose very livelihood often, and certainly in this case, is tied to provoking and prolonging a dispute, not to good labour relations and a harmonious and early end to the dispute. This is very important because neither the workers nor the employers can afford to have mischievous third parties involving themselves in labour relations and the activities of the employer and the employees, both before and during disputes.

This party will support the member's motion for an urgent debate and will be pleased to join in and suggest some alternatives to put an end to a practice which has gone on for too long in this province.

Hon. G. W. Taylor: Mr. Speaker, we must oppose the New Democratic Party motion for an emergency debate on the matter of the Ontario Labour Relations Board's decision and its implications on labour relations in this province.

Quite simply, an emergency debate at this time would be, I believe, inappropriate and premature. It is my understanding that Securicor, through its legal counsel, will be seeking a judicial review of the Ontario Labour Relations Board's decision which gave rise to these very important—and I emphasize “very important”—legal issues. We would not wish to prejudice any review of that decision by debating the matter here today. Moreover, I feel it is important that we have the opinion of the court on these issues before we fully debate the matter.

As well as the investigating officer, the registration branch of the Ontario Provincial Police is currently reviewing the transcripts from the hearing and the judgement of the board with a view to possible action as a result of reviewing that material.

3:40 p.m.

It was a lengthy hearing. I heard the members opposite mention the number of questions they asked in the Legislature on the subject. I may be incorrect in the matter, but I do recall stating, each time, that there was evidence forthcoming at the Ontario Labour Relations Board from the main participants in this matter and that we were waiting to hear that evidence from all parties. Then there was a decision as a result of that. The decision is a lengthy one.

Mr. Rae: It had nothing to do with the board; it had to do with your own investigation.

Hon. G. W. Taylor: The decision is in excess of 66 pages, as I mentioned during question period this afternoon.

The decision holds ramifications for both labour relations policies and regulation of security companies in this province. My ministry and the Ministry of Labour are currently reviewing the situation. For that reason, I feel a debate at this time would be premature and inappropriate. The decision indicates there is no evidence to suggest the police acted in any way but properly and neutrally.

Mr. Renwick: Don't let the police investigate themselves.

Hon. G. W. Taylor: I emphasized previously in answer to the allegations, statements and prefatory remarks the members made in the questions they asked earlier that I believe the Ontario Provincial Police and the other police involved in this matter acted in a very neutral and impartial manner, as they have in all these matters.

Mr. Renwick: That is an unbelievable statement. You are supposed to be investigating them.

Mr. Rae: How can you say that when you have not even asked the question?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. G. W. Taylor: In any event, the discussion of the police procedure in this matter would be better dealt with in the ministry's up-and-coming estimates debates. I believe it would be premature to debate the matter now. Those are my comments on the matter.

Mr. Rae: That is a disgrace for somebody responsible for justice in this province. It is unbelievable.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: You had your chance to speak.

Mr. Martel: Well, it is over. Read what the report says.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have listened with great care and very intently to the submissions that have been made. It is my opinion, on reading the standing orders, that I must rule against the motion because it does not comply with the standing orders.

Mr. McClellan: How does it not comply?

Mr. Speaker: I do not think I have to justify my decision. I have done so in the past, but I have found the motion is out of order. It is not debatable.

Mr. McClellan: It is challengeable. That is a very inadequate response, sir.

Mr. Cooke: What a silly way to rule.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: You have been challenged, unless you missed it.

Mr. Speaker: No, I did not quite miss it, but I was really appalled by those who were trying to give direction to the Speaker.

Mr. Cooke: We asked for your reasons and you refused to give them to us.

Mr. Speaker: I do not have to give them. The member for Sudbury East.

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Shall we find out what is going to happen here first?

Mr. R. F. Johnston: We have a fairly clear idea.

4:42 p.m.

The House divided on the Speaker's ruling, which was sustained on the following vote:

Ayes

Andrewes, Ashe, Baetz, Barlow, Bernier, Brandt, Cousens, Cureatz, Davis, Dean, Drea, Eaton, Elgie, Eves, Fish, Gillies, Gordon, Gregory, Harris, Havrot, Henderson, Hodgson, Johnson, J. M., Jones, Kells, Kennedy, Kerr, Kolin, Leluk;

Ayes 52; nays 44.

SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order: I seek the assistance of the Speaker in this matter. We have just challenged the Speaker's ruling. Part of the dilemma for us is that so far this year on three emergency debates the Speaker has chosen, when he ruled them out of order, to give reasons why he was ruling a motion out of order. Today he chose not to do so. If we are going to have consistency and get away from challenges, having established the practice, it would help the members in the House if the Speaker continued that practice and indicated why he considered something not to be of urgent importance.

Certainly, in today's issue there is a great difference of opinion because of the ruling by the Ontario Labour Relations Board and the serious problems inherent therein. Those of us on this side of the House felt it must be debated to get away from the problems that have confronted the strikers and the people on the picket lines in this situation. For the Speaker simply to say, "I choose not to give a reason," in such a very important situation makes it difficult. He himself set the pattern of ruling on three previous occasions. The only time the Speaker did not indicate why was when he ruled it in order.

It was with great difficulty, Mr. Speaker, and with reluctance that we challenged your ruling today, but we felt we were entitled to a reason based on some precedent for that not being of urgent public importance.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, on that point of order, it seems to me the member for Sudbury East does make a point. If there is going to be some consistency, when you do make a ruling on motions that may be defective in one or another area, it would be helpful to us to have some idea why so that in the future maybe we could have motions that were in order.

I know your ruling is not debatable; I appreciate that. But it would be helpful to us when these motions are being drafted to know if there is a precedent in which a motion was ruled out of order because it was defective in one area so we will not repeat that mistake in the future.

Mr. Speaker: To respond briefly and quickly, if you peruse the standing orders, as I am sure you have done, it is the Speaker's responsibility to rule whether a motion is in order or is out of order, as I did.

You make a good point. I have given reasons in the past, and I did so for the very reasons the member for Ottawa East (Mr. Roy) has brought up—in the spirit of co-operation, pointing out, perhaps, to the honourable members where I felt the weaknesses were in the drafting of the motion. Having done that on at least three occasions, and I suspect it may be even more, I was of the opinion that the direction I had given had been heeded.

I do not want you to misread what I have said.

In giving my opinion I did not state it was not of urgent importance, as you have alleged. I said clearly that my reason for it was that it did not comply with the standing order.

Mr. Martel: In what respect?

Mr. Speaker: I have been over this before on exactly the same thing. I would be happy to discuss it with the honourable member at his convenience later, if he so wishes, or with any other honourable members but I do not think I should take the time of the House.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BUSINESS

Hon. Mr. Gregory: Mr. Speaker, we have agreed among the three parties that, because of the time that has been lost in this previous debate, we could limit the debate this afternoon to the one bill, that being ballot item 1.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Ruston moved second reading of Bill 17, An Act to amend the Legislative Assembly Act.

Mr. Speaker: I advise the honourable member he has up to 20 minutes.

Mr. Ruston: Mr. Speaker, sometimes when one brings in a bill such as Bill 17, one has the strange feeling that perhaps it is not wanted or that it is something one's colleagues on all sides of the House are not very happy with. However, we will wait and see what happens later in the day.

I would like to read into the record the part of the bill that is enforceable:

"(3a) A deduction of $100 shall be made from the indemnity payable to a member under this section for every day beyond 10 in a session on which the assembly sits and on which the member is absent from the assembly for reasons other than illness, pregnancy and childbirth, or official business."

4:50 p.m.

Let me first say no particular party or member, or my own position as party whip has caused me to present this bill. I started researching the matter some time before I became whip. Rather, it is my concern for the general principle of attendance and the perceptions of the public which have prompted this bill.

As a former municipal councillor, reeve and county councillor, it was my experience that a member would not get paid on our local council unless he attended or was sick. At the council level, once one was absent, it required a motion of council in order to be paid at a later date.

In attempting to assess the reasons for absenteeism in this chamber, I would like to speak a little about a common misconception of the public, that unless a member is visible in his seat he must be absent from his duty. Many people visiting the Legislature are very disturbed by the small attendance they witness in the House after question period. Naturally, they wonder where their members are.

In most cases, this is due to several concurrent committee meetings as well as the time members spend in their offices making important calls to government officials about problems in their constituencies.

This might be an appropriate moment to mention another serious attendance problem, that of government officials. It is very frustrating when one calls a department head and time after time he is not available. Either they are in a meeting, out for lunch or simply not at their desks; at least, these are the three main excuses I hear.

Another factor for consideration is the invitations received by members to attend functions back in their ridings during the weeks of legislative sittings. When one receives such an invitation to an important function, one must decide what takes precedence, the business of this House or one's riding. Of course, the contact in the constituency can be very important indeed when the next election rolls around; but although the House agenda might appear quite ordinary and quiet, that does not mean an urgent issue may not crop up necessitating an immediate vote.

In discussing attendance matters with other members of all parties, I find those who live within one or two hours' drive of their ridings are invited to many more functions during the week than their colleagues who are much farther from their homes. Another aspect of this question is a member's access to air travel, which is undeniably a great help in getting back to the riding during the week, but is also an enormous expense to the taxpayers of Ontario.

I can recall a story told me by the former member for Kent-Elgin, Mr. Jack Spence, and an excellent member he was, who attended some function in a small village in his riding on a day the Legislature was in session. An individual who was present walked up to him and asked why he was not at Queen's Park looking after their interests. Jack said, "You know, Dick, that really taught me something." However, I must add Mr. Spence always had an excellent attendance record in this Legislature.

Recently I was asked to attend a function back in my riding on a Wednesday. When I explained it would cost the taxpayers over $200 for air fare both ways and cab fares, they suggested I appoint a representative to attend on my behalf.

Another reason for lack of attendance in my opinion is the ridiculous idea of having Wednesday be a "cabinet day," a legislative holiday reserved for committees.

Certainly there are changes we could make to the hours of sitting to better accommodate the members who have a long way to travel to attend sessions. I would undoubtedly extend the sittings to Wednesday afternoon and possibly Wednesday evenings as well, and do away with the Friday morning sessions. This would allow members time in their ridings for functions or any other business they might have to attend to.

I have briefly tried to identify some patterns in the reasons for lack of attendance in this Legislature, although I do realize the members are elected by the residents of their ridings and it is to them that a member must be accountable.

In researching this matter through the democratic system, one does not find many hard and fast rules on attendance, nor is enforcement of the rules a particularly high priority in most jurisdictions. However, I would like to share the information I have accumulated with the members.

In what we call the Mother of Parliaments in Great Britain, the attendance of British members of Parliament is not enforced as a rule, either by the House of Commons or by the House of Lords. However, in the event of special business, steps are taken to secure the members' presence. Historically, procedures existed in both Houses which were designed to secure full attendance on days of urgent business and, in the House of Lords, on the occasion of the trial of a peer.

For example, members of the House of Commons who were absent were punished. The penalty in these cases was the forfeiture of the members' wages. Although that penalty no longer applies, the legislative declaration of the duty of a member remains on the statute book and attendance upon the service of Parliament includes the obligation to fulfil the duties imposed upon members by the orders and regulations of the House.

Officially, "It is the duty of every member of the House of Commons to attend the service of the House." This is declared by two acts which to date have not been repealed.

In the United States House of Representatives, the committee of the whole is usually characterized by low attendance. The work accomplished by the committee is important. However, it is often difficult to obtain adequate attendance by party members even on major issues.

Some of the most important votes in the House are unrecorded. Divisions by voice votes in the committee of the whole House which affect the direction of important legislation are often decided by slim majorities. Since these votes are not recorded formally on an individual basis, there is less incentive for congressmen to be present.

One factor contributing to attendance problems in the House is the noted dissatisfaction with the rules and provisions for debate and the scheduling of business.

Whatever the problems of leadership and parliamentary policy, it is the individual member who exercises the right of true advocacy and bears the responsibility for his attendance in the House. Members' failure to debate can no longer be excused with the words, "Nothing happens on the floor," for attendance would make something happen on the floor and would hold members accountable for their decisions at the same time.

During debates in the Senate, a roll call vote may be used as an approximate index to members' attendance on the floor, but it does not indicate how much of the debate, if any, members heard before voting. Senate votes are marked by chronic absenteeism. In many instances, the Senate must operate without a quorum because attendance is so low. In fact, the rules seem to condone absenteeism in so far as quorum rules can be dispensed with through unanimous consent.

Mr. Wildman: Dispense with the Senate.

Mr. Ruston: This is the Senate in the United States. There are no actual penalties for nonattendance, but in 1972 the Senate members were berated for their poor attendance record by Senate Majority Leader Mike Mansfield. He said: "We [the Senate leadership] cannot force you if you do not want to face up [to] your responsibilities, but you are doing a distinct disservice to the Senate and to the people whom you have the honour to represent." Penalties for nonattendance are practically nil.

In the Florida state legislature, the matter of attendance is addressed in the following manner: "Every member shall be within the House chamber during its sittings unless excused or necessarily prevented, and shall vote on each question . . . The Speaker may excuse any member from attendance on the House and its committees for any stated period, and such excused absence shall be noted on the Journal. A form is provided for notifying the Clerk. Any member, having answered roll call . . . at the opening of any daily session, or who enters after roll call and informs the Clerk of his presence, shall thereafter be deemed as present unless leave of absence is obtained from the Speaker."

Under the constitution of the state of California, article 4, section 8: "A majority of each House shall constitute a quorum to do business, but a smaller number may adjourn from day to day, and may compel the attendance of absent members in such a manner, and under such penalties as each House may provide."

In New York state, it is stated in more detail that: "In all cases of the absence of members during the session of the House, the members present may take such measures as they shall deem necessary to secure their presence and, in addition to suspending them from the service of the House for a given period, may inflict such censure or pecuniary penalty as they may deem just on those who, on being called on for that purpose, shall not render a sufficient excuse for their absence. For the purpose of securing the attendance of members, a call of the House may be made While a call of the House is in progress, no other business shall be transacted except by order of the House."

In the Canadian Senate, failure to attend on at least one day during two consecutive sessions without an adequate explanation in writing results in the loss of the Senate seat. That is interesting. This rule was apparently applied two years ago.

Each senator is required to provide a written note explaining each day's absence. If, during the course of a session, a senator accumulates 20 days in absence without a written explanation, each additional day's absence during the session without a written explanation results in a fine of $120 a day.

The Clerk of the Senate is responsible for monitoring attendance and fines are levied in practice. The present session, which is now over two years old, is creating considerable problems due to its length of time. It has extended for two years and they are still allowed the same amount of days off as if it were only a one-year session.

5 p.m.

For the Canadian Parliament in Ottawa, if a member is absent in excess of 21 days in a single session, a reduction of $150 per day is made from the sessional allowance for unjustified absenteeism. A statement of attendance must be submitted to the clerk assistant on a monthly basis. It was not possible to determine whether fines are imposed often.

Quebec, which has an identical bill to the one I have presented here today, permits a deduction of $100 for each day beyond 10 on which a member does not attend a sitting of the assembly. However, absence due to illness, maternity or official activity is not counted against the member. Each month, members must sign and submit a declaration justifying their absence from the assembly.

Unjustified absences are recorded and once they reach 10, a fine of $100 per day is levied. Last year, no fines of this nature were imposed. Normally, however, several fines are levied each year. The largest fine imposed was, apparently, $900. The responsibility of administering penalties rests with the director general of administrative services.

The Nova Scotia members are expected to attend every sitting of the House unless granted a leave of absence by the Speaker. If a member is absent without permission for more than one day, the Internal Board of Economy may levy a monetary fine. The Speaker expects, and apparently receives, notes from members requesting leave. Nova Scotia does not have a formal roll call and no guidelines for assessing penalties have been established. It appears no member has been censured or penalized for absenteeism.

In Saskatchewan, each member signs a statutory declaration which details his or her personal attendance during the past session and submits it to the Clerk. If a member is absent for more than five days without justification, a deduction of $50 per day is made from the sessional allowance of $6,000.

Acceptable justification includes illness with a doctor's certificate, a cabinet minister on government business, or the granting of leave of absence by resolution. If a member is absent for more than half the session, the sessional allowance of $6,000 is forfeited and the member is paid a per diem of $75 for each day of actual attendance. This latter rule was, in effect, applied to a member last year.

Staff in the Clerk's office are responsible for administering these rules. Saskatchewan is apparently considering the abolition of the statutory declaration of attendance at the end of each session and may instead ask members to submit a record every two weeks. This alteration is intended to hasten the process of distributing sessional allowances to members.

The Parliamentary Newsletter of February 10, 1983, details an attendance check for Jamaican MPs' allowances:

"A proposal to base subsistence payments to Jamaican MPs on House attendance was moved in the House of Representatives on 2nd November. The government House leader, Hon. J. A. G. Smith, moved that the standing orders should be amended to stipulate that members would only receive subsistence payments if they were present in the House.

"If a division was called, a member not voting would not qualify for that day's allowance even if he had been in the House earlier in the sitting. Members would not be recorded as absent if they were sick or away on official travel and had notified the Speaker in advance.

"Mr. Smith reminded members the attendance factor was part of the salaries and allowances increase package they approved in December 1981. The necessary changes have been referred to the standing orders committee.

"In a similar move, the European Parliament has decided that members who attend less than half of its meetings in a six-month period will lose half their secretarial allowance."

That gives us a rough idea of things as I perceive them with regard to this type of bill. It is a bill that should be in place. I have no problems with it at all. I think it is something that gives members an opportunity to get away from this place when they have official business back in their ridings and so forth.

I would like to save the balance of my time for a windup.

Mr. Breagh: Mr. Speaker, I read with some interest the proposals that have been put forward by the member for Essex North (Mr. Ruston). In truth, I would like to support his private bill, mostly on a personal basis, because the member is one with whom I have managed to work for some period of time on the standing committee on procedural affairs. I respect his opinion as a decent, honest and hardworking member of the Legislature.

I do have a problem with the legislation which he has put forward and I want to try to give a bit of a balanced perspective on it. I think the temptation is there, and will be felt on all sides, that this is one of those occasions when the members are going to have a chance to suck and blow at the same time, because there isn't a snowball's chance in Hades that this bill is going to pass. Therefore, the punitive nature of it will never come across. There is a chance to play angel up front this afternoon and say how much they are in favour of this, and then go out and pray, probably for the first time in their lives, that it does not really happen.

I am going to avoid that particular temptation and try to address myself to some of the difficulties. I think the member for Essex North, for example, gave a fairly good litany of different houses, different state senates, parliaments and legislatures, and how they work. One of the difficulties, when one gets around to those places, as some of us have had a chance to do, is one sees that each takes on a set of characteristics by itself.

One of things that disturbed me, for example, when I first went to the Mother of Parliaments at Westminster was that it was a lot different when one got there than I thought. I thought all of those august gentlemen and ladies came to Parliament and sat, as I would certainly have been thrilled to sit, in the House at Westminster.

When one gets there, one finds if they all did that they could not sit because there is not enough room. The nature of that Parliament is quite different from ours in the sense that a rather small group of parliamentarians keeps the place going. A great many others, for a variety of reasons not the least of which is the members are not paid very much there, have to go out and work from nine to five every day. They come in and vote pretty regularly, and sometimes they will come in and speak on an issue that is of great interest to them or their constituencies, but they have quite a different concept of what a parliament is than mine.

One of the reasons I would have liked to have supported this bill is that it does get at something I admit nags at me. In the seven or eight years I have been here, I have probably missed about four or five sitting days, because I personally believe it is my responsibility to be here as much as I can, as often as I can, as painful as it might be. Part of my job is to sit here and listen to views that are contrary to mine, and to try to muster some support for my own point of view. I see that as being an important part of my job as a member of the Ontario Legislature.

I would also conflict with other members in that I believe it is one's job to stand up and say what one thinks about something. There are other members here who are as honourable as I, and as effective as I, who rarely speak in the Legislature. That runs counter to my idea of what a member of the Legislature in Ontario ought to do. That does not necessarily mean they are not good members. It may mean they have a different set of priorities; it may mean they have talents other than speaking to legislation; it may mean they have decided there are things more important for their constituents than sitting in here.

I think one has to recognize there is a legitimate argument which roughly says that each and every member of the Legislature is an honourable member, and part of his or her wisdom, I suppose, is to decide which is the role he or she will play. I think every one of us does that almost every day. We sit down, probably with one or two people, because we do not have many staff, and decide: "What should the member for Oshawa do today? Should he be at the Rotary Club in Oshawa or down at the gates at a picket line? Should he be in the Legislature, in committee or doing some caucus committee work? What is the most important priority today?"

I think that is fair. Sometimes that means one will not be here. Sometimes it means one will rush in for a vote later at night, even though that is not a particularly sane way to proceed either. But it is part of our tradition. A member makes those judgements and the people in his constituency will then decide if those were the right judgement calls.

When I look at the mechanics of the bill that is before us this afternoon, I have to say one would have to be a particularly dumb and stupid member not to be able to go through this kind of legislation and do whatever one wants. It gives one 10 days' grace, and that is not bad, if one cannot honestly come up with a reasoned excuse which says, according to the explanatory note here, one is on official business or one is sick. Some of us would have a little trouble with the pregnancy clause here, but I am sure one could argue that if one's wife were pregnant there should be a paternity clause as well, as we are doing in many of our union contracts.

Just exactly what is official business? For many of us, official business means giving a speech in the Legislature. For many of us it means being here to vote or listen to an argument. However, for a large number of the members here, official business means cutting ribbons. It means shaking hands. It means being able to drink tea and eat small sandwiches at the same time. There are many versions of what is meant by official business and what constitutes the business of the House. I think, therefore, there are great difficulties in trying to attack this.

5:10 p.m.

I admit it irks me that on most occasions in this chamber there is barely a quorum. I have enough feeling for the Legislature in Ontario that I recognize there ought to be more participants here. But I also have to admit, flat out, that there are a lot of occasions when I sit in my place to try to find some rational thought as to why I am sitting here listening to this drivel as opposed to being on the phone helping a constituent, in my office replying to some constituent's needs, or in my riding doing some work there.

Each of us has to make that judgement call and then we can, quite frankly, hang on the vine. If people do not like one's particular approach in representing his or her constituency, they are not going to vote for him or her. If they do, then the right judgement call will be made.

It does pose some difficulty, I suppose, as the member for Essex North pointed out in his initial remarks. A lot of legislatures and senates have tried to address themselves to this problem. Two things become clear. The same problem exists everywhere one goes, no matter what one does. It does not matter whether one has to hand in a little attendance slip every day or whether one's value as a member is regarded by his or her attendance in the Legislature. No one has resolved the problem that was probably the instigation of this private member's bill, because it is not a problem one can solve on a group basis.

There have been occasions here when most of the members who are regularly in attendance could have pointed a finger at someone else and said: "He has not been here in three weeks. Where is he, or where is she?" That is probably fair, but I am not sure it justifies sending one off into a whirl of activity to devise some system that will make everybody be here. I do not think that is possible.

If we want members to make a declaration that they were ill, that they were away on official business, that the member's wife was pregnant or that another situation occurred, that is not going to resolve the problem. A member who wants to be away from here badly enough is going to find what is a completely legitimate and plausible reason for not being here.

If the members wanted this kind of legislation they would have to set up some kind of secret service which would determine whether somebody was really sick or absent on official business, for how long and whether or not they could get back here.

The member addressed himself to some of the other problems of modern-day living. It is tough for me to say to the people in my riding who invite me there on a Wednesday that I cannot make the official opening of a park in Oshawa because I am at the Legislature. They say, "You turkey, you can drive home in 45 minutes; so get here." On Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday I can sometimes make that argument. Things are a little more complicated than this bill would lead us to believe, although I appreciate the thought that is behind it.

I would like to find some magical means that would get the attendance in the Legislature up. I would like to find some different ways of having the business of the Legislature organized so that more people would want to be here. But I am still left with the fundamental problem that part of being a parliamentarian is to decide what one's role will be, what one's personal priorities are. For some of us that means being in attendance at the Legislature all the time that the whip says one has to be here. For some of us it means doing a different kind of work. For some of us it means a great many speeches, and for some of us it means not very many at all.

I am not sure any one of us in here is in a reasonable position to judge another. By our own criteria, we have no problem doing that; but by the criteria of the people whom that person represents, there is only the one judge, and that happens during the course of an election by the people of that particular constituency.

I appreciate the sentiment that is behind the bill. Unfortunately I do not think it is going to do very much for anybody.

Hon. Mr. Gregory: Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to be one of those members my friend the member for Oshawa (Mr. Breaugh) referred to as being ready to suck and blow at the same time. I certainly do intend to support Bill 17 as put forward by my good friend the member for Essex North.

I believe this is the type of bill that results from certain frustrations that have built up in whips over the years. I am not suggesting the member for Essex North is a frustrated person any more than I am as the chief government whip. Frustrations do build when one tries every which way to encourage members to be in the Legislature; and, of course, they are elected to be there.

Mr. Nixon: Offer them committeeships.

Hon. Mr. Gregory: All those good things, we do.

Mr. Treleaven: He tries.

Hon. Mr. Gregory: I try very hard to encourage them.

I believe there is a need for a bill of this type. I am not suggesting for one minute that this bill is perfect, but I intend to vote for it. There are probably some things that could be done with it, which I can get into in just a moment.

What worries me is not so much just absenteeism but increasing absenteeism, which occurs the further one gets away from an election. It sometimes improves as one gets closer to an election. There is a bit of curve there.

For example, on Tuesday night—I do not mind saying this, because it created a certain amount of frustration in me—when we had a vote on a piece of legislation in this House, out of the 69 members I have available, I was able to come up with only 39, which is probably the worst record. I know the members opposite are used to perfection on my part, but this time I had only 39 members. The fact the opposition parties had only about 27 between them helped us to win.

However, when I analysed the figures—and as the members opposite know, we keep good records over here as far as attendance is concerned and where people are and why—

Mr. Stokes: You even schedule your absences over there.

Hon. Mr. Gregory: We certainly do. As a matter of fact, it was made even more painful, because out of the 30 people who were absent, only seven of those had given any indication that they would be absent. The members can imagine my frustration in searching for those other 23. It made it even worse when 13 of them were ministers; 10 of them were private members.

Mr. Philip: Where did you find the member for Oriole (Mr. Williams)?

Hon. Mr. Gregory: I hid them all over the place. I hid them so well I could not find them this time. It was the old Statue of Liberty play I was playing, actually.

Mr. Philip: Tell us where John Williams was.

Hon. Mr. Gregory: I will get to the New Democratic Party in a minute; my friend can bet on it.

Mr. Treleaven: The enemy is over there.

Hon. Mr. Gregory: I was talking to them over there. I am just declaring war. I hope the member for Oxford (Mr. Treleaven) knows it.

The other thing that appears to me to be somewhat of an embarrassment to this House, perhaps even more than just the fact that members are away, is the number of times we are called on for a quorum call. That is a frustrating thing. I do sympathize with members opposite, and sometimes members on our own side, when they call a quorum call. Certainly it is not very nice to sit and talk to oneself, although some speeches I have heard in this House are better given by oneself and to oneself. But when we had the last quorum call, there were 19 members in the House: two New Democrats, one Liberal and 16 members of the government party. Let us be fair, shall we?

The other dangerous part is committee work. A large part of our important work is done in committee. When members just do not show up, and do not give any word, this creates some delay and some problems in holding votes.

I feel all these things contribute to this House not being quite what it should be. Therefore, I support the bill of my friend the member for Essex North. I would like to discuss for a minute some of the particular items in it and how it does affect us.

My friend went over the practices in some of the provinces and the British House of Commons. They even have this kind of bill in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. Oddly enough, their allowances are a little different, but the price is the same. In the Northwest Territories it is $100, as it is in the Yukon. However, they only sit in the Yukon for 40 days—

Mr. Kerrio: They don't have anyplace to go.

Hon. Mr. Gregory: This is a great speech. The member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Kerrio) would love it if he would listen.

Mr. Kerrio: No, no. I said in the Yukon they don't have anyplace else to go.

Hon. Mr. Gregory: That is possible; I do not know.

In the Northwest Territories it is also $100 and they sit only 60 days a year. The free days in the Yukon are none. In other words, if one is away one day without a good reason, one is charged $100.

Relating to this bill, we on this side would be glad to put together a fund to pay the fines to encourage some of the members opposite to stay away. We would gain a lot of money in there.

I question the 10-day figure. I do not know whether or not that is a good figure. That actually represents approximately 10 per cent, perhaps nine per cent, of the total average days we sit in this House. Roughly 10 per cent is as good a criterion as any, I suppose, but I do not know that it actually makes sense. I would think that 10 is too many and that we should be working on about five days—anything over five days without good reason, the reasons given in the bill.

5:20 p.m.

The only difficulty I have with that is who becomes the judge and jury. If my friend the member for Essex North is saying that we whips will have the authority to determine the validity of the stories that are told to us, then I am all in favour of that. However, if it is being suggested that an absence from this House to take part in a political activity is a legitimate activity as pertains to this bill, I do not agree with that at all.

I do think some difference has to be made as regards leaders of opposition parties, House leaders and ministers of the crown. I feel their responsibilities are somewhat different from those of private members. There probably should be some difference, some sort of pro rata system that should be worked on.

It is interesting that of the 13 jurisdictions—the 10 provinces, the two territories and the federal government—we are only one of five that do not have something like this. The others are Manitoba, Newfoundland, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island. I do not know that there is any kind of message there, other than that we are not on the boat we should be on. I think we are behind the times.

I suspect the argument many people will give is, "I was elected by certain constituents and consequently I owe it to them to be with them." I am not of the opinion that you are elected to be with your constituents as much as you are to represent your constituents here.

Mr. Elston: Maybe they elected you to send you away.

Hon. Mr. Gregory: I do not know; maybe they did. They did not send me very far; not as far as they sent my friend. As a matter of fact, they sent me to Queen's Park rather than to Ottawa so I could get home and see them every night.

I do think it should be taken into consideration that we are the largest, and probably the richest, province in Canada. Of the 13 jurisdictions, we are one of five. The other four are not nearly as large or as prosperous as we are.

Probably they are not paid nearly as much as we are.

It seems to me there is a need for something of this sort. As I discussed with the member earlier, I certainly will support his bill, and I hope that at some time in the future something can be done to make this a workable bill to bring it in line with the other jurisdictions in Canada and Britain.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the whip of the Liberal Party for bringing in this bill. I think it is typical that not only has he spoken eloquently in its favour but also the chief government whip, in his own inimitable way, has spoken in favour of it. Their frustrations at maintaining attendance must be considerable. From time to time I have shared those frustrations in my responsibilities, first as leader and now for some years as House leader.

We all know of valid reasons why members are not here. Sometimes we have to go home and plant the corn. There might even be more important reasons than that, but presumably if I were doing that, that would be a reason to fork over $100 a day, since I would be putting my personal responsibilities ahead of the responsibilities I was elected to carry out here.

There was something the whip of the Tory party said a minute ago that I should have written down. I agree with him that we are elected to be here and not balancing cups of tea and being present at every dogfight or whatever in our own constituencies.

I have absolutely no embarrassment whatsoever when I reply to invitations in my constituency, pointing out to them that unfortunately the House will be in session and I will not be able to be there. My mug will not be in the lineup in the Brant News or the Plattsville Bugle, but that is okay; I have to make up for that in certain other ways.

I just want to speak briefly. My late father, who was the member for Brant for many years, used to talk about the early days down here when the session very rarely went for more than four weeks or maybe five weeks. Since a majority of the members happened to be farmers—regrettably that is no longer the case—when the tulips poked up in the front yard of Queen's Park, everybody left whether the House was adjourned or not, because it was planting time and they had to get back and do the first things that had to come first.

There was an occasion, I believe, that our indemnity was established on sitting for 26 days. In one famous session, the work of the House was completed before that time and just as they came to prorogue, the Clerk pointed out to somebody that they would not get their indemnity since the session had not lasted long enough. Some ingenious leader got up and moved that Saturdays and Sundays be counted as sitting days. They all voted in favour of that and trooped off with their cheques in their pockets.

Perhaps a person does not like to be judgemental in these things, but the thing that sometimes is infuriating is when one finally goes through all the possible reasons for being absent and finds there are certain of our colleagues, I believe in all parties, who have to have a very good reason to be here rather than a very good reason to be absent. Perhaps it is these people, along with the rest of us requiring to be reminded of our duties from time to time, who would benefit from the enactment of this bill. One just really cannot thumb one's nose at this place all the time without having at least some sort of monetary penalty or at least a note from your mother or something like that.

It has been pointed out that the bill might not be as effective as we would hope, but at least it means that at the bottom line we, as a legislature, have a ruling that reinforces what should be our duty, and that is to be here in the House.

Looking back even in my own career, which is about 21 years now, I came into the House just a few weeks after John Robarts became Premier. He was his own House leader and was in the House almost all the time it was in session. He was a bit unsure of himself, which was understandable, since he had just taken on this responsibility, but because the head of the government was there, the cabinet ministers were there all the time.

The government whip said the leaders of the opposition parties and the members of the government ought to be excused more frequently. Perhaps that is so. In those days not so long ago, the Premier could order his business so the prime responsibility of a politician elected to this House was to be here, to listen to the debate and take part when the spirit moved him and the occasion was brought forward. It certainly worked that way and, in those days, the attendance was quite strong on all sides of the House, because there seemed to be something effective happening here.

The relevancy of the House has decreased substantially since then, partly because we have moved some of the estimates out into committees. Because the time required for the review of estimates has grown to be so great, we cannot possibly handle them here. In my view, we spend perhaps too much time on estimates. At times, it is a self-defeating project in which we simply bore ourselves silly and read things prepared for us, in some instances, by our very competent researchers and speech writers. I do not want to make that as a blanket allegation, but as some members know, it applies to a number of the members who really do not put forward their own views on occasion, when I believe it would be more interesting if they did.

Grinding out this stuff that is used in the Legislature and in committees so extensively, sometimes in some ministerial statements to the extent of a couple of hundred pages of typewritten script, simply defeats the purpose that we are sent here for, and that is to review the business of the House, to express our own views and then to substantiate those views in debate and argument and eventually by our vote. But we have got so far from that by the practices and procedures that we have that I have almost lost hope we can recoup the relevancy that the House must have if it is going to be a viable place where people will want to be in attendance.

5:30 p.m.

I am no admirer, particularly, of former Premier W. A. C. Bennett, but there was a review in one of the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association publications in which somebody described the Legislature in British Columbia during his days. He was one of the last unreconstructed Premiers—no Hansard, no question period, but the House was an exciting place. As the Premier used to say, "People do not even like to leave to wash their hands because sure as they do, they are going to miss something important in the House." His argument was that members there had an opportunity to express their views on the expenditures of the government and the bills brought forward and to offer their alternatives to the government.

Frankly, 20 years ago our House was a lot more like that. I certainly do not regret the introduction of a proper question period, but it has become almost the whole of the Legislature. As soon as the question period is over, everybody leaves because everything that goes on here is routine. My experience is that it is often the people who get a little extra pay—such as myself, the whip of the Tory party and maybe the whips of the other two parties—who are here trying to make some semblance of attendance and some semblance of an exchange of views from time to time.

What we are all hoping for and discussing in our caucus is the possibility of certain changes in the rules. Some of the proposals will improve the atmosphere in this House and will make the debate more interesting. The attempt by the Parliament of Canada to introduce some more interesting rules is one we are looking at very carefully, particularly the idea that each speech be followed by five or 10 minutes of rebuttal or comment from other members present. In other words, if one is going to say something in the House, one may very well be checked on it and brought up short at the end of the speech. There is the feeling that some sort of exchange of views can occur.

There are things such as this that I think are going to be interesting. Even in a debate like the one this afternoon where there is a time limit on our speeches, it means that even if a person is not making much sense—which is an opening for some of my colleagues to interject—at least his time is running out. I hasten to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I have only one minute and 20 seconds left—19, pardon me.

These sorts of time limits are ones I would welcome. I know there are arguments among my colleagues who feel one of the legitimate instruments the opposition possesses in any democratic parliament is the use of a speech that reviews fully the alternatives in a government program and in this way applies some sort of pressure on the government to adjust itself in that connection.

I am very hopeful new rules and perhaps the implementation of the implication in the bill that the Liberal whip has put before us today will do a good deal to improve the situation in this House. I have no hesitation in saying that when we are called on to vote, I shall stand up in favour.

Mr. Di Santo: Mr. Speaker, I must confess that I am a little intimidated speaking after the honourable member who just finished speaking because I am not as articulate as he is and since I am speaking against the bill, I will not be able—

Mr. Nixon: Surely not.

Mr. Di Santo: I will not speak against the bill.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Next.

Mr. Boudria: We have talked him into it already.

Mr. Di Santo: Yes. Easily intimidated.

If we needed a bill that would collectively force us to be here, I would rather have opted for the legislation in existence in Texas, where in order to sit the Senate requires a quorum of 12 senators out of 19. If there is not a quorum, the Speaker can ask the sheriff to go into the city and direct the members and bring them in. That is the type of law I would have liked.

If we pass Bill 17, in this spring session any member could have been in the House only six days and still not violate the bill. I do not think the honourable members who spoke in favour of this bill can really argue that being present in the House only six days—one day every two weeks—is effective attendance in this Legislature.

Mr. Boudria: Yes, but in a whole year, the session starts—it is not the same part of the session.

Mr. Di Santo: Mr. Speaker, I will try again. We began sitting in April and we will adjourn at the end of June. During this 12-week period, if any member only sits six days, which means one day every two weeks, he would not violate this bill. I do not think that makes a good argument in favour of having a bill which is—

Mr. Boudria: That is incorrect, Mr. Speaker. You should not let him say it.

Mr. Di Santo: Mr. Speaker, may I defer to the member?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Cousens): No, no. You have the floor and he is just interjecting.

Mr. Di Santo: I am trying to make a rational argument but it does not seem to be getting through. What I want to say is that despite the good intentions of the member for Essex North, this bill is the result of a reactionary ideology. It implies the members of this Legislature do not have enough moral responsibility to make a judgement about their duties and when they should be in the Legislature.

It implies that when they cannot be in the Legislature, there must be some big brother, such as the government whip, who will judge if the member is pregnant. As the member for Oshawa said, many members would have a problem with that. If a member is absent on official business, who will judge what is official business? The government party whip can say that particular business is not official business. It is only justifiable when the cabinet ministers do not come for question period; their absences will be justified.

I believe our role is a dual role. We have legislative duties and some of us with an impeccable attendance record in the House could argue that other members who are not here too often should perhaps be compelled by their moral conviction to attend, but there are other yardsticks by which we should be judged.

There are members who never speak in this Legislature; do the members who support this bill think those members who are warming their seats are doing their duty by just sitting here and not contributing to the debate? Do they not think that our other important role is the advocacy role?

Many people do not feel this is important, I know for a fact, because I have constituents coming to me from ridings represented by Tory members. These members will not take workers' compensation cases because there are workers' advisers. Of course, we have to take those cases and do the job that is not done by members on the government side—provide a service to injured workers. That is not done by some members who think their only responsibility is to stay here in this parliament.

I must say that very often I also missed some ministers at the Workers' Compensation Board, particularly the member for Cochrane South, the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Pope). We go there and we defend our constituents. Is that official business? Is that private business? We go before the rent review commission—and some people may argue that is a conflict of interest—but some of us actually go there and represent our constituents. Now is that official business?

Mr. Philip: We canvass door to door when the House is in session.

Mr. Di Santo: The member for Etobicoke is saying something absolutely inappropriate, so I won't—

Mr. T. P. Reid: He is consistent anyway.

Mr. Di Santo:—respond to his interjection, because there is also time for canvassing but that is not part of our responsibility as elected members. What I am saying is there are other duties that are important. I do not think the judgement should be made by somebody else who is elected like any other member. By virtue of what privilege or prerogative can he say, "What you are doing now is official business," or, "What you are doing now is private business"?

5:40 p.m.

It is up to our consciences to decide if we are to stay here, if we are to speak, in what way we are to contribute to the debate and in what way we have to try to discharge our responsibilities of pointing out to the people of Ontario how wrong the politics of the government are in respect to the issues we think are important. Also, we have to play an advocacy role, which is very important, especially for members like myself and many other members who represent working class constituencies where there is a lack of government services.

My colleague the member for Yorkview (Mr. Spensieri) can explain the needs of his area. There is only one legal aid service for 120,000 people. Our constituents come to us because, if they go to the legal clinic, there is a waiting list of three or four months. If our constituents need to be represented before a public board or a government agency, they come to us. We have to discharge that duty because it is our responsibility to represent them.

I think the member for Essex North introduced the bill with good intentions, but I do not think we need to be disciplined.

Let me make a final observation. I think the attendance in this Legislature is very good. The member for Essex North mentioned a number of legislatures, parliaments and senates, but he failed to tell us that in many of those parliaments they have very serious problems. He mentioned the European Parliament. I do not want to tell members what happens at the European Parliament.

Mr. Boudria: What does happen?

Mr. T. P. Reid: Tell us what does happen.

Mr. Di Santo: I will do that on another occasion because time is running out. I appreciate the member's intentions, but I cannot vote for his bill.

Mr. J. M. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the member for Essex North and Bill 17. I have some difficulty in doing so, because I have a great fear that if I ever support an opposition member's bill, there has to be something about it I have not understood. However, it is fairly straightforward and, if some of the members over there can support it, it cannot be all that bad.

Mr. Mackenzie: Aren't you worried about the storm troopers coming in?

Mr. J. M. Johnson: I think so. That was another day.

I would like to comment on a couple of areas of concern I have. I think there is some inequity in the work load members have in this chamber; perhaps not in work load but in time taken away from a member. The member for Timiskaming (Mr. Havrot), the former Speaker and members from the east and north have more of a burden to carry than many of the other members.

I happen to be fortunate in that I am only about 100 miles away, so I have a two-hour time loss coming and going. I know many members from the north and east lose practically a whole day. The member for Rainy River (Mr. T. P. Reid) is one. He flies through the United States and I understand he takes a detour once in a while to California.

When we think of attendance in the House, if we want to be fair, we should think of the extra hours required by members who come in from a distance. I know there are members who live in the city who actually go home for lunch and dinner. That is a luxury many members do not have. I, for one, do not have it. I come down on Monday and I get home on Friday. I spend four nights in the city and I am not that impressed with the city.

The member for Essex North should have taken that into consideration because I think it is a legitimate concern. When we talk about attendance in the House we think in terms of the sitting hours of the House, but Wednesday is a committee day, both Wednesday morning and Wednesday afternoon. Many members may not be in the House on Friday, but they spend all day Wednesday in committee. I think that too is important, perhaps more so than sitting listening to a bunch of malarkey.

Mr. Boudria: Watch it now.

Mr. Ruston: There is the member right beside you.

Mr. Boudria: Be nice; the worst one is sitting right beside you.

The Acting Speaker: Order.

Mr. J. M. Johnson: If we do proceed with the bill, and I hope we do, there are a couple of other concerns I would have. One would be, and it has been mentioned by some of the members, in relation to what constitutes official business in the riding. The one concern I have is some members feel it is a priority to be in the House, others feel it is a priority to be in the riding. Some think they are there on constituency business, but many of us if we were honest would think that perhaps we are there to pick up some votes for the next election.

Quite frankly, I agree with the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk (Mr. Nixon) and his comments relating to his father's experience in the House. They make sense. Who was the member who passed that wonderful idea that one had Fridays and Saturdays, or Saturdays and Sundays off?

Mr. Ruston: Mr. Speaker, it has been very interesting listening to the comments of those participating in the limited time. I know there are some others who would like to speak on it as well, pro or con.

The member for Oshawa remarked it is one of those things one wants, but one does not want to vote for it. He reminded me of the case where a fellow belonged on a council or in this place when one of the bills was coming through for an increase in pay. When the bill came into the Legislature to be voted on, it just went through with no voice call or anything. Naturally, most of our increases in pay go through without objection. He went back and told some of the people in his riding: "I would not vote for that. I went right out in the hallway and I did not go in to vote for that." However, he got his cheque at the end of the month. In a way, I think the member for Oshawa was saying something like that. He wants it both ways, I suppose.

The member for Oshawa also mentioned speaking and the amount of times people speak. That is correct. In fact, I read an article at one time about a member, I think in Ottawa, who was there for 16 years, had never given a speech in Parliament and got re-elected. I am not saying in any way that a person has to come down here and, just because he has a seat in this place, he should make a speech. In other words, everything is taken in Hansard and maybe it would be easier for some of us to get re-elected if we did not talk so much sometimes. They cannot hang a member for what he did not say, but they can for what he did say.

I was glad to have the support of the government whip and understood in a way some of his frustrations he was telling us about. He was being so frank. We appreciate that.

I was glad to hear from the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk, the House leader of the Liberals, with his wide experience. It is interesting in any debate that goes on this Legislature that the House leader for that party is capable of getting up and with his wide experience over 60 years—he is only about 50 years old or maybe we should say 39—he remembers everything his dad told him and everything that went on even prior to his birth. He gives us a wide experience. His father started representing their area and was elected the year I was born so they have been representing their area for 63 years.

Mr. T. P. Reid: 1872?

Mr. Ruston: Yes, 1872.

The member for Downsview (Mr. Di Santo) is a little mixed up. I do not know what he was talking about when he said one could be here one day a week for the six weeks. I think he forgets a session runs from March or February, whenever it opens. Last year, in 1982, it started in March and ran through until February 1983.

This is not a session; this is only part of a session. The member will learn that after he is here a few more years. It takes time. The member is a fine gentleman, but he has to learn a few things about the operation of the Legislature.

5:50 p.m.

The member for Wellington-Dufferin-Peel (Mr. J. M. Johnson) has some different ideas as far as priorities in the House or in one's riding are concerned. I accept that. That is something one has to decide. People come to me and say they have something important to do in their ridings, and perhaps they cannot be here on a certain day. I tell them that if it is that important, they had better go. I understand that.

After all, the things that go on there are part of what one has to know about. We have a 10-day allowance for a full year or a year and a half. A session can go as long as two years. That is what is happening in the Senate in Ottawa right now where it has gone on so long many of them are having problems attending.

I appreciate the comments the members have made and we certainly hope we will have their support.

The Acting Speaker: Mr. Ruston has moved second reading of Bill 17.

All those in favour will please say "aye."

All those opposed will please say "nay."

In my opinion the ayes have it.

Motion agreed to.

Bill ordered for committee of the whole House.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Gregory: Mr. Speaker, before the House recesses for dinner, can I indicate the business of the House?

Tonight we will continue the budget debate. On Friday we will do the estimates of the Ministry of Government Services. On Monday, May 23, the House will not sit.

On Tuesday, May 24, afternoon and evening, we will do second reading of Bills 14, 35, 36, 37, 38 and 43, standing in the name of the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Ashe), then committee of the whole, if required, on these bills as well as on Bill 3. Then, if there is time, we will have second reading of Bills 4, 5 and 13.

On Thursday, May 26, ballot items standing in the names of Mr. Dean and Mr. Peterson will be called. In the evening, we continue with the budget debate. On Friday, May 27, we continue the estimates of the Ministry of Government Services.

The House recessed at 5:53 p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

Thursday, May 19, 1983

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Resuming the adjourned debate on the amendment to the amendment to the motion that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government.

Mr. J. M. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, this is a carryover from the speech this afternoon. I will make some comments on the bill of the member for Essex North (Mr. Ruston).

I am pleased to have the opportunity to participate in the budget debate. This is one of the few occasions when a member is able to discuss matters of provincial interest as they relate to his or her personal point of view.

I wish to mention too at this time that on May 4 the Premier (Mr. Davis) announced his decision not to become a candidate for the leadership of the federal Progressive Conservative Party, a position that is only one step away from being Prime Minister of Canada. As a Canadian I was very disappointed, because I believe the Premier is the outstanding statesman in this country. However, as an Ontarian I was pleased with the Premier's decision.

[Applause]

Mr. J. M. Johnson: Thank you.

Mr. McClellan: Gordon Walker didn't applaud. Boom Boom didn't applaud.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Cousens): Order.

Mr. J. M. Johnson: Canada's loss is Ontario's gain, and I look forward to serving in the Legislature with this Premier for many more years.

I also was extremely pleased with the decision by our Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) not to resign over the so-called leak of his budget. I fully support our Treasurer in this decision, as do all of his caucus colleagues.

Now on to the budget.

Mr. McClellan: You mean the so-called budget.

Mr. J. M. Johnson: Will my friend kindly go away?

I am proud to be a member of a government which has once again delivered a thoughtful, responsible and responsive budget to the people of this province. I wish first to take a brief look at the major incentives introduced in the budget and then to dwell at some length on the philosophical basis for these initiatives.

The honourable members of the Legislature, especially the honourable members opposite, might well benefit from such a consideration. After all, the principles behind this budget are those that have pervaded our government for the past 40 years. They are also the same principles which have made our province that which it is today.

Let me first speak of the budget and of those whose task it was to design it. In the light of today's uncertain economic climate, there is no doubt the Treasurer has produced the right budget for the times. In preparing this budget, policymakers had to grapple with three conflicting challenges.

First, they were faced with the task of preserving the real gains made over past years. Second, they had to balance future and long-term goals with the real need for short-term relief. Third, they had to meet the challenge of ensuring the interests of all Ontarians as well as responding to the special needs of specific groups in our society. The Treasurer's budget has faced these three challenges squarely and honestly, and has met them.

Real gains have been preserved by sound fiscal policy that has refrained from excessive and costly stimulation. In these times of high unemployment and low capacity utilization, we frequently hear calls for government to spend more and more money. However, this must be resisted lest it lead to the recently broken inflationary cycle starting anew. We must preserve our real gains.

Real gains were made by the government last year in its fight against inflation. This was done in a number of ways. First, public sector cost reduction was passed on to the private sector in the form of lower tax increases. Second, government decreased its demands in the capital market and thus eased pressure on interest rates. Third, the government set an example by signalling an era of lower wage settlements to the private sector.

Finally, the government has preserved real gains by keeping Ontario's actual expenditures and revenues within 0.0 per cent of the original budget estimates tabled last May. As a former businessman, I say this kind of management is remarkable. On a personal note, I ask any of the members of this Legislature if any of them was able to keep his or her budget at less than one per cent off base.

The future wellbeing of this province has been addressed in the budget through the encouragement of investment and productivity improvement in the private sector. Long-term consideration for future needs is also evident in our co-operative stance towards the federal government. We believe we must work in harmony to improve our long-term economic prospects.

Lastly, the best interests of all Ontarians have been ensured by maintaining a fiscal framework that permits the funding of beneficial public programs without imposing an excessive burden of debt on our citizens.

The budget has met the three challenges I mentioned through the following praiseworthy initiatives. The budget holds the increase in government spending below the growth rate of the economy. It keeps a tight rein on the provincial deficit. It fosters provincial-federal co-operation. It stimulates business investment. In this context, I remind the House that the Treasurer has introduced $335 million worth of tax cuts and incentives, most of which are aimed at small business. Increases in business taxes amount to only $70 million, and the province will put another $30 million into the small business development corporation program, providing equity capital to small businesses with fewer than 150 employees.

8:10 p.m.

The budget provides funds for new capital works, manpower training, youth employment and job creation programs. It stimulates consumer spending and raises consumer confidence. The headline in the Globe and Mail this morning said that very thing, that consumers are spending more. They have confidence in the economy of the day.

Mr. Cooke: Do you believe everything you read?

Mr. J. M. Johnson: Not in the Globe.

As a representative of a farming community, I am pleased to see the introduction of the new beginning farmers program. This program will provide up to five percentage points in interest subsidy on eligible loans to beginning farmers for a period of five years. Up to 1,000 new farmers can benefit each year. At current interest rates, this program is expected to provide $9 million in interest subsidies in the first year and $135 million over five years.

I was also very pleased with the Treasurer's decision to extend for one more year the farm adjustment assistance program, which was scheduled to expire in December 1982.

In 1983 and 1984, $10 billion will go to fund health and social services, and $5.5 billion will be spent in education in Ontario. This translates into $1,000 per citizen for health care and $1,800 in education for each young person.

The government is committed to maintain and encourage fundamental social programs. Unfortunately, its ability to do so has been seriously hampered by certain federal policies. Members of this House are aware that the federal government has cut its transfer payments to the provinces for health and post-secondary education. These cuts cost Ontario $288 million last year, and this year it will be $315 million.

The federal government has compounded the problem by capping the growth of post-secondary education transfer payments. This takes away an additional $37 million from our revenues this year; so the difficulties facing Ontario in the areas of health and post-secondary education are evident.

The budget deals with financial problems realistically. It faces the fact that money has to be raised to pay for social programs. That is one thing the members opposite always forget.

The guiding principles behind the budget can be summed up simply as belief in the private sector, in the individual and in free enterprise; belief in the people of Ontario.

Mr. Bradley: Like Suncor?

Mr. J. M. Johnson: I have not even thought of mentioning anything about Bryce Mackasey; so do not tempt me.

Mr. Cooke: Let's talk about Bryce.

Mr. J. M. Johnson: Do you want to talk about Bryce?

My government believes the recovery we all anticipate can only be led by the private sector. Only private enterprise can undertake investments and create permanent jobs upon which recovery depends. Government works best when it works hand in hand with the private sector.

It always surprises me how fashionable it is among the opposition to criticize business people. Businessmen are accused of being selfish and viewing the world simply as a marketplace. However, it is precisely in times like these when we have narrowly averted a depression that we begin to realize that clearing the economic air depends largely on the ideas and risk-taking of the private sector.

Our society needs entrepreneurs. They create jobs, and they have special insights that can help shape policy aimed at bringing about economic growth and a healthy society. The innovations of the private sector contribute to technical growth and productivity. By the way, very often these fall outside the realm of government grants or even formal research and development. I am talking about the innovations that result from intelligent business thinking. I am talking about the risk-takers in our society who do not wait around for the government to create jobs for them, but who figure out what product or service is needed and find a way to provide it. Thus they create jobs for themselves and for others.

The Treasurer and I both believe that excessive government intervention does not lead to economic recovery. People and businesses are best served when government restricts itself to extending a helping hand. My government has extended a helping hand to the movers and risk-takers in our province. This was demonstrated in last year's budget when the corporate tax on small businesses was eliminated for two years. This has been extended in the current budget to the end of 1984. This year's budget has also included business loss carryovers that apply to small business, farmers and fishermen.

Mr. Cooke: What about Suncor? Do you support Suncor?

The Acting Speaker: The member for Windsor-Riverside (Mr. Cooke) seems to be asking a question, and it is not question period.

Mr. Cooke: What about Suncor, Jack?

The Acting Speaker: The member for Windsor-Riverside should hold his questions until tomorrow, when someone could respond.

Mr. Cooke: But I can't ask him questions.

The Acting Speaker: I am giving a warning to the member for Windsor-Riverside.

Mr. J. M. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the member for Windsor-Riverside asked a question about Suncor. I have had a long-standing relationship with Suncor. My father sold Sun Oil gasoline for more than 40 years. It is a great company; I am glad the government saw fit to buy a chunk of it.

Maybe some time in the next few years we could sell it.

This is what I call extending a helping hand.

Mr. Cooke: Suncor?

Mr. J. M. Johnson: No, Mr. Bulloch, president of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, interviewed at CFTO-TV after the recent budget, said:

"The government has sent a very strong message to the private sector and a powerful message to small business. I want to tell Mr. Miller that there are 250,000 small businesses out there that think he is doing a fine job and that the small business emphasis in his budget will stimulate the small business sector and create the jobs he is looking for, and we support him wholeheartedly on the total thrust of his budget."

The members opposite would do well to talk to the small business community and see what it thinks.

The government's faith in our businessmen, whether they be merchants, farmers or fishermen, rests in the belief of the value of free enterprise. My government maintains that basic economic freedom is necessary to give each individual the means and the right to arrange his or her affairs independent of the state. Economic freedom, by the way, is as important for the average person as it is for the corporate executive. It is the small plot of land, the shoe repair shop and the corner store that allow people to live their lives as they see fit.

This is not to say that free enterprise does not allow for a network of services for those in need. It was during the post-war free enterprise period in the western world that the profits and the means were created to provide the most generous benefits and the most equitable distribution of wealth the world has ever seen. This is why I am deeply disturbed by the NDP opposition members, who insist that free enterprise and the profit motive are somehow wrong and destructive to the wellbeing and dignity of our society, as if profits do not accrue to people, as if the opposition could find anywhere in the world, in any period in history, any other system that better shared its profits with its people. That is why those people will always be in the opposition.

Mr. Mackenzie: Are you going to use your storm troopers on us, Jack?

Mr. J. M. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, they are wild over there.

The Acting Speaker: I am having a lot of trouble too.

Mr. J. M. Johnson: To ensure the smooth functioning of the free enterprise system, government has the important role of providing a climate favourable to capital formation and—

The Acting Speaker: I must interrupt the member for Wellington-Dufferin-Peel: a point of privilege, I believe it is.

Mr. Di Santo: Mr. Speaker, my point of privilege is that the honourable member does very well when he is reading the speech. Why does he not stick to the written text? His interjections do not add anything to the—

The Acting Speaker: I must ask the member for Downsview if he has any point worth considering in this House at all?

8:20 p.m.

Mr. J. M. Johnson: Mr. Speaker, the member for Downsview came into the chamber and bothered me earlier in the evening and I did not say anything. Now I would appreciate it if he would just stay silent for about another seven or eight minutes.

As I was saying, to ensure the smooth functioning of the free enterprise system, government has the important role of providing a climate favourable to capital formation and to long-term employment creation. The best way of ensuring this is through responsible fiscal management. Therefore, the government is preventing our borrowing from increasing to the point where our ability to borrow would be impaired. As we know, this is the case in many other jurisdictions.

For example, we are all aware of the problems faced by the federal government. It is hamstrung at every turn. Its deficit is so great that it simply cannot finance new programs. So whether one believes in the value of government spending or not, one can see that a balanced budget provides the means of preserving flexibility when it is needed.

The Treasurer has done that; Mr. Lalonde tried to do it and failed. Our Treasurer has done it without overtaxing Ontarians. As he says, "Fiscal reality is not something government can put aside for another day or another budget." I do not want my grandchildren or my children to pay my debt. We should pay our way in our day.

The members opposite sometimes fail to realize that our high credit rating is more than a status symbol. It is concrete evidence to investors that Ontario is a secure place to put their money. This is precisely what we need. When investors have confidence in a province, then we will ultimately have jobs.

Members may be interested to know that during last year's International Monetary Fund meeting, the Treasurer was told by investors from around the world that Ontario is a good place in which to invest because it is one of the few places in the world where government spending is well managed.

My government is well aware that the adjustment to lower inflation has caused some problems in terms of unemployment. But what are the alternatives? We learned in the 1970s that when nations lived beyond their means through excessive monetary and fiscal policies, they ultimately paid the price in inflation and unemployment. The double-digit inflation many developed nations experienced from 1971 to 1981 sent interest rates skyrocketing, forcing governments to take painful corrective action.

Thus we have learned that over the long term, sustained and real economic growth requires a stable, uninflationary environment. Therefore, establishing the condition for such growth must remain a high government priority.

Good statesmanship involves a vision of one's responsibilities that emphasizes the general interest and long-term good. As a former Prime Minister of Britain, Harold Macmillan, said: "History is apt to judge harshly those who sacrifice tomorrow for today."

As I said earlier, no government will be thanked for mortgaging the future by raising government expenditures now, expecting our children to pay for them at a much higher price—

Mr. Di Santo: How about mortgaging the past?

Interjections.

Mr. J. M. Johnson: Those members should think of their children.

In these hard times, the people of Canada are crying out for leadership and co-operation in consensus building. Our government is prepared to join with Ottawa in any appropriate economic recovery program. We realize we are past the point in our history where we can think or act in isolation.

We are also past the point where the Liberal government in Ottawa can play various groups and governments off against each other and still hope to emerge with meaningful economic renewal. Every government, whether federal or provincial, whether in Quebec or Manitoba, faces similar problems.

We believe the people of Canada have a right to expect their political leaders to confront their common problems in a constructive manner. To reach constructive solutions, we believe governments must put aside their partisan and jurisdictional disputes and adopt a co-operative attitude that will allow all governments to work together.

I want to stress once more that the initiatives in this budget have been designed for the benefit of all Ontarians. There are some, I know, who feel they have been neglected or penalized in the process. To these individuals or groups, I would like to present a wider perspective that may help in overcoming this tunnel vision. Many individuals and specific groups think more in terms of what is due to them or what they have lost than of how specific initiatives on the part of the government may be helping others with whom they are directly involved.

For example, improved social services inevitably benefit our children, our parents and our grandparents, if indeed these services do not benefit us directly. Assistance to farmers does in the long run benefit consumers. Job creation for young people cannot help producing positive side effects for the fathers, mothers and families of the young people who get these jobs. Measures in support of small business will surely work towards the overall economic wellbeing when one considers the key role played by small business in the creation of jobs in the province.

Revenue-producing initiatives taken to ensure a controlled deficit and at the same time maintain our essential services will produce a more secure economic future for all the citizens of this province. In the words of a noted American economist, Mr. Alfred Kahn, "The problem in our economy is that we have these persistent, well-organized pressures by each individual and group to preserve his or her absolute position, regardless of what happens to the country as a whole."

To achieve and sustain economic recovery it is important that we change this kind of tunnel vision. Today both public and private resources are limited. A responsible government must manage and balance its scarce resources to satisfy many competing priorities and must do what it can to ensure that Ontarians are gainfully employed. It must also fulfil its role as provider of essential services. Through the measures enacted in the budget, our government is acting with responsibility. It is preparing the way for sustained economic recovery while setting the pace for restraint. It has taken a balanced and reasoned approach.

Tonight I would like reaffirm my faith in the ability of our province to achieve recovery. I believe that Ontario stands to come through these tough times in winning form. Ontario will survive and prosper because it is a well-run province. Under the leadership of the Premier and a cabinet minister like the Treasurer, I am confident that this outstanding management record will be maintained.

Now that I have the undivided attention of the House, there is one other matter of particular concern to me which I would like to comment on; while it is not directly related to this year's budget, it is a matter that has budgetary implications for the province as a whole and the farming community in particular.

Over the years since becoming a member of the Legislature, I have watched with growing dismay the attitude of confrontation that has developed between Ontario Hydro and the farming community. This attitude is all the more surprising when one considers the benefits that Hydro has provided to rural Ontario and its farmers.

I remember well my predecessor John Root's claim that he intended to have rural Ontario electrified as one of his major objectives, and undoubtedly the accomplishment of that objective through the efforts of Ontario Hydro cannot be taken for granted.

It is important that we all recognize the tremendous benefits that have been derived through the expansion of Hydro throughout the rural community of this province and remember that the goals of Ontario Hydro and the farming community are in many respects mutual and compatible. It is therefore extremely disappointing, and often discouraging to me personally, to be a witness to the perception on the part of many farmers that Ontario Hydro is somehow the enemy.

But I am also aware that Ontario Hydro is in large measure responsible for the creation of this perception and that the responsibility for overcoming it will therefore have to be borne by the corporation. I am convinced that Hydro needs to look at its policies more closely. It needs to develop a fresh and more responsive approach to its dealings with the farmers. It needs to view itself as a partner with rural Ontario rather than as an all-powerful benefactor. It needs to adopt a more co-operative and sensitive stance and thereby gain the confidence and friendship of those whom it is attempting to serve.

8:30 p.m.

Only through the implementation of new and progressive methods will Ontario Hydro be restored to its rightful place of esteem in the minds of Ontario's farmers, and the steps to do this should not be delayed.

In this respect, I would like to pay tribute to the immediate past-chairman of Ontario Hydro, Mr. Hugh Macaulay, on his recognition and response to these problems. I hope his successor will follow in his footsteps and continue the promotion of open consultation between Hydro and the farming community.

In this process, I feel members of Parliament also have a role. Indeed, they have an obligation and a responsibility to do their share in fostering a spirit of understanding and co-operation between these two parties and towards resolving any misunderstandings which arise. This will surely be to the benefit of all Ontarians.

Mr. Bradley: Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to take part in the budget debate on the 1983-84 fiscal budget and the manner in which the Treasurer of this province has attempted to address the problems that confront Ontario as we move into the mid-1980s.

Mr. Conway: Tell us about the courthouse.

Mr. Bradley: I should diverge slightly as it has its budgetary implications. It would certainly come under the relevance of this particular—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Robinson): I know you will draw everything in as you go along.

Mr. Bradley: Yes, certainly. It is a $14-million facility in St. Catharines.

The former Speaker of the House is here and he will recall this well. In fact, I have recounted this story many times to all who would listen.

On many occasions, when I first entered this House in 1977, I would use the opportunity in question period to raise the matter of the need for a courthouse facility in St. Catharines. One particular question of note comes to mind. My friend, the member for Erie (Mr. Haggerty) asked a question in the House one day on a proposed tourist booth in Fort Erie. He sat down and I got up on a supplementary question. The member for Lake Nipigon (Mr. Stokes) was in the chair. He took one look at me and said, "Supplementary?" I replied, "Yes." He asked, "On the tourist booth in Fort Erie?" I replied, "Yes." "Try me," he said.

My supplementary question was, "While the Minister of Government Services is looking into this matter, could he report to us on the progress of the courthouse in St. Catharines?" The minister need not have replied because I simply saw the "No" from the Speaker indicating that was not an acceptable supplementary.

It did bring to mind the situation that took place this morning in my constituency of St. Catharines and the expenditure of $14 million of taxpayers' money there. I emphasize it is taxpayers' money because sometimes, when the ground-breaking ceremony or the actual opening ceremony takes place, one would think the money had come directly out of the pockets of the provincial ministers who are in attendance.

Mr. Conway: Me and the Premier (Mr. Davis) bring you this cheque.

Mr. Bradley: Or the Premier himself.

The Speaker is an individual who has not been infected by involvement with the cabinet. The people in the cabinet, not necessarily the Speaker, do themselves no credit by the performances that take place at these openings.

I was reticent to cause too much of a scene but I knew when I arrived that first of all, I would not be on the platform. That is not accepted.

Mr. Stokes: Were you invited?

Mr. Bradley: I did get the official invitation on Monday of this week. I had word of it previous to that, though it was nothing official. The official invitation arrived on Monday.

Some of my Tory friends in the city indicated to me that they suspected I would not be on the platform. I said, "That is par for the course. I was here when the Premier came down to break the ground in whatever way he did it."

Mr. Nixon: He broke what?

Mr. Bradley: He made some passing reference to the local member. Then I looked at the program. Of course, the program lists all the people who are going to speak, all of them except one, the Chief Justice, who does not have a political affiliation, as I recall.

There was no official recognition in the program and no room on the platform for the local member for the city of St. Catharines where the courthouse is being built. It is not a matter of ego, I suggest, or even necessarily a matter of protocol. It is a matter of common courtesy.

I have seen this happen before at both the federal and the provincial level. I have seen it happen to the federal opposition as well, and I disapprove of it no matter where it happens and no matter what the jurisdiction. If only the members on the far side—I am not particularly pointing to the ones who are here this evening—would recognize it, it really reflects badly upon those on the government side when this happens.

Having looked at the program I had to figure out where I could crash the platform; it was well fortified. It had the chairs at the very end and it was going to be difficult to get on that blue platform and bring a few words of greeting and a few points to the ministers who were assembled there.

Mr. Conway: Were the many government limousines drawn around in a circle?

The Acting Speaker: I thought you were telling the story rather well on your own. Perhaps if your colleagues would allow you to continue without their help, we could keep going.

Mr. Bradley: That portion of Church Street was completely blocked off permitting the limousines to be driven up in front of the new courthouse building. I figured there must be some way that I could break into the program in a very diplomatic way. After it said the last person, the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Elgie), would speak—

Mr. Roy: Was he there too? What was he doing there?

Mr. Bradley: I then decided that I would hop up on the side and just move to the microphone. Unless security guards were there to tow me away, which they were not, I would have an opportunity to bring greetings to our visitors from outside the provincial constituency of St. Catharines, to outline the role of a member of the opposition in the construction of this building and to share the credit with those in the community who had worked so hard to persuade the provincial government of the need for a courthouse.

I must say we went through several elections where I was promised. The interesting thing is during the last campaign, the pitch of those on the far side was, "You have to have a government member to get something." We had government members for years and it was not until an opposition member was elected in the constituency that the courthouse was built.

I suggested to a few of my friends of Conservative persuasion, who nodded in acquiescence—today, if they want their Queen's counsel, they are not going to admit this, but those who already have their Queen's counsels are prepared to admit it—that there had just been some little contribution made by an opposition member in St. Catharines, who brought the matter up in the House during the question period and embarrassed the government over it in committee.

I want to commend the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) who gave me a sympathetic ear on many occasions. I also want to commend the member for Brock (Mr. Welch) who no doubt was, as I indicated today on the platform, putting a pretty sharp elbow into the Attorney General and the Minister of Government Services (Mr. Wiseman) in attempting to persuade, as I was, the right powers in government that we needed this particular courthouse.

Mr. Conway: Jim Bradley drinks real water.

Mr. Bradley: Anyway, it was quite a ceremony. I did get my opportunity to speak there. It was not scheduled, but I was nevertheless there and the democratic process was carried out. I am pleased the taxpayers of Ontario have been provided with this very much needed facility.

I indicated to the Attorney General on many occasions that I thought if I knocked on 10 or 20 doors in St. Catharines, the people would not say that was the number one thing we needed, but those who are familiar with the circumstances certainly recognize the need for a courthouse facility in Niagara North. I am pleased that we have it today and I will be certain to include it in my next constituency brochure.

Mr. Roy: Well done, Jimmy. Well done.

8:40 p.m.

Mr. Bradley: I had not intended to diverge on this, but the arrival in the House of the member for Ottawa East (Mr. Roy) and the member for Renfrew North (Mr. Conway), prompted me to become involved in that particular issue. I did want to look specifically at the provisions of the budget, and how they affect the people of Ontario.

If one were to look at the overall budget, I guess the best words for it are "stand pat" or "somewhat lacklustre" budget. However, a budget that extracts from the people of Ontario millions of dollars more than it gives back is certainly not a budget that could be accurately described as "stand pat."

It is a little bit of what could be termed a shell game. The government shows one thing at one time by apparently assisting people through job creation, and takes money away with the other hand.

We have some interesting taxes. One, of course, is the Ontario health insurance plan premium. That is an unfair tax. The government can call it what they want, it is still a tax. Let me explain one example of how it is unfair.

When the OHIP premium officially goes up, I suppose those of us who are members of the Legislature will automatically have the government pay our full OHIP premium. So it is no skin off our necks, so to speak. Yet, my constituency office secretary, who does not have these benefits and must pay her own OHIP premium is in a position of being taxed an additional amount of money that will come directly out of her pocket.

Therefore, the tax is inequitable. It has been pointed out many times in this House that the premium assistance provision, which the government brags about in this House but does not talk about much in the hinterlands, has not been increased in any significant manner in recent years so more people would qualify for it. That would certainly alleviate some of that problem.

We also had an interim social services maintenance tax. I am highly offended, as I think many members of this House are, with the terminology used. It somehow suggests that the poor, the disadvantaged of Ontario, are to blame for the amount of money that must be extracted from taxpayers. Better, as my colleague the member for Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) said in his remarks in the House, that it be called the Suncor tax, to pay the $650 million that is being invested in Suncor.

I always thought the socialist party was the party immediately to our left, a party that certainly does not decide that it is not socialist, is above board and says that is a platform on which to run. That is fine, and yet across the floor we have the party that appears to be, or likes to appear to be, the party of free enterprise, which suggests that an expenditure of $650 million on an oil company for Ontario is a reasonable expenditure.

I would suggest this tax could be called the advertising tax. On many occasions I have been critical of this government, for in the past two years it has spent some $40 million in each of those years on advertising campaigns.

I am not one of those people who thinks all the good people are over here and all the bad people are over there, and everybody on the other side is automatically acquiescent to what is done. I think there are a number of people over there who probably have enough of a conscience to know that for governments to spend the kind of money they do—and I say “governments,” plural, but we are elected to this provincial Legislature, so I will concentrate on the government opposite—for them to spend $40 million in a year when they are preaching restraint to everyone else, in a year when money could be used in other areas, is certainly not something that can be easily defended. I suggest, therefore, the social services maintenance tax can be called the advertising tax.

Certainly, we do not need to spend in that manner the money used to tell us, “Life is good, Ontario, preserve it, conserve it;” or that our streams are nice and clean or something of that nature. There are reasonable areas of expenditure in terms of providing information.

An example of a reasonable expenditure is the Ministry of Health's advertising campaign that indicates to the people of Ontario that all children must be immunized. Another is the government's advertising program that shows its child restraint program. They said: “This is the new law, this is how it must be enforced.”

That is a reasonable expenditure, and we on this side will not quarrel with such an expenditure. But when the money is squandered, as it is in so many cases, on self congratulations on the other side, that is when we justifiably object.

We could call it the Minaki Lodge tax. The total amount of money associated with this project is some $45 million.

I see the member for Sudbury (Mr. Gordon) is here tonight. I want Hansard to record that he is here. I know his community has been particularly hard hit by unemployment. He and the people in his community are subject to the ups and downs of the economy. When the economy is down it particularly hits those of us who represent automotive centres and those who represent mining centres. Certainly, I do not expect him to agree with me tonight, he is a member of the government side, but I think he could think of 45 different projects at $1 million each that would be of more benefit to his community and the surrounding area than Minaki Lodge was.

It is not that we object. What concerns me is when certain northern members say to us, “You are against the north and that is why you are against that.” That is not the case. If the member for Sudbury were to stand in this House and suggest a number of areas in which we could spend money productively on his and other areas I would be very supportive of that, because I think the north deserves, and certainly needs, that kind of assistance.

Over the years it has provided us with the raw materials that we have required. Some of the toughest jobs we have in this province are in northern Ontario. They deserve a return up there. Those of us who reside in the south, where most of the economic action and benefit from the raw materials of the north are realized would be pleased to see that kind of expenditure.

That tax could be called the Minaki Lodge tax or it could be called the land banking tax. How much money did the government spend on land banking? Who knows what was spent?

Mr. Boudria: It was $570 million.

Mr. Bradley: I cannot help thinking, once again, there are many members over there who do not believe in land banking. There are some specific occasions when land banking is probably useful. But it seems to me that in the three major examples that were given, land banking was not a particularly good investment of the taxpayers' money. We have a few houses in Townsend, a municipality that was supposed to be booming by now. In Pickering we had a large expenditure of money, and in Edwardsburgh we had a large expenditure of money. In all three areas the money could have been used more productively to produce job opportunities and the kind of economic activity that brings forward those job opportunities.

We also had the jet. I know the jet has been shot down. I recall a resolution I brought forward in the House on April 8, 1982. We talked about the jet. There is one person I wanted to commend on that occasion. He is a person from the north. We had the governor of the north, as he is affectionately known by those of us in the opposition, the member for Kenora (Mr. Bernier), who indicated clearly to us, along with the member for Cochrane South (Mr. Pope), that those of us who opposed the jet were opposing northern Ontario. What we were opposing, of course, was the provision of a luxurious Challenger jet for the comfort and convenience of the Premier (Mr. Davis), the cabinet and other senior government officials.

There were two issues concerning which the government ran into flak with its own people. One was Suncor. I talked to a lot of Tories in my community and they told me to go after the people on the other side, and tell them what they think of this. People laughed at the jet incident. They said, "Oh, it is $11 million and in a big budget that is not much." That did more damage to the people on that side of the House than almost anything last year in terms of a proposed expenditure. Finally, the government had to relent and change the jet magically into two water bombers, which I am convinced will be of far more use to northern Ontario than the jet.

That kind of expenditure is like waving a red flag in front of people in communities with high unemployment. The member for Sudbury experienced unemployment of over 31 per cent on one occasion. It has been about 22 per cent in our area. That kind of expenditure is fodder for the opposition, sure, but it is damaging for the government. I hope the people in that caucus will remind the Premier, will challenge the Premier and the senior cabinet ministers when such expenditures are made.

Let me give an example in my own area. I was pleased to see $14 million spent on the administration of justice building. It was very much needed. It helped our construction industry. There were two components. First, it was good for the economy in the jobs it produced and, second, it was a needed facility. Let me contrast that with the creation of that government on the opposite side.

It was the former member for Chatham-Kent who was primarily responsible for regional government. Guess what we are going to be opening on June 4, June 5, or June 6, in St. Catharines—not in St. Catharines—

8:50 p.m.

Mr. Boudria: Could it be regional headquarters?

Mr. Bradley: It is a regional headquarters. We have to have a focus for regional government. It is called a focus; we must have a focus. What do we have? We have a palace on the brow of the escarpment. Several million dollars in cost at a time when the people in our community are being asked to restrain themselves and at a time when the municipal taxes are increasing. If one wants to sell regional government, one does not run out and build a brand new headquarters. It is going to be nice for the staff. It is going to be nice for councillors. They are all new chairs, by the way. They cannot move the chairs from the other regional council into the new regional council; they have to have new chairs.

Mr. Conway: Do you think the Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson) knows about this?

Mr. Bradley: I am wondering if the Minister of Education would know about this, because she was particularly critical of people in the field of education, but did not use the same daggers on those who are in regional government.

Many people are good councillors. I have many friends who sit on regional council and some of the senior staff and other staff are people who are very competent. This is not what we are challenging; surely this kind of unnecessary expenditure of the taxpayers' dollars is like waving a red flag at a bull, and the taxpayers in this case are very displeased with that kind of expenditure.

Once again, I mention that I listened to speaker after speaker on the other side tell us that this government knows how to manage the economy. My friend the member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. McCague) indicated that he was pleased to see the way the provincial Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) had managed the economy. We have a deficit of only $2.7 billion. I remind that member, and others in this House, that since the present Premier of this province came to office, this province has had a deficit every year.

That would not be so bad if that is the way they want to finance things and they were above board and said that was the way they want to finance them, but they go about this province talking about fiscal responsibility and they squander that much money and they run deficits every year. Previous to the budget, I said it would be understandable, if we, in both opposition parties, would not be jumping all over the Treasurer if he were to have a deficit which was substantially higher than a lot of people would like to see it in normal economic times.

Indeed, there was not a good deal of that kind of criticism except in the context of what we say are the unnecessary expenditures that are in this budget.

Mr. Conway: The member for Prince Edward-Lennox (Mr. J. A. Taylor) made a few hot speeches.

Mr. Bradley: I am not always on the same wavelength in terms of personal philosophy as the member for Prince Edward-Lennox, but I must say he is a person on the opposite side who often speaks his mind. I have sat in committees with him and he is a refreshing individual to have in the committees. I cannot misquote this, because he once corrected me on how it happened, about being "mugged in the corridors of power." He will read this in Hansard because I know he reads every word in Hansard and tell me that I am wrong again about "mugged in the corridors of power" or words to that effect.

There is a person who has been through the Ministry of Energy, who had to deal with Ontario Hydro. There was not a better person on our resources development committee when we dealt with the Pickering Project than the member for Prince Edward-Lennox. I must say he did a top-notch job because he has been through it. He knows how one gets snowed by some of the stuff that comes from certain government agencies.

He was prepared to stand up against that. He has paid the penalty. He is no longer a member of that cabinet. Still, in committee, that gentleman is prepared to challenge even his own government; and I admire that because there are many who are not prepared to do so, either because they feel they are upwardly mobile, and if one were to challenge the government it would be downwardly mobile, or they are simply prepared to be trained seals. There are too many elected to this Legislature on the government side to be simply trained seals.

Mr. Conway: What about the member for St. George (Ms. Fish)? Is she a trained seal?

Mr. Bradley: I well remember when the member for St. George was a member of the New Democratic Party, but I know the Speaker does not want me to get off the budget.

The Acting Speaker: You are absolutely right as usual.

Mr. Bradley: I will not get into that. I will not be moved in a different direction. I simply want to say that for years this government has lived on a reputation of being a great financial management group. It is my contention that they have not been nearly as great as they would like to pretend to the people of this province.

Nevertheless, as the Premier has said on many occasions, it is not the substance that counts, it is not the reality that counts, it is the perception that counts; and the people on the opposite side have been very successful in creating a perception of fiscal responsibility and sound management of the economy.

I want to move to a couple of other areas. I want to talk about taxes, for instance. I was speaking on the interim social services maintenance tax; which I think is a backward step, but it is taken. There is a tax on tobacco and alcohol, and we in the opposition cannot complain about that. It is a tax on sin, supposedly. What it really means, of course, is that those who are wealthier are able to pay more for the sin, and the sin does not hurt them as much financially as it does others. I cannot dwell for a long time on that. It is the kind of tax members on the opposite side are able to get away with.

I get annoyed when I hear people say at income tax time, "Well, I am sending Trudeau this much money." When I filled out my income tax this year, I almost forgot to put in the provincial tax. It looked pretty good until I had to take 48 per cent of the meagre sum of money that I was paying in tax, and I recognized once again that the provincial government is extracting from this economy a considerable amount in income tax. Not many people know that.

This brings me to another topic related to this budget. I heard the Treasurer—and some of us heard this in the public accounts committee—talk about the fact that the provincial government might give consideration to collecting its own taxes because they are not entirely happy with the rules and regulations affecting the federal tax.

Let me assure members that this will simply never happen, and it will never happen for one reason: not because of the cost of administration, not for any reason they can dream up other than the fact they would have to take the heat. The people of Ontario would know they are paying their taxes in droves to this government as well as to the government in Ottawa. It is fine to let the government in Ottawa take the flak; then, when expenditures are being put forward that are going to be beneficial to the province, those on the opposite side will be first in line to take the credit.

We cannot forget two other taxes. One is the extension of the retail sales tax that happened last year. Everybody forgot about last year's budget, when this government moved into new areas of taxing people on essential items. When they put a sales tax on nonessential items or luxury items it is more acceptable than when you have it on essential items, but I guess the Treasurer recognized that when the economy was well down, people were not buying the non-necessities to the extent they had bought them in the past; the only place to derive the kind of revenues he needed was in the essential items, and therefore he extended it. I was hopeful he would have removed those taxes again and reinstated the exemptions, but of course he has not. We will have to wait for the election year for that to happen.

I got a call at my constituency office again today, from someone who asked: "To whom do we complain about the gas tax? Is that the federal government?" The federal government and the province of Alberta certainly participated in discussions about this and the government of Saskatchewan was involved in some discussions. They are the oil-producing provinces, so they have a certain vested interest in higher prices.

But we must not forget for one moment that here in Ontario—and this is a subject near and dear to the member for Lake Nipigon (Mr. Stokes), who knows his people pay even more than most people in the southerly parts of Ontario—20 per cent is being taken on top of the established price. Of course, the people on the opposite side then benefit from inflation, because the higher the price goes the more revenues are derived and go into the pockets of the provincial government.

I would like to see them go back to the old fixed tax on gasoline. I recognize they need revenues; I am not unfair enough to say they can remove all taxes. They have programs they have to support, and therefore, I am prepared to say I know there are going to be taxes on gasoline. But let us go back to the fixed sum so when they want to raise it, if they do not think sufficient revenues are coming forward, they have to come back to this Legislature and make their case to the members of the Legislature and to the public rather than simply slip it in through as an ad valorem tax, which automatically increases when the price of the gasoline increases. Those are some comments I have on taxes.

There is another area I wanted to touch on which I think is of particular importance to all of us. We have the veiled threat by the Treasurer of the removal of the property tax credit. It has, of course, served in the last several years to alleviate at least part of the burden on the municipal taxpayer. It certainly has not eliminated that by any means. It has not reduced it as much as we would like, but at least part of that burden on the municipal taxpayer has been alleviated through the implementation of the property tax credit.

Now we have the Treasurer saying: "Watch out. We may be taking it away." I hope the members opposite, as well as those on this side, will continue to remind the Treasurer of the need for this since he is underfunding municipalities and boards of education, thereby forcing them to raise their municipal taxes to a greater extent.

I also want to dwell on some areas I think are necessary expenditures, but before I do so I would like to point out to the people of this province, all who are going to read Hansard, where the provincial government gets some of its money. Everybody thinks there are perhaps one or two provincial taxes.

Let me read into the record where some of these sources of revenue are. Under taxation revenue: personal income tax, $4,928,000,000; corporation income tax, $1,322,000,000; capital tax, $329 million; insurance premiums tax, $118 million; mining profits tax, $56 million; retail sales tax, $2,853,000,000; gasoline tax, $759 million; motor vehicle fuel tax, $172 million; reciprocal taxation, $48 million; tobacco tax, $345 million; land transfer tax, $129 million; racetracks tax, $59 million; other taxation, $18 million.

Then we get into other revenue: Ontario health insurance plan premiums, $1,179,000,000; Liquor Control Board of Ontario profits, $502 million; interest on investments, $623 million; vehicle registration fees, $296 million; Liquor Licence Board of Ontario fees, licences and permits, $170 million; other fees and licences, $179 million; Ontario lottery profits, $137 million; fines and penalties, $76 million; royalties, $67 million; utility service charges, $73 million; sales and rentals, $64 million; and miscellaneous, $122 million.

What I want to point out is the many taxes and sources of revenue that are involved with the provincial government. This is so the people of this province happen to know. I know they will all be reading Hansard and will want to know that.

Let us look at what this budget should have produced; then let us look at what this budget did produce for us. I guess what we were looking for, and I think all of us in the opposition probably place this in the first category, was some job creation. There may be some quarrel as to the specific way of having that job creation and I am pleased some money was placed in job creation. I think it is inadequate, but some of the money was put there and I want to be fair enough to give credit that there was some allocation of funds in that area.

My friend the member for Ottawa East (Mr. Roy) listed a number of people this afternoon, or at least had a release that talked about a number of people who do have jobs in Ontario. There are many in my community who do not, people who have been out of work for months in the automotive industry, in the construction industry and so on. None of them were as fortunate as the former cabinet minister, John Yaremko, who gets $51,000 as the chairman of the Liquor License Appeal Tribunal; or Marvin Shore who was once a member of this Legislature who was given a $30,000 a year job with the Ministry of Industry and Tourism following his defeat in 1977; or Omer Déslauriers, the candidate in Ottawa East, who gets a $52,000 salary and $25,000 in perks as Ontario's Agent General in Brussels.

Morley Rosenberg gets $60,100 on an Ontario Municipal Board appointment. Bryan Hocking, the 1981 candidate for Renfrew North, has a three-year term on the Regional Development Corp. John Howard White, the former Ontario cabinet minister, was appointed president of the Ontario Heritage Foundation. William Clark, active in the campaign of the member for Durham East (Mr. Cureatz), and a home owner with no experience in rent review, in 1981 was appointed to the Ontario Residential Tenancy Commission at $35,000.

A large number of people are listed here. I do not want to go through all the names. These are some of the people who did not have a job. I did not want to mention some people because then I would have to talk about the person who gave a recommendation for Morley. There are some people who wrote recommendations for Morley who today may be mighty sorry they wrote them. In fact, one of those people has had to move from the first row to the second row now that he is no longer leader of the New Democratic Party. I do not want to get into those things because they can be embarrassing.

What we need in this province is some job creation measures that will put people back to work, particularly older people who have been victims of plant closings. All of us in our communities have had those people. I feel sorry for the people who are 49, 50, 51 or 52 who are out of a job and have to head in another direction. It is very difficult to get employment at that age in another job that might be available in a plant.

First, we have high unemployment and that is difficult enough. People in that age bracket find that, by and large, companies are not willing to hire them unless they are extremely skilled or have some very significant contribution to make in the work place. The average individual does not have that chance. It is pretty heart-rending to hear their stories when these people come into our constituency offices. They are down and out and simply unable to get another job. They are people we should be addressing ourselves to in this Legislature.

A second and growing group is composed of the young people who come out of our educational institutions hoping and expecting there might be good job opportunities in the province that used to call itself the "province of opportunity," but whose slogan now says, "Keep it beautiful," or what is the new slogan?

Mr. Boudria: "Yours to discover."

Mr. Bradley: One thing the young people are discovering in this province is that job opportunities are not there.

This is not to suggest the government in itself can produce all the job opportunities. It can produce some of them, but it certainly cannot produce the majority of them. They must come from the private sector. That means we need a budget that is going to stimulate the economy; not a rush of funds that will produce inflation, not extremely heavy expenditures, but a significant amount of money, certainly more than was infused into the economy by the Treasurer to create that kind of economic activity. There should be some cuts in taxes to put more money back into the hands of the consumer so the consumer can get back on track and produce the kind of economic activity that will produce jobs.

Another area where there is a great opportunity for job creation is the environment. There is nobody in this House who is not concerned about the environment. There are some who would place it in a different category in terms of priorities. Some say jobs first and the environment second. I have never accepted that we have to sacrifice the environment for job creation. The two go hand in hand. We have a unique opportunity at a time of high unemployment to establish ourselves in areas of technology that can be particularly useful to other jurisdictions by working on the environment, by cleaning up the environment, by producing pollution abatement equipment and so on.

Those of us who represent the Niagara Peninsula ridings are extremely concerned, as I know all members of the House are. Certainly the member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Kerrio) and others on many occasions have raised the issue of the state of the Niagara River and the money that can be expended on it. Some say, "It is the Americans' fault." Certainly the United States, at least a portion of New York state, specifically that area in close proximity to Niagara Falls, New York, and right along to Buffalo, has a lot to answer for to the people of the world.

9:10 p.m.

If we are to make the best possible case, we on our side have to be squeaky clean. We have to enforce our regulations on our side and, most particularly, we have to make a commitment of funds to clean up the environment.

The Minister of the Environment (Mr. Norton) would get applause from over here if he stood in the House tomorrow and said we are now prepared to fund secondary sewage treatment at the Fort Erie plant, secondary sewage treatment at the Niagara Falls pollution abatement plant; maybe even tertiary treatment if necessary, with activated carbon charcoal filtration being put in at the plant on an experimental basis, let us say at the Niagara Falls filtration plant; or a comparable system, not necessarily activated carbon filtration, if there is a comparable and less expensive system.

I would be the first who would be prepared to tell the news media. I would say it is very late in the day to do it, but I would be delighted at the fact he would make an expenditure of that kind of dollars on cleaning up the environment; because it does two things.

First, it cleans up the environment but, second, it gives us a far better case when we go to the Americans on cleaning up their environment if we ourselves, to use the terminology, are squeaky clean. I urge the Minister of the Environment and his colleagues to take that kind of action and accept the credit because the credit would be due to the government if they were to do that.

I also urge the government to meet its responsibility in terms of—

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege: As the only former leader of any party present in the Legislature who has moved to the second row, I wish to correct the record on a statement that was made by the honourable member just before I came in.

I regret to say that, yes, I did recommend Morley Rosenberg as a Queen's counsel. It was not something I was in the custom of doing but at his request I did so. It was certainly long before he got into his conversion to the Progressive Conservative Party. However, I did not at any time recommend his appointment to the Ontario Municipal Board, particularly after he had broken ranks with the New Democratic Party and become a Conservative.

Mr. Roy: He got on the OMB because he had a QC.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Cousens): We are on the budget.

Mr. Bradley: Mr. Speaker, I certainly apologize to the member for Ottawa Centre (Mr.

Cassidy) if I in any way have embarrassed him through that. I accept entirely what he has said as being accurate. I do not know whether I can agree with the member for Ottawa East that he got the QC and that made him eligible for the OMB—

Mr. Roy: He did not get on there because he was a Tory.

The Acting Speaker: The honourable member would do us all a favour by discussing the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. Bradley: I have always had a great admiration for the member for Ottawa Centre and I accept what he says entirely on this particular issue. I want to go on to another issue of importance and that is the issue of education in this province and the amount of funding that is provided to education.

I sat in on a speech which was delivered by the Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson) to the Advertising and Sales Club of Toronto.

Mr. Conway: A bristler.

Mr. Bradley: It was a bristler to be sure. It was the right audience for peripheral teacher-baiting and public servant-baiting and it drew applause in certain areas. It conjured up the kind of concerns we often hear from members of the ad and sales club or other groups about the expenditures in the field of education.

Mr. Conway: It sounded like an attack on Bill Davis.

Mr. Bradley: Of course, in the policy she has announced in recent years, the minister has completely repudiated the Premier's policies as Minister of Education, but that is not directly related to the budget and I want to deal more with the budget.

What is happening in this province is that one has the Minister of Education who I happen to have a great deal of respect for, I like the Minister of Education. She has been kind to me on many public occasions and in the House is very quick-witted and combative, to say the least.

She and the government are starting to set out to pick out the enemies in the municipalities and the boards of education. They are saying this year, "Boards of education get a 5.73 per cent increase." That does not always translate into a 5.73 per cent increase. It sometimes translates, as in the case of my own board of education, the Lincoln County Board of Education, into probably less than one per cent increase.

Yet they must meet expenditures and there are one or two things that can be done. First, services and programs must be cut and, as the minister herself has conceded, the public is demanding more and more from the education system in this province so that is not a viable option.

The second option is to raise municipal taxes. As anybody in this House knows, if there is one tax that is regressive it is the municipal property tax. A person in my riding who has been unemployed for seven months gets a tax bill that says, "You owe $1,000 as a result of the assessment on your house and our mill rate." That person who has been unemployed for seven months still has to pay $1,000, the same as the employed person who might be making $30,000, $35,000 or $40,000 and is quite able to meet that commitment.

The property tax at all times, but particularly in difficult economic times, does not take into account a person's ability to pay. It is regressive, yet the government is forcing municipalities and boards of education to raise those taxes.

The government is mandating programs. The minister says: "Why do you not cut back on education? The local boards know where they can cut." Yet the province mandates programs. It says: "We have Bill 82. You must implement Bill 82." All members of this House agree Bill 82 is a very progressive step. We commended the government on it. We commended the government for accepting our suggestions and modifications on it. It is a model bill for many other jurisdictions.

To be an effective piece of legislation, the bill requires the funding to go with it and that is what local boards of education are concerned about. They are concerned that, while there may be some new and additional funding coming forward to meet the obligations of special education, at the same time money will be taken away from other areas of education and the local taxpayer will be forced to assume a greater portion of the load.

It is interesting to note that in 1975, the Ontario government provided on an average across this province over 60 per cent of the cost of education; that is, the boards of education and the provincial government. Today, according to a figure someone has given me, that has fallen and less than 49 per cent of the cost of education is now assumed by the province. While the dollar figure is going up because inflation is going up, the portion assumed by the provincial government is well down. That figure should go up substantially and I think 60 per cent is a reasonable figure to be aiming at in the context of 1983. We look for that assistance.

I recall the announcement on French-language education was made before the Premier had finished his count of delegates. Perhaps at that time he was thinking he might be able to top the choice of the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Leluk), whose choice is Michael Wilson, fine gentleman that he is. There was a time when the Premier thought his vote total would be somewhat higher and the announcement was made of the extension of French-language education to every francophone student in the province.

I know the member for Hastings-Peterborough (Mr. Pollock) publicly expressed his great concern about this particular announcement on the part of the Minister of Education.

I do not want to dwell on the policy aspect as much as on one other thing. My friend the member for Renfrew North (Mr. Conway) pointed out something very significant to me when the announcement was made. He was listening to it on the radio. He said, "There was something missing in that announcement." I said, "I think they said this, this and this about it." He said, "No, something was missing."

Then it dawned on me no announcement had been made as to how this would be funded. The minister simply said it would cost $1 million more or something like that and it could be easily funded. The announcement was made but there was no corresponding announcement of funding from the provincial government.

It would be much more acceptable to the member for Hastings-Peterborough and others if the minister were to announce that the provincial government would be funding this program. That is the kind of thing we are looking for.

Bill 82 and francophone education are two examples of mandated programs, but the provincial government is not providing the necessary funding. I urge the minister that, rather than attempting to stir up resentment about the salaries of people who are involved in the education system, to provide the necessary funding to ensure our system meets the needs of the 1980s. As she aptly pointed out in her speech, those needs are substantially different than they were in the 1960s and 1970s, and certainly than they were at the time when the member for Renfrew North went to school.

Mr. Conway: It was a long time ago.

9:20 p.m.

Mr. Bradley: I also want to touch briefly on the area of health because I am one of these people who believes that, when the provincial government spends money on health, it is spending money in an area where it is going to receive a lot of support.

The hospitals in this province have certainly indicated their needs. I am not suggesting and I think it would be foolish for us to suggest on this side, or anywhere, that there is an unlimited amount of money available to spend. But if we were to talk to the people of the various constituencies in this province, they would agree that an expenditure of funds on health care is a good expenditure.

I think of my own jurisdiction of St. Catharines and St. Catharines General Hospital. I attended along with the member for Brock (Mr. Welch) who was very gracious in many of the comments he made on that evening. He included me in his comments on the need for a computerized axial tomography scanner and the kind of support we could expect in the community. The interesting thing is that $1.65 million will be paid for the CAT scanner by the people of our community, not the taxpayers of Ontario. I think the provincial government will provide $150,000 a year for the operating costs, which will not cover the operating costs.

I think we would all agree the CAT scanner is an essential item. Health care has a very high priority with everyone. To have people have to wait four months to get into it when they perhaps would benefit from the diagnosis that is available from the CAT scanner at an earlier point is unacceptable. I would certainly not be critical of those kinds of expenditures.

In my own constituency, we have a dire need at the St. Catharines General Hospital for replacement of a particular wing. It is called the McSloy wing and it was built in 1911. If members were to travel through that wing they would be ashamed. When I hear the Minister of Health (Mr. Grossman) say we have a health care system in this province second to none, I would like to drag him through the McSloy wing in the general hospital in St. Catharines to see its state, to see the plaster falling off the walls and the paint peeling off the walls. It is a dismal situation. It is like sending people to a dungeon. What it has essentially turned into is a chronic care wing of the hospital.

The only thing which makes it at all acceptable is the kind of care that is given by a loving and concerned staff there. If one looks at the way the staff treats the chronic patients, one can only be very proud of those people and have a great admiration for them. That is the only thing that makes it livable in the McSloy wing.

What they have asked for some time is funds to replace that particular wing because the Community wing looks very good, the Mills wing looks great. We have many good facilities at the Hotel Dieu and the Shaver Hospital, but the one which stands out as being in need of an expenditure of provincial government funds is the McSloy wing.

I appeal to the Minister of Health and others on that side to provide the kind of funding which would restore it. I know he will be reading the Hansard and responding rapidly to my plea. I think the member for Oshawa (Mr. Breaugh) wishes to speak tonight and I do want to reserve some time for him.

Mr. Kerrio: Do we have to listen to him twice in one day?

Mr. Bradley: He is certainly worth listening to because—

Mr. Breaugh: You have not listened to me yet, Vince. Why start now?

Mr. Bradley: Where was I? The auto industry is another area of interest to the members from Windsor, Oakville, the Niagara Peninsula and Oshawa. They are all concerned about the future of the automobile industry. I think most of us know that, at least in the case of General Motors and perhaps some of the other plants, we are back to work to a large extent. Our people are back. They are earning a good deal of money now because there is overtime. There is at least a minor boomlet at least in the automotive industry.

Our concern is with the long-term future of the automotive industry and those industries which are reliant upon a healthy automotive industry. There have been many discussions. Once again today, the matter of Canadian content was raised in the House and we had the report that was produced. Mr. Lumley, the Minister of Industry and Regional Expansion, released the report, An Automotive Strategy for Canada.

There were some well-known people on that, such as the president of General Motors; Sam Gindin, who is the director of research for the United Automobile Workers in Canada, a person very knowledgeable in the field of the automotive industry; Mr. Harrigan, president of the Ford Motor Company; Mr. Sedgwick from Magna International Inc.; Mr. Dykes, from the Motor Vehicle Manufacturers' Association; Mr.

Closs, president of Chrysler Canada; as well as two people who have had a high profile on this issue, Pat Lavelle, president of the Automotive Parts Manufacturers' Association of Canada, and Robert White, who is the director for Canada of the UAW.

I think when these people—and some of them on many occasions, serve on the union side or the management side in negotiations—delved into the issue of the future of the automotive industry and put aside those differences for a moment, they came up with a report which I think offers some good opportunities for us in the future. I do not believe those of us who represent the constituencies are being parochial—

Mr. Cooke: Is Bob White one of those union bosses the member for Ottawa East refers to all the time.

Mr. Bradley: Was he in Florida when the member was there for a month? He was not there; I just wondered. Anyway, I will not be diverted.

I happen to have a good deal of respect for Robert White, the head of the United Automobile Workers in Canada. I know many people in this caucus have a good deal of respect for him, and for the others on the task force. There is no question those of us who represent constituencies which have a large number of automobile workers recognize, perhaps more than anyone else, the need for Canadian content in our automobiles. We—

Mr. Cassidy: You respect the unions if there are enough of them to count. Is that right?

Mr. Bradley: I think they have made a case very well. I think there are those who accuse the members from Windsor, the member for Oshawa (Mr. Breaugh), the member for St. Catharines and so on of being parochial, of thinking only of their communities. We recognize that while the automobile industry is important to our communities, it is also of great importance to this province and this country in terms of economic viability. All of us should therefore recognize, no matter where we live, the importance of Canadian content.

Mr. Cassidy: You take this position as an individual, we do it as a party.

Mr. Bradley: If the Peugeot is to be produced in Canada, that would be Canadian content. We would insist the largest proportion of that, 80 or 90 per cent be produced in Canada—

Mr. Cooke: When are the Liberals going to bring in content legislation?

Mr. Bradley: The member will have to ask his friends in Ottawa that, because it was his friends who put that party back in power. They defeated the Conservatives and brought it back to power in the next election. The member for Ottawa Centre will have a hard time figuring that out.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order: Would you ask the member for St. Catharines to run through that one again? I did not quite get it.

The Acting Speaker: I would appreciate all honourable members allowing the member for St. Catharines to speak to the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. Cassidy: He accused the New Democratic Party of putting the Liberals back in power in Ottawa. I heard him distinctly.

The Acting Speaker: There is confusion all over this place.

Mr. Bradley: Mr. Speaker, I will be brief in my response to that because I want to clarify what I have said. We all recall that famous night when Walter Baker was unable to count appropriately, and when the New Democrats voted along with the Liberals, the federal alliance, to defeat the Progressive Conservative government at that time.

Now they are paying the price, particularly in western Canada, for that kind of support of the Liberal position on that evening, which brought down that government and ensured the re-election of the Liberal party. Is what I have said not logical?

Interjection.

Mr. Bradley: Let me describe another area in which the provincial government can be of some assistance. I do not want to go into the last budget in Manitoba and how it raised taxes, because that is irrelevant to our provincial budget.

The Acting Speaker: No, we are talking about the Ontario budget.

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: Order.

9:30 p.m.

Mr. Bradley: I want to go to another area where the provincial Treasurer could have been of assistance to those communities which have been particularly hard hit by unemployment.

I think of the St. Catharines area, Hamilton; certainly Sudbury and Windsor. These are areas of extremely high unemployment in Ontario that are being hit very hard by high welfare costs. After the unemployment insurance benefits of people run out, many of them are forced to seek social assistance from the regional municipality or the other municipality that administers it. Then, on that basis, we have substantial increases in the budgets for those communities.

It is a double whammy because those communities are already hit hard by unemployment; they are already suffering from a decline in assessment. The government then turns around and asks those communities to spend more to assist those who require it.

I know that suggestions have come from various areas in the House, but what I have suggested is that the provincial Treasurer provide a formula whereby those communities that have been particularly hard hit by unemployment and have very high welfare bills be assisted to a greater extent in terms of the percentage of the cost of welfare paid by the province.

For instance, at the present time we know the federal government pays 50 per cent, the provincial government pays 30 per cent and the municipal government pays 20 per cent. What I am suggesting is the provincial government, in those areas of high unemployment, provide a greater percentage. It might break down to a split of 40 to 10 per cent or 45 to 5 per cent, depending on the amount of unemployment in a specific area.

That is the suggestion I had, which the Treasurer could have acted upon. Unfortunately he chose not to and therefore our communities have been hit hard.

I could go on all night but, in a sense of fairness, I want to ensure that others have a chance to speak.

I did want to point out to members of the House what the impact of the 1981, 1982, 1983 changes for the average Ontario family were as a result of those budgets. Who in this House remembers, just before the election, when the provincial Treasurer ended his budget speech by saying, "and all this without an increase in taxes."

Let us look at what happened subsequent to the election, subsequent to the realities of March 19.

The Ontario health insurance plan fees have gone up $368; retail sales tax, excluding the hospitality tax, $181.08; hospitality tax, $160.18; liquor and tobacco, $77; the ad valorem tax on gasoline, $181.12; provincial income tax, $368.52. The total increase per family was $1,336.30, and more if anyone in the family happened to buy a pet, pay university or college tuition, purchase unleaded gasoline, renew a driver's licence and so on.

These figures are based on a family of four with an average income, a single wage earner and the standard deduction from 1981 and 1982 tax guides, with average consumption adapted from the 1978 Statistics Canada survey, adjusted for inflation, with one automobile and the 1981 Ontario gasoline consumption average.

So the members can see there was a substantial increase since the election, but I am sure that will decrease in the year just previous to the election.

There is one other project that I know is dear to the heart of the member for Ottawa Centre, and to many in this House.

From time to time we look at TVOntario. There are some good programs on TVOntario, by the way. I must say I enjoy some of them. One of those programs is the question period from Ottawa; I mean the entire question period. We also see on the Canadian Broadcasting Corp., at the end of the week, a half-hour program, This Week in Ottawa. It outlines the highlights of speeches from various people in the federal House.

What they have in Ottawa, as they have in some provincial jurisdictions, is what is called the electronic Hansard. They have full coverage of events taking place in the House.

In this province and in this Legislature we have been well served by those who operate the newsreel cameras that are in the Speaker's gallery. During question period there is ample coverage of what is going on as far as the leaders are concerned and many of the lead questions; there is an opportunity for them to focus on those things they feel are important, and there are interviews out in the hall. So there is very good coverage at the present time.

But what some of us are suggesting—and I think not just those of us who are in opposition; there are a few on the government side—is that we implement additional coverage, a broadening of the coverage of the Ontario Legislature, so that the people of this province have direct access through television cameras to the proceedings of the Legislative Assembly of Ontario, where many of the major policy decisions are made and the expenditures of dollars take place.

I am not suggesting we have an elaborate system that is going to cost millions upon millions of dollars but a system that simply operates as it does in the two premier shows for the provincial government: that is, the provincial budget and the speech from the throne. Members will recall that in this chamber at those times there was a camera behind the opposition benches and another behind the government benches, and these cameras could be used to televise the entire question period.

Some will say, "Well, of course there can be coverage, and if the news people feel it is of importance, they will cover it." But we must recognize that they have their time limitations. For instance, if question period goes on until 4 p.m. or 4:30 p.m. and they want to interview the leaders outside, often those cameras are taken down, perhaps with 15 minutes left in question period; so if one of the members—the member for Lakeshore (Mr. Kolyn), for instance—were to ask a question in the House in the last 15 minutes, a question of great importance to his constituency, it might not receive the coverage it deserves. The member for Sudbury, I think, has two primary television stations in his area.

Mr. Conway: Are they both nationalized?

Mr. Bradley: They could be.

He might well be in a position of wanting to ask a question, and on occasion he has asked some questions on behalf of his constituents that have been embarrassing to his colleagues. In perhaps the last 10 minutes of question period he might have a question that is of importance. That question does not receive the kind of coverage it might if there were an electronic Hansard trained on him.

So what some of us are proposing—and I know there are others in the House: the member for Sudbury East (Mr. Martel), the member for Ottawa Centre, the member for Renfrew North and others—is that an electronic Hansard be available so the people of this province will have access to the entire question period and to other debates that take place in this House, and that there be full coverage so the people of Ontario can see what is going on.

If we in the opposition do not fulfil our obligations, do not perform well, then that is our fault; if the government does not, that is its fault. But the people can make that judgement about what is going on in this assembly. It is supplementary service. It is not a service that I think should supplant any of the newsreel cameras. In fact, if the government were to suggest that the newsreel cameras be removed and replaced, that would be unacceptable to us and unnecessary on their part.

It is something that can be implemented, and

I think if we want to talk about equality of access, the people in all parts of this province would then have direct access to this Legislature.

I have gone on at some length. There are many other issues I would like to raise in this House, but I will have a chance to raise them on other occasions. I have appreciated the opportunity to share with others in the House a few thoughts on this budget. I believe it is a deficient budget but I think in some very specific areas it can be helpful to the people of this province. I look forward to listening with a good deal of care to the contributions that will be made by other members of the House this evening.

Mr. Breagh: Mr. Speaker, I want to begin my contribution to the debate by speaking, as I usually do, a little bit about the process that results in a budget as it is presented here at Queen's Park.

It is one that from the outside, I am sure, is strange indeed to an observer who is not involved in the budgetary process in the sense that he might work for the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) or for an opposition member, because the focal point of it is that in a very complicated age, with questions around unemployment and productivity and economic growth that even world-wide experts cannot seem to agree on, and with a great deal of public argument about all of those things, the process comes down to one individual who, in theory, is the only person in the province who knows what the budget contains before it is put out.

It seems to many observers and to me that is a strange process, which might have been appropriate 100 or 200 years ago, but does not fit the world as it is now.

9:40 p.m.

In recent years we have seen the traditional budgetary process change a little bit. We have seen it expanded so that both here at Queen's Park and in the federal Parliament, treasurers say they have consulted widely before they prepare a budget. There is a great deal of fanfare about the number of groups that have been to see the treasurers and have had an opportunity to make a presentation to the treasurers, both provincial and federal. I guess the myth is perpetuated that there is a lot of consultation, but we soon see when the budgets are revealed that there may have been a treasurer or members of his staff sitting in the same room, but that does not necessarily mean there was a lot of talking back and forth. There may have been some listening but not necessarily much impact.

All that we do in our parliamentary system around the preparation of a budget has an aura of secrecy about it. It comes back to the idea that one person has the mental ability to prepare something that will resolve the economic problems of a nation or a province. It has always been my contention that that is a completely absurd thought. That is not the way it is practised in reality or something that is appropriate to a modern world or something that serves our parliamentary system well.

To be fair and to put a little balance into the argument, the Treasurer made the argument in here himself that that is the old traditional concept of a government and that a government may fall, in fact, on a budgetary matter. That is true, but surely it cannot be beyond the creativity and imagination of modern parliamentarians to put an influx of openness into that system.

In the last couple of years, for a variety of reasons, we have seen the preparation of papers that purport to bring about more openness in the budgetary process. Unfortunately, a series of events—oddly enough, parallel events in this year's federal budget and the provincial budget—blew away the whole myth of secrecy.

In one instance, Mr. Lalonde inadvertently displayed a budget book that was picked up by a television camera, monitored, enlarged and translated, so that what he thought were secret parts of his budget were known before they were presented to Parliament or to the Canadian people. In the other instance, portions of our Treasurer's provincial budget were found in a garbage bag and then published in the Globe and Mail with a great deal of foofaraw. In both instances there seems to have been an explosion of the myth of secrecy for different reasons in different circumstances.

I want to put on the record again my feeling that there must be ways in which the process of putting together a budget, the process of examining what needs to be in a budget and the process of putting forward solutions, can be done in a different and more open way involving more human beings, more skills, more information, and with dissemination of that information to the public that supposedly will feel the impact of this economic measure.

There is a difficulty in making this argument in this House, even with a Treasurer who has just gone through an experience which, one would think, would tend to make him back off from his very traditional feelings about the preparation of a budget and the power of a Treasurer and the secrecy that is necessary. When we had this discussion last year, at the end the Treasurer got up and in a very few words said I did not know anything about the parliamentary system.

This was despite the fact that I had been on a procedural affairs committee studying parliamentary systems around the world with several of his colleagues and members of the Liberal Party and my own caucus. I am not speaking off the top of my head. Many of us in this chamber have spent a lot of time and effort looking at other systems, finding things we could use here that would not challenge the traditions of a parliament but that would open them up and make them look at the preparation of a budget in the context of the world in which we live.

The parallels between what happened to Mr. Lalonde—and our Treasurer's comments that he must resign—and what happened to our Treasurer in the preparation of his budget here are really quite remarkable.

Frankly, I was rather taken aback by the number of people who, during the controversy, said they really liked the Treasurer but thought he ought to resign. I want to put forward the counter-argument: I do not like the Treasurer, not in personal terms but because of the things he has done in this budget; however I would rather he did not resign, but looked at his process and opened it up and responded to the things the standing committee on procedural affairs has recommended this House give consideration to, as have many other people in the parliaments around the world.

The parallels between the federal Minister of Finance and our Treasurer are really quite remarkable this year, not only around the preparation of a budget and the mishaps that caused both of them to get into hot water, but in the assumptions they made in preparation of a budget. Both of them, though they are purportedly from different political philosophies, seem to have written the same budget in a slightly different vein.

Both have as their main premise for what they are doing in the next year, in economic terms for the country and for the province, a remarkable assumption that one can take an unemployment rate of just under 12 per cent and live with it. I find that quite remarkable. If a treasurer or minister of finance had said, for example, five or six years ago in this country, "There is nothing wrong with having 12 per cent of the population unemployed," that would have been quite a remarkable statement for that person to make.

The fact we have come out of an economic depression which has made the unemployment rate much more severe, has established an attitude so that in places such as Sudbury an unemployment rate of 12 per cent would look pretty good; in my own riding last December and in January this year it would have looked not too bad. It is quite remarkable, then, to see that as a main assumption in the preparation of a budget, both federal and provincial governments have accepted the premise that it is okay to have more than one in 10 unemployed. That I find remarkable.

When they look at some kind of response for what might happen after that, one sees some remarkable assumptions put in place. Both of them have said they want some measure of job creation but that they want it mostly in the private sector. They feel that is the route that will bring about an economic recovery for the country and, in this instance, for the province.

Again, I find that another remarkable assumption, because I do not recall an occasion when the private sector has ever done that. When one speaks to people who are influential in the private sector, one very quickly learns the private sector is pretty straightforward about why it is in business. It is in business to make money, and it says so.

It is not in business to create jobs, although sometimes it does that; it is in business to make a profit. The individuals I respect in the private sector say that in a very open and straightforward manner. They say things such as social services are not the responsibility of the private sector; their contention is that they are the responsibility of government. When they talk about unemployment, they say it is not the responsibility of General Motors or Ford or Chrysler or any other private sector company; they say it is the responsibility of a government.

Yet we now have governments at the federal and provincial levels saying, all of a sudden, "We say all of this is the responsibility of the private sector, and they will take it over." I do not recall anybody in the private sector saying, "Okay, it is our responsibility, and we are going to take that over." So it is quite remarkable that we see parallels between the federal and provincial government in this approach to the private sector.

I want to say a little about unemployment in an unusual way. I sense many members on the government side and others in our society think that somehow the reason a 12 per cent unemployment rate is okay—not nice, but okay—is that they have traditionally thought the unemployed are really unwashed, untrained, unskilled and unenergetic.

They do not want jobs, they do not work, they are not productive, they do not look good, they do not wash themselves, they do not cut their hair, they do not wear clean clothes. If only they would go out and take a shower and get a haircut and wear a clean suit and learn how to read and write and fill out an application form, they would not be members of the unemployed any longer; they would somehow join the ranks of what some people would call the productive society.

9:50 p.m.

I know some of this government's programs, for example, are directed exactly at that target group. The member for Brantford (Mr. Gillies), who has responsibilities in another incarnation, came to my town and talked about a program for a group of people I happen to like and work with a lot, the John Howard Society in Oshawa. It is a group of people, under Bill Fry and his staff, with which we work a lot. It is not that my constituents are more given to criminal prosecution than anybody else, but somehow we have a relationship that works. We help the John Howard Society a lot and they help us a lot. They are very good and energetic people.

The Ontario youth secretariat has a program that deals with literacy and getting people back to work, young people in particular and people who have run afoul of the law. In this instance, the member for Brantford said something like 59 young people had gone through this program, had learned a little about reading and writing and, I suppose, arithmetic; and had learned a little more about how to get a job in the first place with the help of the John Howard Society.

He was quite enthusiastic that something like 59 young people had gone through this program and 36 of them had retained their jobs. That is good. There is no question in my mind that 36 young people in my region of Ontario getting jobs because of a government program is nice. But if one is looking at 12,000 unemployed people, which I am, it may be nice but it is not significant. Part of the problem is that people have to understand who is unemployed these days and what the problem is.

I know members opposite may not like it too much, but I ran across one neat little piece of business. There had been a lot of discussion in this Legislature well before I got here about the Tory patronage scheme in Ontario. On the standing committee on procedural affairs we had some discussions with groups like the Liquor Control Board of Ontario about whether there is patronage left in the LCBO. Of course we were assured there was not; at one time there might have been, but there is not any more. I was impressed with the presentations: one fills out an application form, which goes to Lakeshore, and the most qualified people get jobs. All of that seemed quite normal.

But I ran across a term that was new to me; it is "ministerial referral." Some young people came to my office who said they went to apply for jobs at Whitby Psychiatric Hospital, jobs they had held in previous summers. These young people found that although the hospital wanted to hire them because they had performed that task before and their work had been satisfactory, they could not be hired.

Somebody had sent a memo, saying: "This quota"—it was something like 15 per cent of the jobs this summer—"will be held for ministerial referral." That struck me as interesting, because I had not heard the term before. The member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Laughren) explained some things to me. It was used in the Ministry of Natural Resources last year and, I think, in previous years.

It seems someone has decided that we will not have patronage any more, but we will hold a certain number of jobs in the ministries; we will tell people who run those institutions to hold on to 15 per cent of their jobs and those referrals will come from the minister's office. They say, "Whether you want to hire them or not, whether you like them or not, whether you have someone locally who is more deserving and can do that job better, hold on to those jobs."

That is a concept of sophistication. We do not have patronage in Ontario; we have something called ministerial referral. In essence, it is a pretty good description of the Tory philosophy: call it by another name and it will mean something else.

I want to talk a little about who is unemployed, because I think this is an important topic. I pulled the files of three people who have been to see me recently who are out of work and have been for some time.

One interesting case is that of a man who is 39 years old. He has an honours bachelor of arts degree. He has his grade 13. He has been to Humber College. He had a good job for a number of years. He has a fairly good amount of work experience with several firms up to the position of administrative assistant to the vice-president. He is not a member of the great unwashed. He is somebody who has worked his way up through the system, who has done what society says one ought to do: "Get a good education, work hard, and get some work experience."

He is a victim of the circumstances of our time. He is someone who does not need to be told how to dress, how to fill out an application form or how to write a résumé. He is someone who can do all those things very well and has been doing so for the past two years and still cannot get employment. That speaks to some of the concerns I have heard other members raise, saying: "If only people would look for it, the work is there. If only they would clean up their acts, there would be no trouble getting jobs."

Another case is that of a young man who from time to time has worked for several of the short-term programs in various ministries. In other words, one can do a job and do it well for the Ministry of Health or the Ministry of Revenue, but at the end of a certain time period—three months, six months, six weeks, eight weeks—that job no longer exists. So you fish around and try to find another similar kind of job with another ministry, but it is much the same kind of thing.

This is a young man with a BA, who has taught in schools, has worked for General Motors, has worked for two or three of the ministries. We cannot find anything in his work record that says this person is not ambitious, does not work hard, does not do a good job, has not succeeded at the jobs he has been able to get. But again, he seeks to better himself and cannot. The jobs are not available, not for want of trying but for the very simple and unfortunate reason that jobs are not there.

I want to raise a third case, and I think I will use the name in this instance, because the person has had a newspaper story written about her. It is one that I found particularly typical, I guess, of the problems this government has in coming to grips with unemployment. This is a young woman whose name is Gloria Nitchie. She lives in my riding. She is 29 years old and a single mother of three. She lived on mother's allowance and found it is not exactly a bed of roses.

She is a bit of a fighter, so she decided she would try to go back to Durham College to get some retraining, because the common mythology out there—and of course Durham College, like all our community colleges, is very active in pursuing just this point of view—is that you should teach people skills that are needed in the marketplace, train them well and get them back into the marketplace. As an observer of the workings of Durham College, I think they really attempt to do that up there.

Gloria is one who did all that. I will bet most members on the opposite side would say in rather blunt terms that she got off her duff. She went back to school; she is trying to learn new skills.

Now, there is not a lot of money in going to Durham College. But Gloria saw up on the college bulletin board a number of programs that were advertised under the Ontario youth secretariat as a summer program that is known as students in personnel. There is not a lot of money involved in this, but the frank reality of it all is that students need work experience if at the end of their community college career they intend to move into a particular field. They cannot go in there just out of community colleges, and all community colleges are aware of this and try very hard to make sure that college courses are connected with whatever industry or business the students are being trained for.

Here is one who has done what I will bet members would all say she ought to do: get off mother's allowance, go back to school, do something useful, get a job, get some job training. There is only one problem with Gloria; Gloria is 29 years of age, and the youth secretariat, of course, does not function for anybody over the age of 24.

This is a bit of a bind, and I thought: "Well, this is a little dumb. She obviously is a student; she is obviously going to a community college. The minister spends all that money to put up posters about all of these programs in the community colleges. All it is going to take to straighten this out is for me to write to the minister responsible."

I got a response. It seems that a couple of years ago under the Human Rights Code you could not have done this, because it would have been called age discrimination. When the revisions to the Human Rights Code were put through, amendments were made that provided for affirmative action programs, and they now provide waivers to the Human Rights Code for certain of the ministries.

In this instance that is apparently what happened. The human rights people said they gave a waiver to the youth secretariat so the youth secretariat said they could not handle it. It strikes me as being unreal that in this day and age a government says it cannot handle this kind of problem, that it cannot admit it has a program in place that it advertises and spends money on and that it is so lockjawed it cannot make an exception or, for that matter, several exceptions to the program. The reply from the minister's office offers the chance for Gloria to go around and look elsewhere and offers some things she already knew, I am sure.

What I find particularly disappointing is that the young man who was in Oshawa, the member for Brantford, is the same member who replied to Gloria. While on the one hand he comes to my town and says to the people in my community, "Here is our government doing good things for people in your community, trying to get people back to work," and we are all supposed to applaud for him—and we did and do and will again—on the other hand when he is asked to review the case of an individual who needs some help, his reply is two pages long but in essence means, "Tough luck, too bad, look elsewhere, try somebody else."

10 p.m.

That is what I find particularly aggravating about what the government of Ontario is trying to do these days. Can it not understand in simple human terms, without all the numbers, statistics, analyses, growth projections and all that stuff that surrounds the budget, that the unemployed are not numbers? They are people who require some help.

I am not asking that the government of Ontario design 300,000 individual programs. I am simply saying could they not develop the capacity, the warmth, the humanity to respond to somebody like Gloria Nitchie? Could they not find some way to take the programs and the rules and make them fit the needs of an individual? It appears they cannot and that is a shame.

I want to say a couple of other things about need. All of us who have spoken to this budget talked about the need for things in our ridings, in places we have all been recently when we were back home during the break period. We went through our schools, our hospitals, institutions of different kinds and we saw the paint peeling off the walls. We saw the need at Durham College for expanded facilities to do this kind of retraining program. We saw in our schools that there was a need for capital equipment and repairs. With our municipal people, we saw there was a need to build bridges and fix roads. We know about layoffs. Even teachers are being laid off these days, which is unusual I admit, but it is real and it hurts a teacher just as much as an auto worker. There is absolutely no difference between the two groups that I can see.

We know there are very real needs in every one of our communities. I have not heard anybody here make a pitch for some grandiose project. As I have listened to the replies to the budget, I have heard a constant stream of people saying: "Do not do dumb things. We do not want big programs about this, that and the other thing. We want you to come and fix my school, my hospital."

Is there anybody here who has not been faced lately by someone saying: "My wife was in the hospital across the road from this Legislature. The paint is peeling off the wall. Can they not afford to paint a hospital room any more?" The truth is, they cannot.

Is there anybody here who has not talked to someone in a community college or university and had it put to him fair and square that the government has been squeezing the very lifeblood out of our colleges and universities for a five- or six-year period and there is no more to be squeezed? Is it any wonder the veterinary college at Guelph is having a little trouble with its certification? It should not be to anybody here; we should all understand that by now.

People are not making a plea that we spend tax dollars stupidly. We could all find some pretty stupid projects that have been undertaken by all levels of government. People are saying there are very real needs.

I am looking at municipal budgets now that have been faced with substantial squeezes; things such as libraries. Library boards across Ontario were told they are not going to get any more than five per cent. For some strange reason, they assumed the payments to library boards next year would probably not give them a lot but would give them the five per cent. Now I am told they are going to get nothing. They may get what they got last year, but they will not get any increase. That is a little unreal.

I know people can make all kinds of arguments, such as: Libraries are not essential; they are not top priority with the government any more; we have cut back facilities for blind and deaf students so we have to cut back there; the same meanness should apply to other places. It is reaching the absurd.

I have listened to government members talking about the closing of institutions. Some government members, particularly ministers of the crown, seem to say, "This is a good thing. We have to close down institutions, but do not close mine." There are some who would be unkind and say that is just being selfish for the needs of one's own riding or one's own political gain.

I honestly do not think so. I believe individual members know their constituencies reasonably well. They know what works and what does not work in their community. When some ordinary Conservative member stands up in the Legislature and presents a petition which says, "Do not close this thing; it works; it is needed in my community," the government ought to pay some attention. It should take that as a sign that there are some things wrong with what it calls a restraint program, there are some things that hurt individuals and that the government is not doing the right thing about them. Unfortunately I do not see much of a response.

As I look through the budget that is here, I see, both in print and in what ministers say, a constant movement of costs and of responsibility on to the municipal tax base. As I read the clippings as they come in, I see boards of education taking a lot of flak around Ontario because they must by law raise tax dollars to provide programs this Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson) says they must provide though they cannot afford to do it. The actual tax dollars they get from Ontario are remaining about the same, with the percentage declining substantially. There is a bump at the municipal level.

I see many municipalities trying to respond and, of course, they can. They could shut down the system, there is no question about that. They can and in many cases have shut down, they have laid people off and they have stopped doing things because they have to hold the line on property taxes because the system will not take any more.

We do have those needs. They are identified in every municipal budget I have looked at in the last few years. They can easily be identified by members from all sides of this House in their own ridings. I do not think there is any question that one could, if one wanted, take another look at unemployment, take another look at the needs of people across Ontario and provide a rather different kind of budget than we have here.

I am interested in some of the things that were almost thrown away, not said at the tail end of this budget. One small thing was dropped at the end of it. The Treasurer was making his argument about fiscal responsibility and good credit ratings and all of that. At the end of his budget statement he said, "But we have to cut $300 million in order to bring this budget in line with only a $2.7-billion deficit."

I find it rather remarkable for someone to preach restraint, to say a credit rating is the most important thing in the world and the deficit is under the $3-billion mark—to say at the front end of a budget that it is $2.7 billion—and then at the back end of a budget, "All we have to do to make the thing work, folks, is cut another $300 million from the ministry."

There is no pleasant way to say this. That $300 million is going to come out of the hides of the residents of Ontario, even those who voted Tory. That means the school boards, municipalities and community colleges which at the front end of this budget may get something good and be among the lucky ones getting a little help with Canada-Ontario employment development programs or benefiting a bit from manpower training programs, should know now the $300 million will be coming out of their tails at the end of the system. They may be very grateful and happy when the minister arrives with the cheque to build a new building, but they had better know there is a chunk of money coming out of the system by the end of this process. That, I think, is a pretty tough way for the Treasurer to present what appears on the surface to be not a controversial budget.

A couple of other things struck me in here. He has mused and mused in other quarters that the end is near for property tax credit. Members may recall that this program was introduced some years ago and "this and other programs," he says, "are things which need to be reviewed." I could list some government programs under way now that do not appear to be working particularly well. I could give chapter and verse on a number of things this government is doing which I think the world could live without. There are a lot of things Ontario spends money on which do not appear to me to be necessary and which the Treasurer could chop. It seems to me particularly ironic, at the same time he is loading on to the municipal property tax base more programs and more requirements, that this seems to be one of his prime targets for removal of programs.

It seems fairly clear to me in the latter part of the budget—and one really has to read its fine print to find these things—that the government of Ontario, and in particular the Treasurer, have at least put on the table the threat to extend the wage control program. I do not think there is any question this pretty controversial program, which was brought in to save the nation federally and to save the province provincially last fall, is something whose full impact we have yet to see.

10:10 p.m.

We do not yet know how many people are going to get targeted by this; we do not yet know whether the Anti-Inflation Board will be a particularly effective group of folks or not too effective. I think my guess would be that it will not be effective, that at the end of this wage control period it will propose a motion to extend. Of course, in the second year, when we see this legislation introduced, one of the much-needed things we could do is bring in a garbage truck to handle the members' waste paper and to take the extraneous members out of the chamber.

I think there is very little question that there are needs that could be identified in each of our communities, and that if one looks at the small print in this budget, there are things yet to come. On the surface of it, people will look now and see that the price of a pack of cigarettes has gone up and the price of booze has gone up. Most people in Ontario will look at that and say, "So what; they always do that to me." Then they look at an Ontario health insurance plan premium and say, "So what; these guys are always jamming that one at me." Then they look at a surtax on income for a social services program, and say, "It is new, but they are just sticking it to me in a slightly different way."

I think they ought to be more interested, though, in the very concepts that are put in the back end of this budget: that somewhere, $300 million is going to come out of it; somewhere, programs are going to get pulled at the last moment to make the books balance; somewhere, without question, there will be an extension of wage controls in the public sector. That, I think, is a rather unusual way, to put it politely, to prepare Ontario for economic recovery.

I want to say something about the response of the budget to unemployment, because again, like the proposals from the youth secretariat, young people are recognized as being a major problem of unemployment. There is a response, and I suppose now the Treasurer and all the members opposite will go around Ontario saying: "Yes, we did something for youth. We did something for the municipalities. We extended this Canada-Ontario employment development program, we are going to build some new things, we are going to do some manpower training."

That is true. There is just enough of that kind of programming in this budget for the members opposite to go around Ontario, or stand in the Legislature and say, "Well, we have a program for youth." Never mind, like the case I outlined before, this deals with 36 people out of 12,000 unemployed. Never mind whether or not it works, we have a program.

I think in large measure the responses to unemployment that are contained in this budget are just simply that: they are meant to be a political response. They are designed so that ministers of the crown and others can say, "We responded." From their point of view it does not matter whether or not they work, it does not matter whether they do anything to relieve unemployment. It really does not matter either whether they do anything to turn the economy around. What matters is that there is a program, a brochure, a pamphlet, a poster, something that justifies saying, "We did something, never mind what." That, I think, is tragic because that is rather typical of what the government of Ontario has tried to do for a number of years.

There is one other thing that disturbs me immensely about what this government has done to the budgetary process and to the taxation process in the course of several budgets—not all at once, but over half a dozen of our budgets. It has found a group of folks it wants to tax, people with lunch buckets under their arms, people who work in offices and factories and businesses, people who get a regular weekly paycheck. It wants them and it is going to zap them in as many ways as it can.

Of course we have theoretical arguments about what is a fair tax and what is not a fair tax. I must admit, the opposite side has taken a rather unique view of how to tax people. The first rule of their process is: do not call it a tax, find another name; call it a surtax, maybe. There is one of those in the 1983 budget. It is new and different, and people will take a little while to figure out what that is. Call it a premium; it does not matter whether it has anything to do with health care or not. Call it another name and collect it.

Their favourite one, which they use extensively now, is one that has nothing to do with them from the public's point of view. That is to say, with all those little manipulations that happened at the gas pump—where some guy in a Gulf jacket comes out, pumps gas in your car and collects a whole lot of tax money for Ontario—it is tough for the average motorist to figure out that the Treasurer of Ontario is grabbing his tax dollar when a guy in a Gulf jacket is pumping gas in his car. It is tough to make that point. One does not see the Treasurer of Ontario out there grabbing pennies off you, but he is.

It is tough when one goes into a smokeshop now to see that the reason a pack of smokes costs $2 is that governments, federally and provincially, decided this was a major source of revenue and they ought to grab as much as they can. We should not get too hypocritical about this; these are not taxation measures designed to convince the population to quit smoking for health reasons. These are taxation measures to grab a lot of money out of the little folk; it is as simple as that.

The same goes for the price of booze, which this government has turned into a major taxation source. The fact that it nationalized the sale of booze in retail stores some time ago and purports to be a free enterprise party, is another matter we will deal with on another day. What I want to deal with tonight is that it is a major source of revenue. Every month the government raises the price, and in every budget it raises the tax structure. It has now become a government which is really dependent upon the sale of booze and the fact that people will continue to smoke.

In later years the government of Ontario has moved hot and heavy into the numbers racket. It is impressive when one looks in this budget as to how dependent this government has become on the numbers racket in Ontario. If people stopped betting on the ponies, if people stopped buying numbers racket tickets in their various forms, this government would be in financial difficulty. Yet those are not called taxation measures.

They do recognize the impact on the budget in the budgetary paper, but one does not see the Treasurer of Ontario standing in his place saying, "One of my favourite taxes, Lottario, is generating a lot more money for me this year." There is a bit of a distance there.

When one goes to buy a Lottario ticket, it is true it has something to do with Ontario but it is not an agent of the Treasury who is standing there, or an agent of the Ministry of Revenue; it is your local corner guy. He probably has a licence that says he can collect this, pay this tax, get a refund and do all those things, but he is the person who is selling you all of these matters.

Of course, the retail sales tax is on exactly the same model. It is somebody else, other than the government, who is collecting that tax money.

Most of us are people like me who once a year sit down and figure out their income tax. When they get $70 back they somehow feel they have beaten the system. It is rather ironic. Very few members in this chamber, especially on this side of the House, have consultants, lawyers and all that stuff who, three or four times a year, advise us how to do this or that, how to get into this tax shelter and wind up like E. P. Taylor paying no income tax at all.

Most of us are ordinary Joes. The federal and provincial governments get the money out of my paycheque before I get it. I have nothing to say about it. I do not miss the money because I never had it, and once a year I sit down to figure out why I should get $40 back and I feel good.

There is something strange about that psychology. It is rather typically Canadian, but it is true that that is the taxation target; that is the group of people the government wants to get. It wants to get them in as many ways as it can. It wants to nickel and dime them five or six times a day. For most of the members here—Mr. Speaker, stop and think that you are no different from the population at large out there—how many times, and in how many different ways did the members put money into the tax coffers of Ontario today?

It would be unusual if it was not half a dozen times a day that the members got nailed. It would be unusual if they could identify once, during the course of a day, when the Ministry of Revenue and the Treasurer of Ontario extracted money from them during that time period. But they did, and they do that consistently and across the board.

I want to say a couple of things around other matters. I think that as well as the process and measures which were described in the budget, what saddens me somewhat is that there is a potential in this province to do things. Again, as with other measures I have described, this government seems to sense what they are.

It senses that one of our greatest weaknesses is we do no research and development in Ontario at all; nada, not a thing. We know it is one of the greatest weaknesses in our industrial sector. We even know what the weaknesses are. We know that in the automotive industry. We do not do any of that stuff here. Still, after all the years of debate, we test in Kapuskasing whether cars will start in cold weather and that is it.

We have a nucleus of an automotive technical development centre in St. Catharines. What has it done? What is its connection with the private sector? Where is the great plan that will use that tech centre to develop our auto industry? It ain't there.

Mr. Wildman: The Minister of Industry and Trade (Mr. Walker) says we will get it all from the United States.

10:20 p.m.

Mr. Breaugh: One of the most dramatic examples is that in Peterborough they have a robotics centre. So far they have gone to a convention in the United States to sell their product, which they imported from Japan.

There is no connection between the high-tech centres and our industrial development. There is no plan. Somehow we feel that, unlike the Japanese, the Germans and everybody else in this world, we do not need a plan; we will somehow stumble on to success. That is not going to happen; it never will. Until the connections are made between the industrial sector, the public sector and the high-tech centres and we get ourselves together, develop a plan, make the everyday connections between the tech centres and our industrial life, nothing is going to happen.

We will have some trade shows. We will visit Chicago. We will tour the world. We will publish brochures. While we are doing this, the Japanese are going to snow us under with their technology. There is no question in my mind that one of the saddest things in this budget is that a political mention is made of the high-tech centres and absolutely no consideration is given to their utilization. There is no connection between the auto industry in Oshawa run by General Motors and the automotive tech centre; none. We can find a public relations connection if we look hard enough, but that is the extent of it. The day-to-day work in the plant does not change because the government of Ontario set up an automotive tech centre somewhere in the province.

What is tragic about that is the lost potential. There is a chance there, just a chance, that we might take the technology we can develop and do what other countries in the world have done. We should not forget that what happened in Japan was pretty simple; they took technology that came out of the United States. The American auto producer said: "Technology? What the hell are we going to do with technology? We don't need that. We produce cars over here." People who had bright ideas took their thoughts, their designs and their mechanics to another country that put its act together and planned its economy. Now they are back here challenging.

If one went to General Motors, Ford or Chrysler 10 years ago and asked them, "What do you think about the offshore imports?" the answer was the same: "What the hell, they will get nine per cent or 10 per cent of the market. That is it. That leaves us with only 90 per cent of the market. Are we worried? The Volkswagen Beetle is a passing fad. Who is going to buy a funny little Japanese car anyway? That is not what North Americans want." It was not until imports got up to around 20 or 25 per cent of the market in North America that the companies began even to think there might be a problem and the North American auto industry actually might have to do something.

One of the tragedies in this budget is that it says where the tech centres are but it does not indicate the connection between tech centres and our industrial life. It will not indicate where we are going or how we are going to get there. It suggests we should hope that somehow these tech centres will infiltrate into our industrial life and that somehow we will come back in good form. I do not think that is going to happen.

Mr. Wildman: The Minister of Industry and Trade is going to line them all up with the Pentagon.

Mr. Breaugh: Quite possibly.

One of the things that bothers me a bit is that in this budget, and again in Mr. Lalonde's budget, there is some talk of a recovery. There is the usual garbage about having turned the corner and there being light at the end of the tunnel and all that kind of stuff. What recovery? Where?

The member for St. Catharines (Mr. Bradley) said that in his town, and in mine supposedly, the recovery is under way. For some folks, yes. There are some people at General Motors who have now been recalled on a second shift in the truck plant and in other plants. But I want to put it on the line. Even in the auto plant that is back to work, somewhere in the shuffle we lost 2,000 jobs, and it is not through yet. Some of us are back to work, but not all of us. Those who never had a job in the auto plant are still as badly off as they were before GM recalled the second shift.

To say my community is better now is only, to be truthful, to say marginally better. If one talks to the people who have just been called back, who have been back to work now five or six weeks, and asks them, "Do you think this thing has recovered? Have we turned around?" they say: "Hell, no. I am back to work now; we are doing a little bit of overtime. But I remember in the fall before the big layoff, we were doing overtime. I remember we were doing double shifts in our truck plant in the fall, and when the yard was full of little trucks, what happened? They shut the plant down. That is what happened." They remember it was not that long ago it happened to them, and they are not sure at all the job they have right now is going to be there six months from now. They are not sure what kind of cars are going to be made in Oshawa in the next 12 months.

We have heard two or three versions of that so far. We do know that people who have a lot of seniority in our plants have lost their jobs. That is not because they did something wrong, but because the jobs are not there any more. There is just no hope. So to talk about recovery is nice and polite, but it is irrelevant; it is not there. To say one can find little indicators in the economic analysis from some writer here or some statistic there, saying we have turned the corner, is premature, to be polite about it.

I want to say a little bit too about productivity because I have heard other members talk about that. I think there are some pretty silly words around, and that is one of them. When one speaks about comparing our auto industry with the Japanese, people say Japanese workers work for less money. The fact is they do not; the wage rates are comparative. Then the value of the yen drops a bit and that hurts.

When one asks how come Japanese organized labour works so well with management, the fact is there are a lot of people in Japan who make cars who are not organized. They have two levels going there. It is true there are some organized workers, but there are a whole lot of unorganized workers too, and there are a lot of considerations about productivity and management which are reasonably sensible propositions.

I like to quote Don Hackworth, the president of General Motors, who said in at least one speech that the number one problem in the Canadian auto industry and in the North American auto industry is not the worker; the number one problem is management. I believe that. I believe we have not changed our management techniques in North America in virtually any of our industrial sectors since the turn of the century. If you cannot run the machines the same way you ran them at the turn of the century, you sure cannot run the work force in the same way.

The lessons have got to be learned, whether people like them or not. Whether it affects the status of the foreman in the plant or the management people who walk through the plant, it is pretty clear to me that if they do not learn some lessons on how to deal with human beings, we are not getting any better, we are getting worse. It was bad enough when the rest of the world was kind of ignorant of this as well, but now there are nations in the world who understand that the relationship between management and worker is an important one. This is not the 17th century; these are not a bunch of coolies the government is dealing with out there. It has to learn to listen and to talk and to lead and to co-operate.

I want to say one or two words on that because I listened to Marc Lalonde at the end of his budget where he went strictly to the private sector and said, "To heck with what organized labour, or unorganized labour for that matter, thinks is a priority. Here is mine: the private sector." Then in Ontario the Treasurer said, "Here is mine: small business."

At the end of all this garbage where they picked one sector of the economy and say, "That is where we are going, that is where our incentives are," then they turn around to all the other sectors in the economy and say: "Now we want all of you kids to get on-side with this. We know we rejected what you had to say when you consulted with the Treasurer previously, we know we did not pay any attention to your needs or your wants or something that would do good for you. We know we went to another group in our society—the private sector—and said, 'Here you are, boys, here are all the goodies.'"

After the government has given to one part of our economy all the goodies, then it turns around to all the other parts and says, "Now we want some co-operation." That is dead wrong. If people want to talk about productivity, if they want to talk about co-operation, if they want to talk about changing techniques that involve a good deal of consultation from all sectors, then the government had better design budgets which do that as well. It had better design budgets that are balanced between the private sector and the public sector. It had better design incentives that are fairly distributed across that spectrum and that reflect the things it heard from those people as well.

If the government is not prepared to do that in the development of its economic plan and the development of its budget, then it should stop being so hypocritical as to turn around at the end of all this and say, "Now we want everybody to co-operate." If they want everybody to co-operate, they should start listening to everybody.

I want to conclude on two small points. One is, I have heard some people talk about the private sector and free enterprise. I do not know where they live, but it cannot be Canada. We began as a crown corporation. The history of this country has that mix, integral. How ironic it is that the Conservative Party under Sir John A. Macdonald began one of the largest socialist ventures in the country—building a railway line. How ironic that in the Parliament of Canada this morning we are still arguing about the Crow rates, whether the damned railway works or does not work, or charges too much money or does not, and who will get the subsidy and who will not.

There is not a free private enterpriser left in North America. I wish we would all admit that. The only difference is that the little guy that I represent wants a buck and a half this week in terms of an allowance. The guys at the other end of the block in their three-piece suits want a $2-billion exemption for this, that or the other thing, or to set up a trade barrier, or to pay somebody not to produce some goods, or to subsidize this plant or guarantee this loan.

None of us believes in that kind of stuff any more. Members across the way do not, those who run the liquor stores and the hydro and the roads and the sewer systems and Suncor and transportation systems. It is not a free enterprise party, so why do they not admit it? Why do they not say—and would it not be a useful exercise for all of us to say—that our needs in Canada have nothing to do with the philosophies of another century?

Why do we not come together? Why do we not try to do some things that do not reflect words that are too simplistic; things that recognize how tough it is, how much need there is for a change in the way we put together a budget, for a change in the way we review a budget, for a change in the way we deal with our economy. I believe that was the chance the Treasurer had and on which he passed.

On motion by Mr. Elston, the debate was adjourned.

INDIAN BAND AGREEMENT

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to standing order 28(b), the member for Algoma (Mr. Wildman) has given notice of his dissatisfaction with the answer to his question given by the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development (Mr. Henderson) concerning the changes in the draft agreement between the provincial government and the Islington band.

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Speaker, I note with regret, but not a great deal of surprise, that the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development has not come into the House to listen to this debate or to participate and respond. This is really not too surprising. Apparently the government takes this attitude towards all the questions raised in this manner in this House.

I think it is also indicative of the attitude of the provincial government, which has not seriously tried to finalize the negotiations with the Islington band over compensation for damages and loss of livelihood or new economic development since this process began. The government has been dragging its feet for four years through the negotiations, and it is now more than 13 years since the discovery of mercury pollution in that area.

Today in the House, the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development referred to the statements he made on Tuesday that the changes in the draft agreement with the band "improved the clarity and accuracy of the agreement, but have not altered the major thrust of the agreement."

When faced with the fact that article 2 of the February draft provided for the transfer of the ownership of the land and the buildings for the greenhouse, a $1-million asset, while that article in the new agreement provided only for a 10-year lease of the land and for ownership of the building to revert to Ontario if the agreement with the Ministry of Natural Resources for seedlings was not renewed, the secretary for some reason quoted a paragraph he claimed was part of article 2 on page 4 of the draft agreement. He said this confirmed that all along only a lease was contemplated. He claimed the changes in the new draft were only clarifications.

I have searched through both copies of the draft—the February draft and the draft the minister referred to on Tuesday—and the paragraph he quoted in the House today is not included in either draft. When the secretary quoted another paragraph, which he said was on pages 9 and 10 of the draft agreement regarding the rice harvesting agreement, I again searched through both drafts and it is not included either.

I do not know what the minister was reading. Either he was reading part of the covering letter he sent to Chief Mandamin or, more likely, a ministry briefing note that was written for him by some member of his staff to try to explain to him what this was all about.

Mr. Boudria: Unsuccessfully.

Mr. Wildman: I am afraid unsuccessfully. At any rate, what he read was not part of either draft of the agreement. I think it was very inappropriate for the minister to get up and try to give the impression that he was reading from the draft agreement when it is not included in either draft.

No matter how much the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development tries to confuse the issue, the fact remains the provincial government has significantly downgraded the settlement offer that was made to the Islington band at Whitedog. The new offer is not worth nearly as much as the first one and is at least $1 million less in value than the original draft that was signed by Chief Mandamin in March.

This government has failed to meet the challenge to bring the negotiations to a successful conclusion which was presented to it by the Islington band in March when it signed the February draft agreement and sent it to the Premier (Mr. Davis) for his signature. Instead, the government, led by the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development and the Minister of Northern Affairs, the member for Kenora (Mr. Bernier), decided to renegotiate the February agreement not with the Islington band but with a citizens committee from Kenora and Ear Falls—some might say the Kenora riding association of the Progressive Conservative Party.

That group is apparently diametrically opposed to the recognition of the band's aboriginal claims and its rights to compensation for the mercury pollution. As a result of these negotiations with this so-called citizens group, the government rewrote the agreement and came up with a new draft which was presented on Tuesday by the minister. That draft has changed substantively; it is not just clarification of words. It is a substantive change in the agreement proposed. In doing this, the provincial government is forcing the band to seek an adequate settlement through the courts because it is impossible for it to reach an adequate settlement through out-of-court negotiation.

The Provincial Secretary for Resources Development is either not being truthful with the House when he claims the changes incorporated in the new draft are only for clarification, or he is so obtuse that he does not understand the significance of the articles he was referring to.

The House adjourned at 10:37 p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

Friday, May 20, 1983

The House met at 10 a.m.

Prayers.

SPRING FAIR

Mr. Rae: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order: As I am sure the members will know, our party is sponsoring a spring fair on Sunday, May 22, at Harbourfront at the foot of Bathurst Street. It will start at 8:30 a.m. with a pancake breakfast and will go until 11 in the evening. There will be music, dancing, soccer and food.

On behalf of the New Democratic Party and all of our members, I extend an invitation to you, sir. In the absence of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Peterson), I will ask the page to give an invitation to the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk (Mr. Nixon). In the absence of the Premier (Mr. Davis), I wonder if the page can take this invitation to the Minister of Industry and Trade (Mr. Walker) and simply say to him that, although there will not be a shooting gallery there, he is more than welcome to come.

Hon. Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, if I may reply to the point of order, I want you to know that I will be visiting the Litton Systems exhibit at the spring fair that the NDP are having.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the honourable member for his thoughtfulness. However, I am not sure this falls within the ambit of being completely nonpolitical, nonpartisan or whatever, and I seek your guidance.

NHL FRANCHISE FOR SASKATOON

Mr. Wrye: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege: Earlier this week my friend the member for Oshawa (Mr. Breagh), very proudly wearing the sweater of the Oshawa Generals, came before this House, and all members from all sides of this House paid tribute to the Oshawa Generals for their role in the Memorial Cup.

As a member of the Legislature, I am of course very proud of the community I serve, the city of Windsor; but I am also very proud of my birthplace, and that is the great province of Saskatchewan. I am sure all members will be shocked and dismayed, as members of this Legislature representing Ontario, at the actions this week of Harold Ballard and the board of governors of the National Hockey League in rejecting the fine application of that great province for membership in the NHL.

In Windsor, when we want to see NHL hockey, many of us take the opportunity to go across the river to Joe Louis Arena. When teams from Edmonton, Toronto, Montreal and the other Canadian cities in the NHL come to Joe Louis Arena, it is a very special occasion for many of us who had our birthplace outside of Windsor and, indeed, outside of Ontario. I am sure the Saskatoon franchise would have enjoyed that same kind of extra dimension when they came to Joe Louis Arena.

We have many hockey players, some of whom play for the Toronto Maple Leafs, who were born in Saskatchewan. Many of us, including myself, believe the greatest player of them all was a gentleman from Floral, Saskatchewan, Gordie Howe. That spirit would have made the franchise for Saskatoon a great one. It would have added a new dimension, I believe, of Canadian unity.

I hope all members on all sides of this House will join me in suggesting to Mr. Ballard and the other members of the board of governors that they reconsider their very ill-timed decision and grant Saskatoon the franchise that they deserve and that, I am sure, they will live up to.

ATTENDANCE IN HOUSE

Mr. Riddell: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: Looking across the House I see that a number of ministers are not here, and it is indicated they will not be here. They include the Premier (Mr. Davis), the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Norton), the Minister of Northern Affairs (Mr. Bernier), the member for Middlesex (Mr. Eaton), who is a Minister without Portfolio, the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development (Mr. Henderson), the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Pope), the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow), the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) and the Minister of Education and Colleges and Universities (Miss Stephenson). I do not see—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Riddell: Does that not substantiate the need for reform around here?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Where is the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Peterson)? Where are all the rest of your guys?

Mr. Riddell: Let us sit Monday to Thursday and do away with these crazy Friday sittings.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Riddell: This is absolutely ridiculous. Let us have a bit of reform.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: I might point out to all the honourable members that if there are any changes they will come from the assembly.

[Later]

Mr. Newman: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege: Yesterday the Minister of Health (Mr. Grossman) was in the city of Windsor and he took the time to announce to the public that none of the Windsor members was present at that meeting. I would like to mention to the members of the House and to the public in Ontario that the Minister of Health is absent from the Legislature at this moment.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure all members will take note.

[Later]

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, on another point of order: I was quite concerned with something, particularly since you may recall the discussion yesterday on private member's legislation from the member for Essex North (Mr. Ruston) having to do with the attendance in the House. You can imagine how disconcerted he and his colleagues were when the Minister of Health attending a public function in the member's constituency brought to public attention the fact that the elected members for the area were not at the meeting back home.

I would suggest the fact the member for Essex North raised this as a point of privilege merits some concern in the House. I do not know what else he can do except slap a writ on the guy or something like that, because it really would be infuriating where a minister of the crown goes down there in some blooming limousine, goes to a meeting in the member's own area and criticizes the fact the member is not there, when the member is back here in the House doing his duty, which I submit is the principal duty for all of us as elected members, including the members of the administration.

Mr. Speaker: Your point is well taken. I try to be as lenient as I can in dealing with alleged points of order and points of privilege. However, I think in order to preserve some order and the decorum of the House, rulings have to be made, perhaps not in strict compliance, but in compliance with the standing orders. Having said that, I think you made your point extremely well on behalf of your colleague.

The minister did address himself to the problem and offered the explanation that he made the remarks somewhat facetiously, tongue in cheek and so on. Having said that, I presume the matter is dealt with.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Speaker, if I could talk to that, I would like to point out to the House that the minister isn't in his seat right now—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Will the member please resume his seat.

I just point out that is an example of what I am trying to deal with. That matter was raised earlier. You made your point, and I allowed you to make your point.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

McMICHAEL CANADIAN COLLECTION

Hon. Mr. McCaffrey: Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to announce this morning to the House that the McMichael Canadian Collection will reopen on Monday, May 23, as promised by me before a committee some months ago. I would like to take this opportunity to invite all members of the assembly to attend this event. In addition to special festivities at the gallery and in the town of Kleinburg there will be a parade featuring antique cars, free concerts, marching bands and plenty of entertainment for the children. All in all, it will be a Victoria Day picnic.

This is going to be a festive reopening for a world-class art gallery that is one of Ontario's major tourist attractions. The McMichael Canadian Collection is unique in North America. With a design that complements its setting in the beautiful Ontario countryside, it is a jewel among this province's cultural institutions. Equally important, it is one of the finest collections of the work of the Group of Seven and represents a vital period in Canadian art when a definite Canadian consciousness began to appear.

We would not have this fine collection of Canadian art had it not been for the generosity and vision of Robert and Signe McMichael. In short, Bob McMichael had a dream and he has realized it. The collection now can be seen and enjoyed to its best advantage thanks to the foresight of the trustees in undertaking the needed renovations. In this regard, I wish to extend a special word of appreciation to Mr. J.

Allyn Taylor for his outstanding service as chairman of the board as well as to all other members of that board. I would also like to compliment the staff at the McMichael gallery for their hard work.

The trustees and the staff of the Ministry of Citizenship and Culture have expended a great deal of effort in making the building safe for both the public and the collection. The gallery is now up to world-class standards. The environment for the art works has been vastly improved. The humidity control and the air conditioning will greatly reduce the potential deterioration of the collection and will extend its life for many decades.

All the renovations have been in keeping with the original architectural design. The character and charm of the gallery that attracted so many people not only has been maintained but also has been enhanced. The real success of the renovations lies in the fact that despite all the changes, repairs and functional additions, the integrity of the original building remains.

10:10 a.m.

I might point out one major improvement that has been made. The whole building is now fully accessible to persons in wheelchairs by means of a series of specially designed ramps.

When the gallery closed, I, along with other members of this assembly, was concerned about the economic impact of that closing on local merchants, for we knew what a major role the gallery had played in the economy of Kleinburg and the surrounding area of Vaughan township.

For this reason, my ministry condensed the rebuilding period. While this increased the cost to the government, it meant that in the long run less revenue would be lost to that community.

The residents and merchants throughout this period were extremely well served in this regard by their representative, the member for York North (Mr. Hodgson), who worked very hard and continues to do so to assist in that area.

I am pleased to announce the gallery's reopening in time for the summer tourist season. The McMichael Canadian Collection will continue to contribute greatly to the local economy.

In closing, I hope the honourable members and others will join with me on Victoria Day in celebrating this event.

Mr. Ruston: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege: I have been advised that the Minister of Health (Mr. Grossman) was in Windsor yesterday and last night, and apparently he was very critical that the three or four members who represent that area were not at the function he was attending. I want to assure you, Mr. Speaker, and the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Ruston: —that we look after the area, but when there's business to be done in this House—

Mr. Speaker: Will the honourable member please resume his seat?

An hon. member: He's correcting the record.

Mr. Speaker: There is no record to correct.

Mr. Martel: Talk about sleaziness; Larry, you're getting better every day.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Be careful or I'll go to your riding.

Mr. Martel: Well, why don't you come?

Mr. McClellan: Just stay out of Bellwoods.

Mr. Martel: He's teaching you how to be sleazier.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He's teaching you how to be a good member.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

FORT HENRY GUARD

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, the Ministry of Tourism and Recreation has achieved remarkable success in promoting the tourism industry with the "Ontario—Yours to discover" marketing campaign.

But strong marketing of the province as a travel destination is only part of the package my ministry deems of essential importance to maintaining the success of this industry. Our product must be continually upgraded if we are to attract more foreign visitors and encourage our own residents to spend more in the province, rather than travelling elsewhere.

Therefore, we have made available a wide range of financial assistance programs; in fact, provincial investment in this key sector of our economy totalled $44.7 million in 1982-83.

Today I am happy to announce a grant of $335,300 to expand the guard at Old Fort Henry from 111 men to 141 men over the next two years. This grant is being provided under the federal-provincial eastern Ontario subsidiary agreement.

The increasing popularity of the Fort Henry guard as a travelling drill unit both in Canada and abroad has made expansion of the guard a priority. The EOSA grant will assist in the creation—

Mr. Martel: Did General Walker influence you?

Mr. Rae: Is Walker in charge of this brigade?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Never mind the interjections, please.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: This is tourism.

The EOSA grant will assist in the creation of another guard unit, which would be available for travelling engagements and for additional military displays at the fort, including a third Ceremonial Retreat night. Marketing studies of the Kingston area show that surrounding tourist industries benefit markedly on the evenings of the retreat.

In addition, the travelling unit is expected to have a similar positive economic impact by drawing attention to the unique attributes of eastern Ontario as a travel destination.

This grant is but one example of the positive role the government of Ontario has assumed to stimulate the tourism industry.

PREAKNESS STAKES

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, just before the question period, I think in the very fine tradition of the House and perhaps because there is a bit of superstition among horse players—after all, a couple of weeks ago we did wish the—

Mr. Ruston: Here they go, around the bend. What have you got bet on him?

Mr. McClellan: We don't have the covering statement. The standing order requires it.

Hon. Mr. Drea: It really dazzles me that people on the other side of the House will turn their noses down at an industry that employs 40,000 people. They keep walking into it time after time.

Two weeks ago this Legislature—

Mr. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order: We do not have a copy of this ministerial statement as required by the standing orders.

Mr. Speaker: Obviously, the minister has risen on a point of privilege.

Mr. R. J. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, if he does not have a ministerial statement, he could at least share the Racing Form with us.

Hon. Mr. Drea: To reply to the last one, for many years it has been well known that my best friend is the Racing Form, and I am very particular about who I share my best friend with.

On a serious note, two weeks ago I rose in my place to draw attention to a very fine representative of Ontario in a world-class event, one that was relatively unknown. Two weeks later, Sunny's Halo is not only the toast of Canada and of Ontario but also one of the toasts of the United States.

In the light of some of the things that were said earlier about what happened to Saskatoon when it was unfortunately denied the right to be in world-class competition, perhaps people in the United States will take another look at what can be accomplished north of the border.

The people of Ontario are very proud of this horse, and I am sure the representatives of the people of Ontario will want to extend to Mr. Foster, the owner, to Mr. Cross, the trainer, and to Mr. Delahoussaye, the rider, all the best in tomorrow's Preakness. Those three people, particularly the two Canadians, Mr. Foster and Mr. Cross, have been first-class representatives of this province. They have brought distinction to this province, along with their horse, Sunny's Halo.

As always, nothing comes easy for a Canadian. He has to come out of the 11 hole tomorrow, which is relatively difficult. One will not get much money at the end of one and three sixteenths miles but, if one has some mortgage money, I would put the mortgage on him because we are going to see the red and white stripes flashing well past the 16th pole and bringing more distinction to an industry in this province that has worked in co-operation with the government, with the public and with a self-help program to establish itself as one of the world leaders.

Mr. Ruston: Mr. Speaker, as to your decision that mine was not a point of privilege, it was certainly more a point of privilege than that was.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

ORAL QUESTIONS

Mr. Conway: Mr. Speaker, one hardly knows where to begin.

Mr. Kolyin: Take your choice.

GASOLINE PRICES

Mr. Conway: I will take my choice, such as it is on this Friday morning. I have a question for my friend the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations.

Mindful of the just-read injunctions of our friends the Minister of Citizenship and Culture (Mr. McCaffrey) and the Minister of Tourism and Recreation (Mr. Baetz) to discover Ontario, whether it be in Kleinburg, Kingston or many points in between, does the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations not share with me and millions of others in Ontario a sense of indignation and outrage that, on this first long weekend of the spring-summer season, the retail price of gasoline in the province has doubled in many communities? My colleague the member for Haldimand-Norfolk (Mr. G. I. Miller) tells me that in part of his constituency the retail price has gone from something in the order of 16 cents a litre to 47 cents a litre.

10:20 a.m.

We have heard the minister's comments in connection with this subject on a number of earlier occasions. But given the fact that literally hundreds of thousands of Ontarians are momentarily about to take their automobiles to discover Ontario, is the minister satisfied that the consumers of gasoline in Ontario are not being gouged on this long weekend and that what we are seeing here is not the vagaries of the marketplace but something much more negative and something much more directed at extracting from the consumers as much as those oil companies can on weekends when they know the demand for their product is going to be very high?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, I think the member for Renfrew North and I share an understanding that neither of us is a fortune teller or can see into the future—although both of us happen to believe in the tooth fairy; I agree on that.

Let me also say that I cannot predict what will happen this weekend in the marketplace, but I can say that the Conference Board of Canada, an agency the honourable member's party speaks very highly of, stated as recently as yesterday or the day before that we have now seen a stabilization in gasoline prices and predicted that they may well go down. I know he accepts whatever the Conference Board says, because he has said so many times during a recent election.

But that is not to say there are not great variations in gasoline prices throughout the province. We all understand that. As he has said, there are often good marketplace reasons for that. We also know there has been some concern expressed by many people about the overall marketing practices in the petroleum industry, and that is currently the subject of an inquiry being carried out by the federal government. That is clearly the place it has to be looked at.

Mr. Martel: How long are you going to hang on to that one?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: The member does not like to hear the truth, does he?

Mr. Martel: How long are you going to use that flimsy excuse?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Conway: Would the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations not agree that the millions of Ontarians about to consume gasoline in this province this weekend are more than a little bit justified at the suspicion they harbour about why retail prices are so exceptionally high on this weekend relative to just a few days ago?

Is the minister satisfied that there is not gouging taking place on this weekend, as his fellow Ontarians wish to discover Ontario? Will he give an undertaking to investigate the circumstances in this province this very week to ensure that what we are seeing is the dynamics of the marketplace and not the kind of gouging that many of us feel is taking place?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I have no reason to believe that we are going to be seeing gouging; that does not mean there will not be. Certainly if there is any business practice that takes place in the community which needs to be looked at, we are always prepared to consider it.

Mr. Rae: Mr. Speaker, in the circumstances the minister talked rather fatuously about the prices coming down. I think the minister should know the facts.

We have done a survey of gas stations across the province over the past couple of days. It shows that in Windsor, St. Thomas, Toronto, Kingston, Thunder Bay, Hamilton, Elliot Lake, Kitchener, Waterloo, Ottawa, Cornwall, Lindsay, Peterborough and Sault Ste. Marie the price increases have been as high as 50 per cent and that right now the prices are ranging somewhere between 46 and 50 cents a litre, whereas recently they had been as low as 25 or 30 cents a litre or even 20 or 22 cents.

As the minister responsible for protecting the consumers of this province with respect to prices, does he not think he has an obligation to defend consumers with respect to retail prices in this province? He cannot fob it off on the federal government. He cannot fob it off on the Liberals. He has an obligation to the consumers of Ontario to see that they are not being taken advantage of on this long weekend.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that it is nice to speak with different tongues on different occasions, and I know the honourable member would like us to duplicate all the efforts that are being carried out in the national interest. But we do not propose to do that sort of thing. We believe the royal commission that is being carried on at present with respect to oil pricing and marketing is addressing the issues that he is concerned about and that we are concerned about. We have written to the minister to tell him of our concerns.

Mr. Rae: A whole letter? What happened?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Conway: From a government that was happy to spend millions analysing media violence, which was a federal responsibility, it is hard to accept that it is always anxious to restrict itself to its own local jurisdiction.

That having been said, might I ask my friend the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations to share with this House the specifics of his letter to the federal government? When did he write the minister? What did he indicate was the measure of his concern? In his letter did he specifically indicate that the Yo-Yo syndrome is having a deleterious impact on much of the small business sector in this province that is involved in pumping gasoline?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: The Yo-Yo syndrome? That is not a medical term I understand. Is that a Renfrew North term? I have heard of the suck and blow syndrome. Is this a new one?

I indicated to the minister that we had some concerns about pricing practices and about wide variations in prices and that it was our sincere wish that those matters be addressed by the royal commission as it proceeded with its hearings.

Mr. Speaker: New question; the member for Renfrew North.

Mr. Conway: Needless to say, we would like to see a much more active role by the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations, whom we expect to perform more vigorously in this connection.

Mr. Speaker: Question, please.

PARAMEDIC PROGRAM

Mr. Conway: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Health. We are mindful that it was more than a year ago that the government of Ontario announced in a speech from the throne that Ontario "will be developing special advanced training programs for ambulance personnel and begin the establishment of a province-wide program of utilization of these services."

That was more than a year ago. We are all aware that in recent days there have been loud and, in my view, justifiable complaints by many in the medical hospital community—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have to ask the honourable members please to restrict their private conversations. If they have private conversations, conduct them outside the House, please.

Mr. Conway: The minister is aware that in recent days in this city there have been many loud and, in my view, justifiable complaints, but all we have seen from the Minister of Health in the intervening 13 or 14 months have been promises of blueprints and suggestions that more study be developed. So great is the frustration that even Dr. Robert McMurtry at Sunnybrook Medical Centre is reported as having said that he is fed up with blueprints and smokescreens.

How many more people are going to be put in jeopardy while blueprints and smokescreens represent all the government's commitment? When is the promise of the 1982 speech from the throne going to be lived up to? When are we in Ontario going to see an active paramedic program, which is being called for by all parts of the medical and health community?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, that was really a terrific four-minute speech, as I timed it, asking when we are going to start to train paramedics. The answer to that, without taking the time of this House to give not an equally eloquent speech but a lengthy explanation, is that the cabinet committee on social development approved the paramedic program last week, and that paper is on its way to Management Board, which will deal with it perhaps next week or the week after.

Mr. Conway: Can the minister be more specific and more helpful to the thousands of people who will be on the roads and highways of Ontario this weekend, and indeed to people like Dr. Robert McMurtry and others whose frustration is broadcast on this occasion about the lack of government action? When specifically are we going to have the beginnings of that program?

Would he care to comment on the statements attributed to Mr. Enright of his ministry that it cannot be implemented until all kinds of additional infrastructure are put in place? Would he care to comment specifically with respect to Metropolitan Toronto on what we are lacking in this community at this time to prevent an immediate implementation of a much-needed and properly called for paramedic program?

Mr. Speaker: Would the minister address himself just to the question and not the comments?

An hon. member: Oh, come on. That's not fair.

Mr. Speaker: Well, maybe not.

10:30 a.m.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Metropolitan Toronto is just about ready, though not entirely, for a paramedic program which will be totally helpful. One of the major deficiencies is that Metropolitan Toronto lacks the cardio-pulmonary resuscitation training for at least 20 per cent of the population. If we had 20 per cent trained in CPR, which we do not—we are not even close—the numbers of lives that could be saved that the doctors were talking about in the newspaper would be real numbers. I refer to people whose lives could be saved after having suffered some cardiac problem.

Without CPR training, without a citizen getting to a heart attack victim within four minutes, an ambulance arriving in six or seven minutes, which they usually do, will not help at all. It does not matter what emergency-medical-care training the person on the ambulance has—whether the person is an EMCA 1, EMCA 2, EMCA 3, paramedic or a doctor—unless someone is there providing CPR in the first four minutes.

That is one of the reasons we have been trying to encourage municipalities to do all the other things they have to do. If they will do that, then, depending on my Management Board of Cabinet submission, we will be ready to put paramedics on ambulances so we will have an effective and useful system. It is that simple.

Mr. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, does the minister not understand the heads of emergency departments at four major hospitals in Metro Toronto have completely repudiated the nonsense he has just uttered? I refer specifically to Dr. Rowed, Dr. McMurtry, Dr. Borden and Dr. Hastie. They have completely repudiated this nonsense about the necessity of having all these elaborate additional systems in place before a paramedic program can be established.

Would the minister specifically comment on a conversation we had with Dr. Rowed just before question period? He said to us that as of today the hospitals in London, Hamilton, Kingston and Toronto have the necessary sophistication to support a paramedic program. With $1 million today, he could put 10 rigs on the road and guarantee a saving of life. Why does the minister continue to pretend he has to do a zillion peripheral things?

We know that in Vancouver one in three cardiac arrest victims leaves the hospital. In Kingston, which does not have a paramedic program, a recent study of 65 cardiac arrest victims indicated that none of them left the hospital.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I could take the rest of the question period to discuss those statistics and other statistics which would prove that in terms of the—

Mr. McClellan: Why don't you listen to the doctors instead of your own bureaucrats?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The member mentions certain doctors. Dr. Rowed is deeply involved in this program, as is Dr. McMurtry, largely because of the initiative of Dr. Psutka who works for our ministry. He has involved them so we in the ministry could tap the expertise those doctors have. That is why they are so well informed about the state of our activity. That is why they are urging that we now move in those areas that we believe we now have succeeded in moving in.

Dr. Psutka has explained to the doctors who are making this point this morning that if we have paramedics in those hospitals they should be made useful. I hope these doctors are indicating, after the work they have done with our ministry, that their own hospitals and their colleagues working in other hospitals are prepared to do the necessary things to make paramedics useful.

The member sat through estimates and heard Dr. Psutka go through emergency health care at some length. As he well knows, paramedics must be in radio contact with an emergency physician in a base hospital. Then the acts which are delegated to those paramedics can be done under the direct supervision of a medical doctor who has special training in emergency care. Without that we cannot have the paramedic service.

Are those doctors prepared to say the hospitals in which they work and other hospitals in which their colleagues work are now ready to do several things? Are they prepared to rationalize their facilities so there is a base hospital for all trauma and cardiac victims? Are they prepared to have one hospital shift its activities to another so we can have that contact?

Are we hearing from these doctors that they are prepared in their hospitals to have emergency-trained physicians in the emergency room 24 hours a day in minute-to-minute contact with all paramedics? Without that, the training paramedics get to deliver delegated medical acts cannot be exercised.

Mr. Conway: Is the minister saying that Drs. Rowed, McMurtry and Hastie are wrong in saying they are ready to go with that paramedic program in this city now?

Given what the minister said earlier about the need for additional work, could he explain the reason for his recent letter? This letter, which is only three or four weeks old, was written to the Niagara Regional Area Health Council turning down their request for training in cardiopulmonary resuscitation. If I recall correctly, he said in his letter that it was premature. How does he square that rejection with his earlier statement that there is more that needs to be done by way of training and education?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It is a different problem in the Niagara Regional Area Health Council. They have the CPR training there. In fact, it is one of the best programs in the province for CPR coverage of the population.

Mr. Bradley: It's the funding we need.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, it is not the funding, it is the other things we have talked about that are in place in Toronto, such as the 911 central ambulance dispatch and the tiered response. I have acknowledged and agree that those doctors are ready in Toronto and perhaps Hamilton. Those are the two communities that those doctors and Dr. Psutka in our ministry agree are just about ready.

I only point out this morning that in order for it to have the kind of effectiveness that everyone believes it is going to have with cardiac victims, we are not going to get those numbers without CPR training of 20 per cent of the population. That is the reality.

SAFETY STANDARDS IN MINING INDUSTRY

Mr. Rae: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to ask a question of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Elgie) and I hope he will come back. I will go to a question of the Minister of Labour.

I am sure the minister is aware of the death of Gary Guilbeault at Stanleigh mine in Elliot Lake that I asked him about last week. The coroner's inquest gave its recommendations on Tuesday evening and I am sure the minister is also aware of that.

According to the coroner, the recommendations are basically twofold: that regulations be drawn up to provide for better lighting, for safety devices, for distinctive markings on the curtains; and—this is important—that employers in the mining industry enforce strict conformity with basic safety rules with all personnel and particularly with operators of these kinds of vehicles.

First, I would like to ask the minister if the government is going to be moving ahead to amend the mining regulations to conform to the recommendations of the coroner's inquest? Second, and particularly, is it going to be moving with respect to requiring employers to enforce the safety standards that have been developed?

Hon. Mr. Ramsay: Mr. Speaker, the honourable leader of the third party has brought forward several excellent points. The matter is being looked at very closely within our ministry at the present time. When I say "the matter," I am referring to the recommendations coming out of the inquest. We hope to be able to answer it in more detail in a few days' time. In the meantime, I have prepared a letter which is on its way to the member in respect to his earlier questions about the tragic fatality.

Mr. Rae: The minister will also be aware that one of the questions that is very much at issue, not only in this tragic instance but in many others that have occurred in the last few years, is the question as to whether underground vehicles should be required to have safety roll bars. Does the minister not feel that sufficient evidence was produced at the coroner's inquest in this case—as well as the six deaths which have occurred since 1976 and eight other unusual occurrences which involved the lack of a roll bar—to mean that underground vehicles as well as vehicles that are operating above ground should have these roll bars so we will not have tragic deaths occur such as occurred last week at Elliot Lake?

Hon. Mr. Ramsay: The matter of roll bars is under consideration and deliberation at the present time.

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Speaker, could the minister explain why Ted Tuori, one of the ministry inspectors who testified at the inquest, stated that this particular ventilation door had never been inspected and it was not until the accident investigation that it was inspected? This new type of door, which had a safety device which was then removed, had never been inspected by the ministry. Why is the ministry not complying with regulation 3 of the mining regulations which requires inspections of new installations such as this?

Hon. Mr. Ramsay: Mr. Speaker, that comment by the inspector was noted. We are investigating the reasons for his statement and the reasons for the door not being adequately inspected.

10:40 a.m.

GASOLINE PRICES

Mr. Rae: Mr. Speaker, I want to return to the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations and ask about the incredible leap in gasoline prices that has taken place over the last while. Peace has been declared very conveniently just prior to the long weekend.

Given that in 1975 his government took action with respect to retail prices in the gas field and given that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs in Ottawa, with whom he is in constant correspondence it would appear, has stated in the House of Commons on a number of occasions that in his view the federal government does not have jurisdiction with respect to retail prices in the gas sector, does the minister not think he has a clear obligation—instead of giving the consumers of this province the runaround, the old provincial-federal shell game that simply leaves them out in the cold—to take action with respect to retail prices, particularly since his own government was prepared to move some eight years ago?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, the member for York South and I have discussed this issue on other occasions. It is nice to have the opportunity to review it again with him, now that he is back from Dallas. How were the gas prices down there? Everything all right? Did the world look well down there? He came back through Washington. Is the world all right there too?

I am not trying to minimize the impact that the great variation in the price of gas has on individual consumers. I like to think, though, that members understand the consumer price index has been influenced largely by the price wars that have been taking place; we all understand that. They have not been healthy in some areas for some dealers. Many dealers are in great financial difficulty as a result of the price wars, and the member knows that. If he is suggesting that those dealers are gouging people, he should stand up and say so, and let us hear from them about whether they feel they are gouging the public.

Mr. Martel: The dealers have no control.

Mr. Rae: It is not the dealers and the minister knows that.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I know the member does not like the story. He just likes to be on some side that is criticizing nobody except the government. He knows the dealers have had a very difficult time during the price wars and the change in gas prices recently has been related to the diminution of those gas price wars. He knows the federal government may say what it wishes about this, but it has instituted a royal commission to look into this issue. If the member is suggesting we should duplicate that, I think he is talking about wasting taxpayers' money by such duplication.

Mr. Rae: The minister knows perfectly well there is no royal commission to discuss this question. He knows the commission of inquiry that has been established is dealing with a completely different question from this question of retail prices. The minister should stop the smokescreen, stop the smoke and mirrors. It has nothing to do with what is going on today.

With respect to retail prices, does the minister know whether the oil companies have been phoning the dealers? We are not singling out the dealers at all; we are singling out the oil companies. We are looking at the oil companies and the impact they are having on retail prices. Is the minister prepared to look at the question of retail pricing and price practices in this province, right across the province—northern Ontario, southern Ontario, isolated communities and urban communities—and to come up with a fair deal for the consumers of this province? Is he prepared to do that or is he not?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I think the preface to the question really was, "Are you going to stop beating your wife?" The issue really is—

Hon Mr. Drea: Are you?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I never did beat her, so that is not a problem for me. I do not know whether the minister—no, he does not do that either. My wife beats me up on occasion.

First, I do not start out with the assumption of the member that the dealers and all the other people involved in the distribution of petroleum products are out to gouge people. I think by and large we have been well served by the process that is in place.

Mr. Ruston: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is with regard to the answer the minister gave to the first question of the leader of the New Democratic Party about retailers setting the price. Is the minister not aware that retailers have nothing to do with setting the price, that the company calls them and tells them what to sell it for?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, I am aware there are company policies. I am also aware that the dealers do have some options with respect to levels.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, the minister knows very well that neither I nor my leader is suggesting it was the gasoline retail dealers who were gouging the public. The minister must know that the price war was manipulated by the major oil companies—

Mr. Speaker: Question, please.

Mr. Swart: —to put the squeeze on both the independent distributors and the independent dealers. Independent dealers, by and large, were not getting the same low price from the big oil refining companies that the direct outlet or commission agents were; thus, they could not compete and they lost business. One of the companies that is the worst at squeezing out the independent retailers is Suncor. It has a conscious policy now of not renewing licences and then of going into direct selling itself.

If the minister cares at all about the small independent business people in this province, will he do a comprehensive study of the current practices and their effects on the small retail and distributing independents?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any reason for anyone to doubt the concern this government has about the small independents and the dealers and consumers in this province. As I said, I do not start out with the same presumptions those members do, that everybody is always out to gouge everybody else.

CHRONIC CARE FACILITY

Mr. Wrye: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Health about some of the announcements he made in Windsor yesterday regarding chronic care facilities in Riverview Hospital. I want to welcome the $1 million he has pledged to keep Riverview Hospital safe with respect to fire standards, at least in the interim. It seems the minister is now a latter-day convert to the need for a new chronic care facility, which we on this side have been pushing for more than a decade.

Given the timetable he has outlined to the hospitals and to the health council to come up with a plan for a new unit, what is the minister's timetable for construction of the facility? Will he provide funding for the capital construction of this facility as soon as the new plan is in place this fall?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, as soon as an agreement is reached we can begin the normal planning process, and the funding will be on our usual format.

Mr. Wrye: The minister knows full well that the normal planning process is one of five, six and up to 10 years. We do not have 10 more years. To upgrade that facility is going to cost $9 million in the next two or three years, and surely when we are talking about $30 million for a new facility we ought to put money where it well belongs.

The minister is quick to place the blame on the hospitals for this, but I want to read from a document I have that reports on the position of the ministry. Dr. Dyer sent a letter to the council last fall saying the figures would indicate, with respect to the need for a new chronic care hospital, that at this time Windsor cannot justify a new chronic care hospital until the conditions stipulated by the ministry can be reached. He went on to say that capital dollars are not available to fund a new chronic care hospital. However, the ministry is supportive of private funding that would also incorporate operating costs.

Will the minister give us a commitment today that this government will provide the financial backing for the construction and operation of a new facility so that our new chronic care hospital is not maintained at the whim of the private marketplace but is part of the overall health care system in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: When I was in Windsor yesterday I predicted the honourable member and his colleagues would jump as quickly as possible to try to take all the credit for what this government had decided to do in the Windsor area and they never let me down.

Mr. Wrye: We won't take credit for that firetrap.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In any case, let me make it clear the statement I made a moment ago stands. When there is agreement and the planning process is undertaken, it does not take seven, eight or nine years. Given the point they are at in Windsor, I would expect to have the facility rebuilt; if everything goes on schedule and if agreement is reached this October, perhaps it will be commenced in another year and a half and completed three or four years from today, depending on the size of the project. Our funding will come in place as always.

I might take this opportunity to say to the member and to his colleague the member for Essex North (Mr. Ruston) that the comments I made about them were tongue in cheek; the audience appreciated that.

Mr. Wrye: That's not what we heard.

10:50 a.m.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Oh, yes, it is. I noted for them that I knew the member would have been there had he been in town. His friends will tell him that.

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, the people of Windsor know who is committed to health care. They also know it was this government that fought for three or four years to try to close the only chronic care facility, Riverview, that we have in the city of Windsor. It was this government that tried from 1975 to 1979 to close that hospital.

We need these chronic care beds urgently in the city of Windsor in view of the backup into both nursing home and unregulated rest home and active treatment beds. It is a problem and is costing the taxpayers money. Also, we need the jobs in the building sector. This facility simply has to be built in the next few years. Why does this government not accelerate that capital works project and build the chronic care hospital that is so desperately needed in the city of Windsor?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the Windsor paper this morning but I must have done fairly well yesterday. I have now had three of those members up. If the member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. Newman) will get up, it will be a clean sweep.

In order to get it on the record, the member asked me why we do not begin to build the hospital as quickly as possible. My answer is simple. We have indicated that October is the absolute, last cutoff date for all the hospitals and the medical community to come to some agreement, so the ministry can commence its part of the exercise which is to rebuild the facility.

Might I say that on the open-line program in Windsor yesterday morning, I quite enjoyed taking a call from the member's mother who asked some questions he had fed her. She did not identify herself, but she did a credible job in trying to put the New Democratic Party's case forward.

CLOSURE OF CLARKE IRWIN.

Mr. Allen: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Industry and Trade. As the minister will know, this past week saw an important event in the history of Canadian publishing and the survival of Canadian culture, namely the closure of the publisher Clarke Irwin and Co. Ltd. in this province.

He is also aware there have been two other closures in recent months, that there are 14 other institutions of the same kind being supported by the Ontario Development Corp., and that McClelland and Stewart is in a cash-short situation. Yet the minister is reported to have said, in response to this situation, that receivership was simply one way the province had of protecting its investment.

Given the enormous influence of Canadian publishers in the expression of the traditions, ideals, insights, values and aspirations from which the fabric of our cultural life is woven, does the minister intend to persist in viewing this case, and those of the 14 other publishers supported by ODC, with this simple trust-in-business fundamentalism? Does he propose to protect, in some other fashion I hope, the immense cultural investment we have in Canadian publishing, or is he simply going to place Price Waterhouse patrols in all the corridors and change the locks?

Hon. Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, the Ontario Development Corp. is involved with a number of publishers, but in particular it was involved with the Clarke Irwin company. There was a substantial loan there. In fact, it was a guarantee of $1.5 million which basically grew to $1.6 million.

The bank, in essence, called the loan on it and, with our guarantee, we were required to respond and provide the funds that were asked; $1.5 million of taxpayers' money is not something to be trifled with. We tried to extend with the company as long as possible. We worked with them. We massaged the situation. We tried to do everything humanly possible to cause that firm to come to a situation of profitability. We had projections made by the firm that suggested it could have come to a profitable situation, but nothing was happening and the taxpayers' money was being jeopardized in the process.

It behooved us to respond in a way that recognized the trust the public had given us in terms of its money. This money was there. It is the taxpayers' money. We must protect it. In this case, after extending month after month—in fact, after extending for a period of close to a year—we had no choice but to go in and put the firm into receivership. There was absolutely no choice whatsoever. Anybody assessing this from a financial point of view would probably have said, "Why did you not move in sooner?"

Having done that, I think it is fair to say, and the Minister of Citizenship and Culture (Mr. McCaffrey) would support me in this and may wish to offer some observations, we hope that from this receivership will come a restructuring from a financial point of view with an infusion of new moneys, with some new partnership participation in the process, perhaps even with a sale of the operation. There are four or five potential purchasers. From all that, we might then have a reasonable book industry—a reasonable industry in this particular case—that will again make sure the taxpayers' money is protected properly. I do not think the members would want anything less.

Mr. Allen: I am not asking the minister to trifle with taxpayers' money. I suggest perhaps the government might use some of it more effectively and efficiently. Presumably the minister is quite familiar with the basic economic facts of the Canadian publishing industry. Canadian-controlled firms spend three times as great a percentage of their net sales on bank charges and interest as foreign firms. He is aware of the kinds of supports he has recited to me from the Ontario Development Corp. and the kind of problem that Clarke Irwin specifically got into.

But is he aware that the Ministry of Education, through its book-purchase plan, subsidizes school book purchases from Circular 14 to the tune of over $2 million a year? Despite the advantage that foreign-owned firms have in the field of book imports in this province and in this country, the Ministry of Education persists in giving them equal access to the book-purchase plan and they now appear to dominate it. Clarke Irwin has been one of the losers in that squeeze.

Will the minister press the Ministry of Education to amend the terms of the book-purchase plan so that the books in question may be purchased only through Canadian-owned publishers' agencies, as happens in at least one neighbouring province? Surely that is the kind of affirmative action his ministry and the Ministry of Education ought to be undertaking with respect to Canadian publications.

Hon. Mr. Walker: I simply reiterate that there is a lot of money invested in this company. I will certainly pass on to the Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson) the comments the member for Hamilton West has made. She is quite capable of looking after her ministry and recognizing the requirements and priorities within it. She will do a fine job on it and, if it is in the interests of the public, she will take into account some of the observations the member has made.

In respect of this loan, in April 1982—that was a year ago—the guarantee was extended a further six months. In September 1982 it was extended on a month-by-month basis. There was absolutely nothing else that could be done. The public will judge us on the basis of this and will say we acted prudently under the circumstances. I think the member will be satisfied once he sees the final outcome of the situation.

Mr. Conway: Mr. Speaker, I ask the minister to forget about the money and just to pretend Clarke Irwin is Minaki or Foster Advertising or Camp Associates and he might not be so nervous about the dollars involved. Has the minister personally involved himself, together with the culture minister, and met with the principals involved, particularly those at Clarke Irwin, to make them aware of the kind of framework of government policy the minister is prepared to support to ensure this particularly valuable cultural and economic operation will be allowed to continue in Ontario? Will he personally involve himself, together with the culture minister, to make sure the principals are aware of their support?

Hon. Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, let me begin by saying that everybody wants to have the company saved in the process. Everybody wants to have the company survive and the jobs survive, and that is something on which this government and this ministry, and the Ministry of Citizenship and Culture, are particularly intent.

On May 16, 1983, Dr. William Clarke, who is the president of Clarke Irwin, met with the Minister of Citizenship and Culture. In addition, my officials have been meeting without fail over months and months on this issue. The lead minister in this case is the Minister of Citizenship and Culture. He has been meeting directly with them. If he feels my presence is required, I am certainly prepared to take part.

In this case, the Ontario Development Corp. is acting on behalf of Citizenship and Culture in response to the financial side of the issue. There is no question this government will meet its obligations, that the government members and ministers will meet as required to resolve this. There has been no reluctance on their part to be part of a solution.

NIAGARA RIVER WATER QUALITY

Mr. Kerrio: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Deputy Premier who attended, along with me, a public meeting in Lewiston, New York. He showed his anger and disappointment that there was pollution going on in the lower Niagara River. He made a comment that he did not want to see another drop of any kind of pollutant going into that water. For that, I commend him.

Now I am asking, will the minister and his government join myself and many groups in Niagara, such as the Preservation of Agricultural Land Society, Operation Clean Niagara, Mr. Oleksuik from Chippawa and many concerned citizens, in resisting in every possible way the setting up of a chemical dump site on those farm lands in Niagara?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, just to make sure I understand the question, is the member making reference to the reports that have been recently made public by the Ontario Waste Management Corp.?

If I have understood that particular report, that area is not on that list. I do not think Dr. Chant indicated the region of Niagara was part of the preferred list or at the top of the list. I may have misunderstood that, but that is what I thought Dr. Chant had indicated in his report. The member makes reference to our joint and mutual interest in the quality of water in the river. Certainly since that very historic night in which we both participated, there has been a lot of things happen.

Over a period of time the member has asked questions of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Norton) and provided him with an opportunity to give progress reports there. I think progress is being made because the people generally are quite supportive of initiatives being taken there. We realize how we are benefiting in our area by the involvement of so many well-meaning people who have rallied around this cause to keep these issues very prominent and to give them a very high profile.

The member knows as well that the work being done by Dr. Chant and that particular group has taken into account all sorts of factors with respect to the ultimate proper site. I think we always have to keep before us, and it has always been part of the debate with respect to this issue, that there has to be some place found where we can properly treat these very dangerous wastes. Obviously no final decision will be taken until everyone is completely satisfied that wherever it is to be finally located, that work can be done in a very safe and proper way.

Mr. Kerrio: The fact they even considered the Cayuga dump site on the banks of the Grand River frightens me, and the fact Dr. Chant and his group have not decided there should be a minimal distance from any water course for the disposition of this kind of chemical site concerns me greatly.

The fact some people are using the not-in-my-backyard syndrome is not what motivates me. My concern is, first, all of the pollution in the river; second, having an American railroad that cuts right across the peninsula to take toxic chemicals from Niagara Falls, New York, to Detroit; third, having added to that trucks bringing in chemicals to this dump site, and finally, and probably most significant of all, the fact that they would be using some of the prime agricultural land in Canada would suggest to me that we need all the help we can get to resist it, because of these facts that I bring to the minister.

I am wondering if all those points have been considered. I am afraid they have not. That is why I am asking for the minister's personal intervention and an appeal to his cabinet that Niagara should never be considered for this kind of site.

Mr. Speaker: I believe the question was, "Have all these points been taken into consideration?"

Hon. Mr. Welch: The Minister of the Environment and I were in the constituency of Brock about a week ago meeting with high school students, which provided a forum for some discussion on this and related issues. Some of the representatives of these other groups were there as well and the minister was provided with an opportunity to meet with them and to hear their concerns.

I think we have always got to keep very clearly in mind—surely there is no dispute in so far as any member of this House is concerned—that we have to find a site for the treatment of these dangerous wastes. They have to be treated.

I heard Dr. Chant, as did the member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Kerrio), as he was discussing his report within the last few days, indicate that the waste management corporation is taking into consideration all the points to which the member quite rightly draws our attention. Ultimately a site has to be found so we can treat these chemicals in a responsible way. I know that has been the consistent position of the member for Niagara Falls during these entire discussions. Where that site will be obviously will be the result of careful determination, taking into account all the matters to which the member makes reference, the ultimate matter being the safety and the health of the people of the province.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, recognizing that something like only four per cent of the chemical waste is generated in the Niagara region, does the Deputy Premier not think it would be something of an imposition for the people of Niagara to have to take the disposal plant for all of southern Ontario? Does he not think it would be more appropriate for that disposal plant to be located in Brampton where there is a site that meets all the criteria?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I am quite satisfied that ultimately a very responsible group, chaired by Dr. Chant, will take all these factors into consideration in coming to a decision which will be in the best interests of the people of this province.

At the next opportunity, I will be very happy to mention to the member for Brampton (Mr. Davis) the member's interest in his constituency.

TTC SAFETY STANDARDS

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Speaker, I have a question to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Ramsay) regarding the Toronto Transit Commission's failure to implement inquest juries' recommendations.

It is almost one full year since the death of Mr. R. Achong, an electrician who was killed while relamping light fixtures at track level in the Toronto Transit Commission subway during operating hours on June 1, 1982, and it has been five months since the inquest. Can the Minister of Labour explain why the TTC still has not installed red flashing lights; why the TTC continues to refuse to include additional flagmen in all track-level work crews during so-called revenue hours; why the TTC has not carried out the safety training program for all employees working at track level; and why the TTC has refused to develop a nonvisual warning system, all of which measures were recommended by the coroner's jury?

Hon. Mr. Ramsay: Mr. Speaker, I am aware of several meetings that were held with officials of my ministry and also with the officials of the TTC. I must admit I felt that from the information which had been provided to me the matters had been resolved and the appropriate action was being taken. If that is not the case I will certainly be more than pleased to look into it and to report back to the honourable member.

Mr. Wildman: The TTC has installed a large red light but not a red flashing light, as was recommended by the coroner's jury. Considering the failure of the TTC to implement the measures that the coroner's jury stated were necessary to improve safety for track-level crews, why has the minister not intervened to protect the rights of workers to refuse unsafe work? There were 19 employees who lost three days' pay for refusing to work at track level without a red flashing warning light being installed. Why is the minister, through his meetings with the TTC, co-operating in stalling on the establishment of proper health and safety committees?

Hon. Mr. Ramsay: I cannot accept the observation that there has been stalling on the part of the ministry. The opposite has been true, in so far as the information with which I am familiar is concerned.

I will have to look into the matter he has brought up in respect to the refusal to work and the fact that salary was withheld from these men. These are points on which I will be happy to report back.

11:10 a.m.

Mr. Wrye: Mr. Speaker, when the minister reports back to the House, will he report not only in general terms on the refusal to work and the problems that arose out of that, but on each and every one of the recommendations of the coroner's jury and exactly what the TTC plans to do? If his ministry does not intend to force the company to implement those recommendations, will he tell us on what basis the ministry is agreeing with the TTC?

Hon. Mr. Ramsay: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

CONSTRUCTION LIEN ACT

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, with your indulgence, I have the answer to a previously asked question.

On May 2 last, the member for Oshawa (Mr. Breaugh) posed a very important question to the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Elgie) regarding the Construction Lien Act. The problem raised by the member for Oshawa relates particularly to subsection 80(5) dealing with the priority of liens over mortgages registered subsequent to the commencement of an improvement.

When a purchaser of a new home who has not had the house built for him or her, and therefore is not an owner under the act, closes the transaction, advances the purchase price and receives a conveyance from the builder, it is clear that if no liens are registered at the time and the purchaser has no written notice of a lien, the interest of the purchaser has priority over any lien.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order: The answer of the Attorney General is a four-page prepared text. I wonder if you might stop the clock on question period. We would certainly be glad to have this statement made as a ministerial statement.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: That will be fine.

Mr. Speaker: I am not aware of the length of the answer.

Mr. Nixon: I am bringing it to your attention.

Mr. Speaker: Do we have the concurrence of the House to revert to statements?

Agreed to.

STATEMENT BY THE MINISTRY

CONSTRUCTION LIEN ACT

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, when a purchaser has no written notice of a lien, the interest of the purchaser has priority over any lien, and that is the effect of subsection 80(6).

It has long been and, in my opinion is now the law that a mortgage arranged by the purchaser who is not an owner, advanced and registered at closing, also has priority over liens which have not been registered. It was not our intention to confiscate part of the interest of mortgagees lending to purchasers. The lien has a right over the interest and the property of the person who had the improvement made.

While several highly regarded lawyers have given the same opinion as I have just expressed, doubt apparently remains in the minds of some lenders. They have not been advancing 10 or more per cent of the price on closing. Some purchasers of new homes have been forced to arrange interim financing for a period of up to 60 days from closing. Not only could this be harmful to the individual purchaser, but it could also put a cloud over purchasing a home and might thereby harm the construction industry which is so important to the economic health of the province.

I could refer the interpretation of the subsection to the courts and wait for clarification. However, that would not be the desire of the government or, I think, of the members opposite.

While I had hoped to wait for at least a year before making amendments to the act, I believe there should be amendments in the near future to clarify the intention of the legislation.

The effect of the amendments I will bring forward will make it clear that a mortgage of a purchaser's interest in a new home is not subject to the priorities of subsections 80(2) or 80(5). These amendments will be retroactive to April 2 when the act came into force. In addition, the conveyancing bar has requested there be legislative clarification of when a purchaser of a new home becomes an owner and thereby becomes responsible for holdback, and these amendments will clarify this issue.

I trust the lenders in the province will act on this statement of intention to bring forward legislation. It is not necessary and it is undesirable for a lender to a purchaser to be concerned about the priority of liens under subsections 80(2) or 80(5). Because of my wish to consult those involved, a ministry official will be meeting with lawyers representing lenders to work out the details of these amendments. Representatives of contractors and labour will also be consulted.

To avoid misunderstanding, I want to emphasize that the principles of the act and holdback security will not be reconsidered in connection with these proposed amendments. Holdback security in the present form will remain until all segments of the construction industry can agree on a better method for protecting the vital interests of those who supply services and material to improve real property.

Mr. Breagh: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the speed with which the Attorney General has reacted to the problem. He is not known for speed.

There is one little problem which remains. In my area, and I take it in other areas of Ontario, there are people who have had to get the money and put it in a trust account. That is one thing not mentioned in the statement the Attorney General made today. Would he give some consideration to such people who have already paid a financial privilege and in some cases lost the ability to purchase or complete a home because of these problems? Would he give that some consideration as well?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I am not sure what we can do about that. I will discuss the matter with my senior advisors.

FAIR EXCHANGE RATES

Mr. Eakins: I would like to address my question to the Minister of Tourism and Recreation. As the minister knows, millions of dollars are spent in attracting people to visit and discover Ontario. Since this is our first long weekend, would he comment on his ministry's activity to make sure the fair exchange program is in effect in Ontario and that fair exchange on United States currency will be recognized in this province?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: As the honourable member knows, the implementation or application of a fair exchange program would fall outside the mandate of my ministry. In the Ministry of Tourism and Recreation we are doing what we can—that is to advise incoming tourists, particularly Americans, that they should be making their exchanges at official exchange places. If they do not heed our constant advice and counselling and run into a situation where they do not feel they are getting a fair exchange, unfortunately, that is their problem. It is not something I and my ministry can correct.

I want to assure the member and all those here that we do try as well and as comprehensively as we can to alert incoming tourists to make sure they exchange at officially recognized exchanges. We have never heard of any problem when they do that.

Mr. Eakins: What is the ministry doing to monitor the situation? The minister works very closely with Tourism Ontario and hotels. He has recently received one letter I know of in particular about people who booked into a hotel in the evening and could not get a fair exchange on their money.

The minister might also take a look at the Toronto Transit Commission which the government subsidizes. The sign in the ticket windows states one will only receive 15 per cent up to a maximum of $20. Is the minister monitoring those facilities to which the government contributes taxpayers' funds in this province?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: I can assure the honourable member that is exactly what we do. As the minister I do not get many complaints from American tourists about having received an unfair exchange rate. However, when I do hear from these people, each complaint is followed up individually. Where we find a motel, hotel, restaurant or whatever that tends to be gouging tourists on exchange rates we ask the local travel organization to follow through and exercise some discipline.

A lot of self-policing can and does take place in Tourism Ontario and some of the other tourist associations. Certainly, if I hear from a disgruntled American tourist saying he has been dealt with unfairly on the exchange rate, we do follow through on that. We also do it through ongoing programs of advising travel associations and so on.

OVERCROWDED CORRECTIONAL FACILITIES

Mr. Philip: Mr. Speaker, I have a question to the Minister of Correctional Services concerning the decline in the capacity of his institutions in Metro to accommodate inmates, with the closing of minimum security facilities to the point where the facilities in Metro designed for 628 inmates are now holding over 1,500. Is the minister not concerned that the conditions caused by overcrowding have become so dangerous that leaders of the 3,100 guards in Metropolitan Toronto East, Metropolitan Toronto West and the Don Jail have instructed their members not to intervene when violence breaks out in those institutions?

Would the minister agree with the statement by Lyn Hooker, president of the jail workers of Metropolitan Toronto West, that one of these days there is going to be a blow-up and when it does come we will not be looking at one or two dead but maybe 30 or 40? What is the minister going to do about it?

Hon. Mr. Leluk: Mr. Speaker, I have spoken many times in this House, as the member for Etobicoke knows, about what my ministry has been doing in relation to providing the additional bed spaces required, particularly in the Metro Toronto area where we have the most serious problem of overcrowding. We have been addressing that.

In the last 11-month period we have created some 150 bed spaces at Mimico Correctional Centre by upgrading that facility from a minimum security facility to a medium security facility. We have opened the fifth floor at the Hamilton-Wentworth Detention Centre, which created an additional 60 bed spaces there. We have put forward a long-range accommodation plan that calls for a new maximum security facility for the Golden Horseshoe area that would provide an additional 500 bed spaces.

Mr. Martel: Why don't you use Burwash again?

Hon. Mr. Leluk: Pardon?

Mr. Speaker: Never mind the interjections, please.

Hon. Mr. Leluk: I am trying to answer the question of the member for Etobicoke (Mr. Philip) and I ask the members opposite to give me that opportunity.

In regard to the members of our correctional staff who have been asked to stand by and not to intervene, we have certain guidelines and policies in our ministry that we expect our correctional staff to follow at all times. They do this on a day-to-day basis and this is what is expected of them.

RESPONSE TO WRITTEN QUESTIONS

Mr. Nixon: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: A number of my colleagues have brought to my attention their concern with the lack of application of standing order 81 and the answering of written questions on behalf of the ministry. The Speaker is aware that on Tuesday of this week, the honourable government House leader tabled a very large number of answers. On examination, most of them appeared not to be answers at all.

There is some complaint that too many questions are asked and that they are too complex. I can assure the Speaker there is no intention on our part to jam up the so-called government machinery, but I would like to say that answers to some of these questions have been pending for seven months, since last October, and they are carried over on the order paper if they are not answered in the interim period.

It seems to me that if the government feels it cannot deal with this material, under the standing orders it has the right to refuse to answer. I suppose we would object to that as well. But the argument that our research complement in the library and estimates and so on are the places where the answers might be available is not satisfactory.

I felt, Mr. Speaker, you should be aware that the government, in our view, is not living up to the spirit of standing order 81. If government members want to say to this House in their answers that they refuse to provide an answer for reasons they think good and sufficient, there is not much we can do about it but complain.

But I say to you, Mr. Speaker, they have not done that. The answers have been pending for seven months and I believe it is your job, or I would respectfully submit to you it is your responsibility, to see that the standing order is lived up to both in its letter and in its spirit. The information should be put before this House.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the government House leader (Mr. Wells) has paid close attention to your submission and in turn, will contact his colleagues to ask them to live up to the intention and the spirit and the letter of standing order 81.

PETITION

CONVERSION OF RENTAL UNITS

Mr. Ruprecht: Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by many tenants across Toronto, which reads:

"To the Honourable Lieutenant Governor and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"We, the undersigned, beg leave to petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario that immediate steps be taken to protect us against unscrupulous landlords who evict tenants in order to create furnished hotel-like suites. This change not only eliminates valuable rental units, but these hotel-like suites will destroy our community by creating giant flophouses in our neighbourhoods."

MOTION

HOUSE SITTINGS

Hon. Mr. Wells moved that when this House adjourns today, it stand adjourned until Tuesday next, May 24, at 2 p.m.

Motion agreed to.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

ANDONALD ENTERPRISES LIMITED ACT

Ms. Fish moved, seconded by Mr. Robinson, first reading of Bill Pr29, An Act to revive Andonald Enterprises Limited.

Motion agreed to.

BERNARD BETEL CENTRE FOR CREATIVE LIVING ACT

Mr. Cousens moved, seconded by Ms. Fish, first reading of Bill Pr20, An Act respecting the Bernard Betel Centre for Creative Living.

Motion agreed to.

11:30 a.m.

CLASS ACTIONS ACT

Mr. Swart moved, seconded by Mr. Cassidy, first reading of Bill 47, An Act to provide for Class Actions.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to provide a statutory procedure whereby one or more persons may sue a defendant in the form of a class action. The bill is designed to achieve this purpose by permitting a person who wishes to sue on behalf of a class to apply for a court order authorizing the class action. Once the order is obtained, the action proceeds as a class action, and the final judgement binds all members of the class except those who have been excluded, as well as the parties to the action.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

ESTIMATES

Hon. Mr. Wells moved, seconded by Hon. Mr. Gregory, resolution 8.

Reading dispensed with [see Votes and Proceedings].

House in committee of supply.

ESTIMATES, MINISTRY OF GOVERNMENT SERVICES

Hon. Mr. Wiseman: Mr. Chairman, I have an opening statement.

It is a distinct honour and a privilege for me to rise in this chamber to present the Ministry of Government Services expenditure estimates for the year 1983-84. I am sure each and every member of the Legislature believes, as I do, that we are very proud and very fortunate to be able to serve the people of Ontario in the productive and sincere manner that our system of government has provided for the past 200 years.

As a farmer, businessman and politician, I can only say that I regard myself as perhaps the most fortunate of all to be able to stand in this historic chamber for yet another year and provide the members on both sides of the House with the expenditure plans for the ministry. It is truly a great personal honour for me.

Before I proceed with the detailed discussions and debate on the various votes in our estimates, I would like to offer a brief opening statement, which I believe will provide the members of the House with a perspective on my ministry and on our approach and plans for 1983-84.

In one respect my ministry is no different from any of the other ministries of the provincial government; that is, we were founded and built on the need to provide service to the people of Ontario. Service is our mandate; service is what this government is all about. In my humble opinion, the leadership role that the Ministry of Government Services has taken to provide our sister ministries, agencies, boards and commissions and the people of Ontario with government services is second to none.

If I were speaking from a private sector perspective, I might say the Ministry of Government Services is really more than two dozen businesses rolled into one. We are in the construction business, the furniture business, the moving business; we are printers, architects, real estate agents and business administrators. Our resources extend from computer and telecommunications expertise to running one of the most efficient mail services in the country.

Most important of all, we are the ministry of people: people who are dedicated to public service; people who are constantly looking for new and improved methods of serving the taxpayers of this province. I believe we all have a real role, a real responsibility, to address the most pressing concern of our society today. That concern is employment. We must do everything in our power to stimulate employment opportunities and to provide employment incentives to aid the thousands of Ontario men and women now out of work.

The Ministry of Government Services continues to encourage job creation in the private sector. It has been and will continue to be our philosophy that we can best serve Ontarians through the privatization of many of the services we provide. In 1983-84 we will create an estimated 6,556 jobs in the private sector in our capital allocations and repairs program through expenditures of some $76.8 million across Ontario. When I say "across Ontario" I mean just that: we will be looking at every corner of this province to offer the needed economic stimulation to get people back on the job.

Last year, through the Board of Industrial Leadership and Development program, we were able to create an estimated 1,400 jobs through $10.4 million in construction, repair and alteration projects. This year we hope to create employment for 1,200 men and women through the $50 million in BILD expenditures in capital construction alone.

Further job creation initiatives will be realized through the Canada-Ontario employment development program. We already have three projects approved to date that will provide 278 job opportunities through the expenditure of some $821,000. As an update on that, just a few minutes ago we found out that we had been granted another $500,000 in that program; so there will be even more jobs created. We will be seeking, as I will mention later, approval for more throughout the fiscal year.

Our efforts to stimulate employment in the private sector include increased privatization of many of the services my ministry provides. In 1983-84 we estimate spending $87 million on contracts in the private sector to design, operate and maintain government buildings across Ontario.

We are also taking initiatives to inform Ontario businesses of how they can sell to their government. To increase opportunities for access to government markets, we will be involved in trade shows and will participate in exhibits. We will explore new and improved ways of communicating with the business community.

I am firmly convinced that the results will be economic stimulation and the benefit will be further creation of employment in the private sector right across Ontario.

11:40 a.m.

The Ministry of Government Services has constantly been looking at methods of saving dollars while at the same time improving service. Through a reorganization of government office space in downtown Toronto, we expect to save the people of Ontario $10 million during the next three years and some $60 million over the next decade.

This Metro Toronto initiative also kicks off our program to reduce all government office accommodation by 10 per cent across Ontario. When we consider the fact that the Ministry of Government Services holds responsibility for approximately 11 million square feet of office space in this province, this initiative alone will save us many millions of dollars.

Our government continues its leadership in the area of energy conservation and cost savings and my ministry is proud to play a vital part in that program. Over the past six years, we have reduced energy consumption by 25 per cent. That is a saving of $27 million—I used the example yesterday—enough to heat and light 54,000 homes. In this fiscal year, we expect further savings as we continue to practise and promote this worthwhile effort.

We have been able to accomplish these economies through new building designs, through energy-efficient retrofits of existing buildings and through co-operative programs with the Ministry of Energy aimed at educating our employees in the area of conservation.

One excellent example of the energy-efficient design is the new headquarters for the Ministry of Revenue in Oshawa. Another is the Macdonald-Cartier building in Kingston; yet another is the one we opened yesterday, the new courthouse in St. Catharines. These are all well-designed people buildings, and all operate at a fraction of the energy costs we experienced a few years ago.

There are other areas of cost savings we have identified and are proceeding to take advantage of. As one example, let me point out that in the past we disposed of outdated government records through incineration. The cost to the government of Ontario was approximately $140,000 per year. We are currently going through a system of shredding and recycling under strict security measures. Through this system we will not only save that $140,000 but also show a return this year of $12,000 through the sale of this recycled paper.

Use of new electronic innovations, such as a minicomputer in our collection services section, will increase our revenue by a projected $700,000 in this fiscal year. Through our accommodation division, the reorganization of our field offices across Ontario will produce a 7.5 per cent increase in productivity and service, while actually saving money through a six per cent reduction in staff as a result of some amalgamation and the normal attrition process.

The Ministry of Government Services places great emphasis on its human resources, its people. We believe our managers should be encouraged to manage. Through the reorganization of our field offices, more and more decisions will be made at the local level. We believe our human resource programs are providing the knowledge, the training and the encouragement that will provide us with a strong foundation of dedicated men and women to carry out the programs of today and address the challenges of tomorrow.

We are continuing to place emphasis on the career development of women within our ministry. Women now hold 32.5 per cent of all positions in the Ministry of Government Services, up from 31 per cent just a year ago. On our senior management committee, three women are involved in senior policy discussions and decisions being made at MGS. We are committed to all programs designed to offer equal opportunity for advancement and career development of all our employees and we will continue to pursue those objectives.

Earlier in this statement, I mentioned some of the initiatives we are taking to encourage the business community to sell to their government. I would like to take a moment to share with the House a number of purchasing policies and programs.

In these times of constraint and tight money, purchasing has become a real challenge for both the buyer and the seller. To say competition in the marketplace is fierce would be putting it mildly. I am pleased to report that my ministry's one-window collective purchasing program for common-use products and services exceeded $50 million in the last fiscal year. That is a saving of $13 million, and I fully expect us to advance that saving even further in 1983-84.

My ministry is firmly committed to the buy-Canadian policy. That policy is solidly entrenched in all our purchasing activities. I have taken a strong personal interest in this commitment, as has my entire staff. The result is a continuous intensive review of the ministry's sources of supply. I am sure the honourable members will be interested to know that 100 per cent of some 1,100 MGS stock items are purchased in Canada and 95 per cent are manufactured in Canada. We will continue our commitment to the buy-Canadian program because in MGS we know Canadian products mean Canadian jobs.

To assist us in achieving that goal, we will be appointing a full-time agent in our purchasing services branch with the responsibility to identify and promote further opportunities for import replacement with Canadian-made products. The purchasing of Canadian-made products means more private sector initiative, and that means more jobs.

I might also take this opportunity to mention a number of other initiatives we are taking in the area of corporate services.

We are now providing telephone translation services to our client ministries for more rapid response to our francophone citizens in Ontario. By using new approaches to take full advantage of the postal rates, we were able to save $800,000 in mailing costs last year. Our publication services are providing a looseleaf version of the Highway Traffic Act; this new approach will allow faster and more economical updates. Leadership in records management will see dollar savings and increased retrieval efficiency through privatization in this very important area.

These are but a few of the opportunities we are taking to improve service. We have not been asleep at the switch when it comes to technology either.

My ministry has recently installed an audio teleconferencing capability which will bring people together via the telephone in up to 14 locations outside Metro Toronto. Using intercity network lines, this service not only will save us long-distance charges but also will offer an opportunity for government employees to conduct their business in a rapid and more productive manner.

11:50 a.m.

Video teleconferencing is another initiative my ministry has taken to offer a more streamlined and effective method of communications throughout government. To date we have established video conferencing centres in Toronto, Thunder Bay, Sudbury and Oshawa. Additional centres are planned in this fiscal year for Kingston and Sault Ste. Marie. This system has all the benefits of audio conference with the added bonus of face-to-face dialogue, resulting in considerable savings in government travel and accommodation.

A new computer data base will allow our switchboard operators to provide instant response to calls requesting information on a specific service this government provides. All members will be interested to know that it will also give us a current electronic government telephone directory.

Improving the telephone system in the northern regions of this province has been a major goal of our ministry. Funds allocated in this fiscal year will see improvements in that northern telephone service.

On the subject of intercity telephone lines, this service saved the government $7 million last year and handled more than 15 million calls. I am sure the members of the House are aware of the many improvements we have made in the intercity lines right across this province in the past year. There will be more, and I shall share these new initiatives with the House as they are put into operation.

Before I leave the subject of telecommunications, I would mention the pilot project we have in place at the Ministry of Government Services to aid us in determining the most effective use of our telephones.

The "datapulse" system we have installed on a trial basis will show what the peak periods are for incoming calls. It will determine the number of calls placed and received from a specific telephone, and it will establish how long the caller had to wait for the telephone to be answered. These data not only will allow us to determine dollar-saving opportunities but, equally important, it will also offer us opportunities to improve service to our clients through more effective staff scheduling.

New Ministry of Government Services computer centres will offer improved facilities and state of the art service to the Ministry of Revenue, which has relocated to Oshawa, and the head office of the Ontario health insurance plan, relocating to Kingston. To provide the expertise and support for these services, my ministry will be relocating 50 employees in our computer and telecommunications service division to Kingston early this summer.

We are not only looking towards the external application of computer services. We are a progressive-thinking ministry which is also using new internal methods for improvement of services and savings of administration dollars. We plan to share this knowledge with our sister ministries throughout the government. We hope this sharing and leadership in the electronic age will return our dollars and time invested many times over.

This Legislative Building has been a great source of pride to the people of Ontario. I take real pleasure in playing some small role in ensuring that we have a continuing program designed to retain the dignity, heritage and security it conveys to all of us.

We are also in the midst of designing a gift shop to be located in the main foyer of the Legislative Building. The number of requests we have had from visitors to Queen's Park suggests this type of service will be extremely well received, not only by Ontarians but also by visitors from all over the world.

In the past 12 months or so we have provided improved accommodation for our sister ministries in everything from fish hatcheries to multi-purpose office towers. We have opened facilities in the northern, eastern and western areas of Ontario. These facilities will allow the ministries to offer the people of Ontario up-to-date services in modern and efficient facilities.

In this fiscal year we will be officially opening a state of the art office complex housing the Ministry of Revenue in Oshawa. The Macdonald-Cartier building will provide a new home for the head office of the Ontario health insurance plan in Kingston. Ground-breaking and construction will begin on a $50-million Ottawa courthouse. The St. Catharines courthouse, which I mentioned before, was opened earlier and will provide a quality of service not possible in the former facility. Our accommodation division will continue to upgrade and respond to the needs of our client ministries and of Ontarians right across the province.

Some honourable members might recall that things got a little cool around here last winter when the boiler failed and shut down our heating system. We are now hooked into the Toronto District Heating Corp. steam plant and will be providing a safer, more efficient method of heating for the entire Queen's Park complex.

We most certainly have not forgotten the direct services we deliver to the people of Ontario. We are dedicated to searching for new and improved approaches to bringing the people of this province and their government closer together.

We have seen the effect that the blue pages have had on providing the taxpayers of Ontario with the necessary information to contact their government toll free across Ontario. The blue pages were just the first step in providing total access to the provincial government by citizens in every corner of this province. We are now looking at the implementation of one-window information centres outside Metropolitan Toronto. They will be designed to offer the same personalized service that is now available to the citizens residing close to Queen's Park.

Mr. Chairman, as you might have noticed, I am proud of the accomplishments of the men and women of the Ministry of Government Services over the past year and the approaches we are taking to the 1983-84 fiscal year. I am especially proud of the fact that we have been able to do all the things I have outlined above, along with a great many more that time does not permit me to expand on, while at the same reducing our overall staff complement across the board.

I would like to close by offering my thanks for your kind attention and by saying once more how appreciative I am of having the opportunity to serve the people of Ontario for yet another year. I look forward to hearing the comments of the honourable members opposite, considering any new ideas presented and having a full discussion of the expenditures of the Ministry of Government Services for the year 1983-84.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order: I do not recall that the second paragraph on page 13 was read. I wonder if it forms part of the minister's statement, because I think the information there is rather important. If it is just an oversight, I am sure we can just add it to the record; but I think the ideas expressed in that paragraph are certainly worthwhile.

Hon. Mr. Wiseman: Which paragraph is it?

The Deputy Chairman: It begins, "We are currently preparing a master plan." It was not read.

Hon. Mr. Wiseman: I missed page 13, did I?

The Deputy Chairman: No. You missed reading the second paragraph on page 13.

Hon. Mr. Wiseman: Oh, I thought I had done that.

12 noon

The Deputy Chairman: On page 13, you read the first paragraph, as the member for Prescott-Russell pointed out.

Hon. Mr. Wiseman: We are currently preparing a master plan which will address matters of refurbishing, repairs and improvements while at the same time maintaining the historic and architectural values ingrained in the legislative building of Ontario. I will be discussing this plan with my colleagues on both sides of this chamber in the near future and presenting the completed plan to the House at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. Haggerty: I want to thank the minister for his comments.

Perhaps I will repeat some of the things I said last year during estimates when discussing some of the problems and issues I feel he should be directing his ministry towards. I believe we discussed last year's estimates on October 22, 1982. My comments dealt primarily with government programs and the financial programs that should follow.

I was concerned about the deficit spending of the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller). I am again concerned about the deficit spending this year, which he has estimated at $2.7 billion. I am drawing a parallel with previous Treasurers of Ontario. Back in the 1960s and 1970s they showed some prudent fiscal management. I think 1970 was the last year we had a surplus in Ontario and we have continued to spend and spend.

I would also bring to members' attention a study done by the C. D. Howe Institute, a nonprofit organization that does research into Canadian economic policy with an emphasis on fiscal policy issues. I suggested some of the recommendations to the minister so he could improve on his fiscal management and policy on issues related to the Ministry of Government Services.

Listening to the minister's opening remarks this morning I realize there is no doubt he has followed up on some of those suggestions. I commend him for definitely cutting back on expenditures in specific areas. One area the official opposition has been pointing to for a number of years is the establishment of a central purchasing agency for the government. I believe the minister mentioned the word "window." They were establishing a purchasing agency which would buy certain things of a similar nature that could be used in other ministries. I think this is the right approach.

We have been suggesting to the minister for a number of years that he should follow some central purchasing practice. In the long run there is a saving to the taxpayer and to the government. The money saved can be spent in other areas of higher priority. I commend the minister for moving in this area.

I have tried to get my thoughts in line with some of the items in the estimates, in particular the summary of estimates and the proposals put forward. I have found difficulty with some of them because there are about three areas in which we find different figures to contend with.

In 1982-83 the estimates were $365 million, yet in public accounts the figures were changed considerably. In the preliminary public accounts for 1982-83 I believe the actual expenditure was $383,937,000 and the appropriations were almost $390 million, in round figures. I suggest the variance in these figures may be confusing, particularly to members on this side, in determining what the correct figure is.

I want to draw the minister's attention to the word "appropriations." I think of the manner in which the American governments handle their government expenditures. They use the word "appropriations" rather than "estimates." When "estimates" is used the figures can be juggled around and the Treasurer can say, "We were close," or something.

It is amazing the way the Americans deal with the problem. We are dealing with the minister's estimates now. There is no doubt the money has been committed for expenditure in this year without being authorized by members of the Legislature. The expenditure has been authorized by the minister himself and the cabinet. I suggest a proper fiscal management policy, a program that would be more acceptable to the people of Ontario, would be to bring in a budget a year in advance as they do in the United States; then the House could deal with certain matters and could advise the government where it should spend the money.

The minister may consider his approach to expenditures on certain capital projects to be the right one; however, other members in the House, even on the Conservative side, will say, "No, I do not think you should be spending it in this way." I think the main benefit of the American method of fiscal management is that members—

PEACE DEMONSTRATIONS

Mr. R. F. Johnston: On a point of privilege, Mr. Chairman: I really regret interrupting the honourable member—

Mr. Haggerty: I can see it on his face.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: I do, very seriously, and I will only take a minute or two.

At this very moment on the front lawn, down by the statue of Sir John A. Macdonald, a group of peace activists is trying to establish a peace camp as has been done in Ottawa. Under direction from the Ministry of Government Services the security guards are ordering that the pup tent which has been established be torn down. They say they will allow it to stay up if the minister so indicates. Therefore, I am going to ask him to do so; and if not to explain why not. It seems to me there is a basic infringement of their rights. I do not understand why the pup tent cannot be put up. I would like an explanation from the minister.

Hon. Mr. Wiseman: If the member for Erie (Mr. Haggerty) would go on, I will find out from my staff a little bit more of the background on this and report.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: I understand they are being treated as trespassers at the moment, and I think that is pretty offensive.

Hon. Mr. Wiseman: If the member would go on with his remarks, I will find that out.

[Later]

Hon. Mr. Wiseman: Mr. Chairman, before we hear the opening remarks of the NDP member, I would like to answer the point of privilege raised by the member for Scarborough West.

Some time ago, as the member knows, we had a similar case, where a group wanted to put a Johnny-on-the-spot out on the lawn, and we said at that time it was our policy not to do that.

In this case I wanted to make quite clear, before I responded at all, that this group had a permit. They have not, I am told, obtained a permit from the city of Toronto. That is upsetting the Metropolitan Toronto police, and the member opposite who asked the question knows full well that we have not allowed tents and things of that sort to be on the front lawn since I have been the minister. I do not think anyone was ever allowed to do that.

Our staff are very co-operative, as they have been with all demonstrations around this building. We will set up microphones to be helpful to them. In this case I understand nothing was done about the permit from the city of Toronto and nothing was done to contact our staff about setting up microphones. So they will have to remove the tent. We will be pleased to set up the microphones if they wish us to do so, but I wish they would follow the rules, which I think everyone has become very familiar with. They know our ministry will assist them if they go about it in the proper way.

I hope that answers the member's—

Mr. R. F. Johnston: It does not exactly. If I might—

Mr. Chairman: We cannot go into that. You have had your point of privilege.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: No, I want to continue my point of privilege. You can throw me out of here if you want and continue this kind of attitude. The minister's officers would not even let me come up here and get his answer before they were going to call the Metro cops and evict those people.

Mr. Chairman: Order. The member will have his opportunity to question the minister as soon as he finishes responding to the member for Erie.

Interjection.

Mr. Chairman: Please do not turn on his microphone. I am not recognizing the member. Would the minister care to respond? Not to the point of privilege; the member has had his opportunity.

Hon. Mr. Wiseman: I think I have answered the member. I told him the tent has to be removed. In future I suggest if he knows of a demonstration like this, he should advise the group of the proper steps to take. There are proper steps. If they would like our staff to set up a microphone, and there are no other demonstrations planned ahead of them—

Mr. R. F. Johnston: They don't want a microphone.

Hon. Mr. Wiseman:—because the odd time we get a group that has not set up a demonstration in advance and wants to bump out a group that has; we take the one that has gone through the proper procedure. In this case, if the member wants an answer from me, the answer is they have to remove the tent. If they want to demonstrate, that is their business, providing they follow all the rules.

Mr. Chairman: Would the minister continue with his response to the remarks of the member for Erie.

Mr. Philip: I thought the minister's normal procedure was that both opposition critics would speak.

Mr. Chairman: Would you proceed then?

Mr. Philip: Mr. Chairman, by way of continuing on the point of privilege under my opening remarks, I would like to suggest to the minister he may have misunderstood the point my colleague the member for Scarborough West was trying to make. He had advised this group of the proper procedures, as any of us do when we are advised of a demonstration. We are all concerned that demonstrations, particularly peace demonstrations, are peaceful and follow normal procedures that are set out. However, what I believe my colleague was trying to say to the minister was he had asked that nothing be done until he had an opportunity, a period of 10 minutes, to discuss this with the minister, but even during that period of time the forces, if one wants, were being active.

I can understand his anger. A 10-minute delay until he could discuss it with the minister was not an unreasonable request. I hope the minister will look into this further and report back to us.

Mr. Haggerty: I was dealing with the appropriations procedures established in the United States Congress. I suggest their approach to government expenditure is something this government should consider. Even changes recommended by procedural affairs and so on should be considered by the government. I think we should deal with current estimates, not those already adopted or planned this year without having been authorized by the Legislature itself.

We do everything about a year behind. We should be dealing with things for the year ahead. Then the government, in bringing about its expenditures, could set the stage for the direction the economy will flow in. It would be of benefit not only to the people in the chamber but people outside—the private sector would know the direction in which the government is programming its expenditures.

In the long term there would be a spinoff to the private sector and everyone would share in it. Not only that but the jobs can be better predicted than they are here. In the minister's speech he said jobs are the most important thing facing this government. I think it is even more important to everyone outside this chamber who is unemployed. There has to be a clear-cut direction for the government to move in; more than the new employment expansion and development program where persons will be employed for a maximum of three months or six months and then will go on to unemployment insurance. Then we seem to forget about them.

I suggested to the minister that he move those capital projects up a year or two years so we could create additional jobs for at least two or three years of steady employment, particularly in construction, since the government is building new buildings throughout Ontario. We should be looking at the American side in budgeting the programs and the different ministries in the province. I think it is worthwhile to take a good close look. It would give the opposition members, and even the back-benchers on the other side, an opportunity to have some say in where capital projects should be constructed in Ontario.

I am not quite convinced when I look at the minister's estimates that he has spent all the money estimated last year for capital projects. It was a good figure, over $70 million. I do not know if he has spent that. There is nothing in his budget or estimate papers or in his comments this morning that indicates whether he has spent that money.

This year, estimated capital projects will be about $34 million—almost a $37-million change from last year. I draw that to the minister's attention. There are so many vacancies in his approach to numbers that opposition members, or even government members, cannot tell whether he has spent the money. There are so many different ways one can look at those figures. They vary so much it raises some concern for me to find out if he has spent the money.

I believe I mentioned the public accounts where the appropriations—I use the word "appropriations"—were almost $390 million, some $15 million more than what the estimates were. There is nothing in there to tell me where that expenditure really occurred. If we are going to be dealing with taxpayers' money, I suggest that full disclosure should be one of the major concerns of the ministry. We should have disclosure of certain areas where the money is going to be spent.

The Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow) has an excellent program. One can go almost five years ahead and know pretty well where the road expenditures and capital projects are going to be developed or constructed or will commence to be constructed. This is good and I think this is one of the policies this government has sent out, for example, to local municipalities on their five-year forecasting for capital projects. This ministry could develop such a program, so that we would have more knowledge and better views of the minister's department. That is one of the areas I am concerned about. It is an area that requires some improvement.

In connection with the NEED program: The minister has indicated he wants additional jobs created in Ontario. We should be taking a look at his long-range program on capital projects. Can we perhaps advance them so we could create jobs in the construction industry that would provide additional jobs for a period of one, two or three years, and allow the private sector to catch up? By that time, we may have a better job opportunity climate in Ontario. We are looking at some 551,000 people being employed in the province.

With those few comments I will give the minister time to deal with some of the questions I have raised, and we will wait for the New Democratic Party critic to bring forth his ideas. Then we will get into the bread and butter issues of the minister's estimates.

Mr. Philip: I appreciate an opportunity to participate in these debates. I am not going to make a long opening statement because I would rather deal with items one at a time under the appropriate vote.

There are four ministries for which I act as the critic, and in dealing with this ministry I always feel a little frustrated. I feel a little like a priest who is hearing the confession of a surrogate sinner, if one can imagine such a thing. This ministry is often in a position where it has little control over certain policy matters. It is really carrying out the sins of other ministers, so to speak; therefore, it is hard to find blame in many cases or even to offer constructive alternatives when many of the problems this minister faces are really not of his own making.

I was pleased to read the statement of the minister of April 22 concerning the pilot project to determine economies and improvement in telecommunication systems. However, I would appreciate it if we could go into more details on this study; more specifically, when it will be completed and exactly how much is expected to be saved.

In the statement he made in the House the minister alluded to the fact that private sector corporations have shown savings of up to 25 per cent in telecommunications costs; however, there has been no indication of exactly how much he is projecting will be saved by this study.

Since the ministry has announced that certain people, at least members of the Legislature and certain levels of government, will now be switching to the much faster and more convenient push button phone system, I think it would be interesting to find out if there have been any studies in terms of productivity to find out exactly what the savings can be by switching to that kind of telephone system over the old, obsolete and slow dial system.

I imagine productivity could be increased substantially in certain offices; I look at the savings I have experienced in my riding office that has the push button phone and which I hope will now be realized in my parliamentary office.

I must say I find the opening statement of the minister alarming. I find it alarming inasmuch as it is so general one really wonders at times what he is talking about.

I am particularly concerned about these broad, general statements about privatization of government. We have had this happening in the health care field where the Minister of Health (Mr. Grossman) has not been prepared to table contracts, such as the one with Extendicare over Queensway General Hospital. He has not tabled any cost-benefit analysis.

From some of the information we have been able to get out of places like Hawkesbury where this privatization is taking place, we do know it is taking place by a reduction of staff and, one would suspect, probably by a reduction of service. I find that alarming in the health care area, but I also find it alarming in other areas of government services.

Nor do we have any kind of assurances this privatization will not take place by the process of using nonunion labour. I would certainly like the minister to address himself to that question. If any savings are accrued by this privatization, is it really on the backs of the public employees, who through their union movement have fought for decent wages? Will it be on the backs of nonunionized, underpaid workers that this government plans to make this kind of saving?

In contrast to the route the government is taking let me suggest, in particular when the minister is talking about the need for co-ordinating services, that one area I would like to see the government look at, and I would be interested to know whether or not the minister has had any studies on it, is the co-ordination of travel.

When one considers the great number of flights taken by government officials, by officials of the various ministries, the ministers themselves and members of the Legislature, one can imagine that there could be considerable savings by having an office to co-ordinate travel. Other governments have done this. It would be interesting to find out exactly what savings have been made by those governments which have a co-ordinated government office for this purpose. We would also like to look at whether or not it might make sense for such an office to take over from the Ministry of Natural Resources in negotiating contracts for charter flights and for the private craft that are being used by ministers and occasionally, I suppose, by some of the senior officials of the government.

While I am on the topic of travel, I find interesting, and I would like this minister's view on it, the whole area of limousines. My colleague the member for Port Arthur (Mr. Foulds) has placed on the order paper on at least two occasions fairly detailed questions on the use of limousines by cabinet ministers. It is interesting to note this government has failed to reply to those questions.

What is this government afraid of? Why are they afraid to tell us exactly what limousines are being used, why and by whom? Are they senior officials? Are they deputy ministers, political advisers? Who exactly are using these limousines; when; and what is the total cost? We really do not have a breakdown on such things as staff costs for the manning of these limousines, food costs while on the road, which ministries are making the most use of them and in what way and so forth.

Similarly, I would like to deal with the whole area that is spelled out in the minister's statement about the use of private rental space by the various ministries. I am particularly astounded by the Ministry of Energy's communications branch on the ground floor of Queen's Park Place. That is a very expensive building. I can understand that perhaps the Minister of Energy

(Mr. Welch) wants to go first class, but I would ask what criteria are used by the Ministry of Government Services in deciding what office space is rented and where. One wonders why they need that kind of luxury space in that kind of building. What kind of buck are the taxpayers paying for that?

If I am not mistaken, the Ministry of Energy's communications branch has been accommodated in rented and leased space on the ground floor of Queen's Park Place at 62 Wellesley Street West. This is during a time of restraint. Would it not be more appropriate for this office to be located in a standard, government office building?

I would also like the details on the cost of accommodation compared to government owned and operated space. This whole thrust towards privatization has to be measured in terms of cost, and I suspect the thrusts this ministry and other ministries are taking, in the long run if not in the short run, are actually costing the taxpayers more money than going some of the more traditional routes.

The ground floor space in the building I am talking about was clearly designed to accommodate a service commercial establishment—that is, a convenience store. It was not designed as a communications or propaganda office, if you want. As an indication of how luxurious this accommodation is, when the suites in this building were first offered for sale in 1981 they were placed on the market at from $180,000 to $286,000.

I would also ask the minister to bring us up to date on what is happening to the east-of-Bay land. Is the Ministry of Government Services, in conjunction with the city of Toronto, actively working on that development plan for this property, other than the new Young Men's Christian Association, which is currently under construction? What is the latest update on east of Bay, and how does this minister's plan for the use of space fit into this?

I also want to have an update on the memo from the ministry of December 23, I believe it is, on parking. It says: "It should be realized that any long-term solution to parking problems can only be obtained when considered in conjunction with the many other associated problems with regard to this building: the ongoing changing occupancy in use, ongoing proposals, renovations, aesthetics," and so forth.

One assumes that the ongoing problems are the ongoing problems of the use of various types of real estate, in this area anyway, for government purposes. I would like to know where the government is going in this regard, where the various projects and rental space in private-enterprise buildings in the area fit into this and where we are going to have, if you want, the bodies that are using the various parking spaces the minister is concerned about.

A number of proposals or recommendations were adopted in that memo: authorize ticketing of unauthorized vehicles; obtain special status permitting government staff to issue tickets; relocate the kiosks, especially at the southeast entrance; issue compulsory identification to authorized parkers; improved directional safety; restrict parking signage; relocate authorized parking; instruct MGS staff regarding enforcement, and communicate progress to user group.

I hope the minister can provide a detailed update on each of those points and that we can deal with them accordingly. What is happening in each of the recommendations? I recognize that the minister was kind enough to write me a letter on March 11, 1983. That is my birthday, so it is a birthday gift to me. It gives me some information, but I hope he will give us more details on that.

I found it interesting in the minister's broad, general statement about improving access to public buildings that he throws around a figure of $2 million that has been spent, yet he does not say where it was spent, when it was spent and the time frame. One has to ask what the $2 million really means. It is a meaningless figure unless you talk specifically about what was spent, where and how and what they intend to spend in the future.

I am sorry, I guess the $2-million figure came from the minister's statement of April 12, rather than the statement he gave in the House. It was a statement dated April 12, 1983, with a heading, "Improving Access to Public Buildings for Handicapped Persons." By the way, the reference to $2 million was in the third paragraph.

I also found the next two paragraphs interesting. They state: "To help co-ordinate these efforts and to provide a one-window service to client ministries and the disabled, the ministry has set up a barrier-free-design office."

"This office is in the design services branch and will provide technical advice on adapting existing buildings and designs of the new buildings. It will also keep an up-to-date record of new developments in this field."

I would find it interesting if the minister would tell us whether or not there is now an inventory of buildings in terms of what needs to be done to provide accessibility for handicapped persons and what the role of this new office will be to see that those that are designated as being insufficient will have work done on them to bring them up to required standards of accessibility. Furthermore, what is the time frame? What are we talking about in terms of costs for each of those? What is the time frame on the various projects that need to be done?

It may well be this office is still in the process of setting up that information, but it would be useful to have that kind of statement from the ministry.

I found a few other statements by the minister rather interesting. He talks about the shredding of government documents and the fact he has been able to save some money by the recycling—

Mr. Boudria: How about the shredding of budgets?

Mr. Philip: The shredding of budgets; I do not think that falls under this particular minister's worry. There are other documents he is concerned about which, of course, would have to be shredded.

We had a fascinating exercise with the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow) over confidentiality of records a number of years ago. Finally, he put into the act the minister's responsibility if private, confidential, medical information were accidentally leaked to insurance companies or others who might profit by it. The ministry could be held responsible for it.

I am wondering what the security system is that the minister talks about. What is the responsibility if there is a leak? What are the kinds of documents he sees as having a high security priority? What are the ones he has to take particular security with?

When we develop a security system, as the minister will well recognize, we do not have a whole bunch of people going around protecting everything. If we do, it is very costly and invariably whatever really is high-priority security gets through. What is his target in terms of security? What are the kinds of things he is trying to protect? It seems as though he is saying everything is going to be shredded. Maybe I have misinterpreted the statements by the minister because they were very general, but what is he targeting in terms of the shredding? What happens if some of those documents are leaked? Who is responsible for that and what are the repercussions?

I found the minister's statement on buy

Canadian very general. First of all, he does not really say that in buying Canadian we are buying from Canadian-owned-and-operated businesses. I assume he means his buy Canadian policy would include Canadian-based companies owned by multinational, American or other foreign interests. I am wondering if there is any distinction he makes in the buy Canadian policy in this regard.

12:40 p.m.

I also find it interesting that the US federal government has a policy whereby one third of its expenditures on procurement is directed to small businesses. I am wondering whether the minister has looked into—

Mr. Boudria: Like John Eakins's bill.

Mr. Philip: Yes. I have not had an opportunity to study the bill of the member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Eakins) in great detail, but I have looked at what the US federal government has done.

One of the interesting things we find is that the small corporations in Canada, by and large, are owned by Canadians, whereas as we get into the larger corporations there is a larger preponderance of foreign ownership. One would think that in keeping with the minister's buy Canadian policy—which one assumes is part of a general philosophical feeling he and I both share of being masters in our house, to repeat an old cliché—he would have a policy of encouraging small business, which would be encouraging businesses that are more likely to be owned by Canadians or by people living in Ontario. Therefore, in a sense, in that way we would be sharing the profits of our taxes with our own people.

There has been renewed interest in Minaki Lodge. I am not going to deal with that now, but—

Mr. Boudria: Forty-five million dollars.

Mr. Philip: Yes, $45 million, as I said on Metro Morning yesterday and as the member for Renfrew North (Mr. Conway) and I were discussing there yesterday.

The Minaki of jails has to be Burwash. The only difference is that at least Minaki now has a few rich businessmen who are using Minaki, whereas Burwash has the beautiful basketball courts but nobody is using them. Also, Bison is the analogy.

I am sure the minister is embarrassed that this great white elephant—another white elephant of the north in this case—happens to have been built and is sitting there vacant. I am sure that somewhere down the line the Minister of Tourism and Recreation (Mr. Baetz) will come along and say: "Burwash is a great site for Minaki II. We have a luxurious gymnasium there. We will have to expand it. We will spend another $45 million on it. We will have another group of rich businessmen using the jail rather than the people for whom it was intended."

One really has to wonder. The rationale in closing Burwash, as I recall—I was not the critic at that time—was that it was inhumane for people to come a great distance to see their relatives in this site. Now we have seen the closing of the jails in Sudbury—and I am sorry the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Leluk) has left, because I did not get to ask my supplementary in response to his answer to the question I asked him in the House today.

We are trying to be "humane." So we close Burwash because people have to go too far to visit their relatives. Then we have Sudbury. But we close Sudbury, 20 miles away from Burwash, and ship those prisoners 600 miles to Thunder Bay. If we are going to be humane to people, why is it any more humane for northerners whose relatives would have been in a jail in Sudbury to go to Thunder Bay than for me, if my sister or brother, heaven forbid, should end up in jail, to visit him or her in Sudbury?

We seem to have two standards. We do not want these poor southerners to go all the way to Sudbury to visit their relatives, but it is okay for the poor suckers in Sudbury to go all the way to Thunder Bay to visit their relatives.

Now, if I were a northerner—and I am, because I represent northern Etobicoke, so I have a certain empathy for the north—I would say there seems to be discrimination against the penal population in northern Ontario. The government has empathy for the poor people in southern Ontario travelling long distances, but the poor people in northern Ontario are rugged and are supposed to be used to this kind of thing; they can go over to Thunder Bay to visit their relatives.

What is the real purpose of this? What is the minister going to do with the thing? Is he going to build another jail in Sudbury? Why can he not open up Burwash so the people in Sudbury will not have to travel that great distance?

The Minister of Correctional Services talked today about all the great things he is doing to open up more space. He is not opening up more space; he is simply crowding more people in. If you look at the renovations that are being done, they are taking away recreation space, storage space and other kinds of space and simply cramming more bunks and cell space into it. Yet here we have Burwash sitting empty—rotting, if you want—while people and officials and so forth are travelling back and forth from Sudbury to Thunder Bay or, at the very least, to North Bay.

Those are a few of the comments I would like to make. I have some other comments in greater detail about media studios and a few other things.

In closing, I would like to invite the minister to see how a party that knows how to run things in a businesslike fashion can run something. I invite the minister to be my guest—I will even buy the button for him—at the New Democratic Party spring fair, where he will see a great amount of enterprise, where he will be more than welcome along with the 8,000 or 10,000 other people who will show up on Sunday, where he will be treated royally to bands and other entertainment and, indeed, where the member for York South (Mr. Rae), our leader, will no doubt have a special song for him.

Hon. Mr. Wiseman: Mr. Chairman, after that last commercial I do not want to lump all NDP people together but, being a small businessman from Lanark, I have never found they are very good at doing day-to-day business with the small business people whom the member for Etobicoke says we should be looking after. Many of them have never had to meet a payroll, as I have myself. But I could be wrong; you might find one or two in the caucus who had done that.

Mr. Philip: Mr. Chairman, on a point of privilege: I recall the day in this House when that kind of silly statement was made by another minister. At that time I asked all the people in the House who had business experience to stand up, and there were more who stood up from the NDP than from the other two parties.

Hon. Mr. Wiseman: Probably if the honourable member tried that today, it might not work out that way for him. However, I do not want to be provocative before a long weekend.

I would like to try to answer some of the questions. The member for Erie (Mr. Haggerty) asked about the difference in our capital allocation going from approximately $90 million in 1982-83 down to $44.2 million this year. That is quite simple to answer, I believe: It was because of two big capital projects, the Oshawa Revenue building and the Ontario health insurance plan building in Kingston.

Mr. Chairman: Fine building.

Hon. Mr. Wiseman: The Chairman says it is a fine building.

Mr. Chairman: What are we going to do with Pine Ridge school?

Hon. Mr. Wiseman: He will be able to ask me questions on that later.

I do agree with the member for Erie that it would be nice if we could have a five-year plan. We are working towards that. Just to share this with the honourable members, we do have a different system than we had a few years ago in that we take all the projects each ministry has on its wish list, if one wants to call it that, to the policy fields and the policy fields help us decide from the allocation they have which ones are given the high priority.

12:50 p.m.

I think the members know we have to be a bit flexible on that, because what is high priority today may not be high priority five years down the road, for many of the reasons the member for Etobicoke (Mr. Philip) mentioned.

We may need a new correctional institution or something of that sort that we could not foresee, or perhaps that we found was of higher priority than some of the other buildings we had on there. We have to be a bit flexible but we are working and trying. It would be a lot simpler for my staff if they had a five-year plan.

I will go over some matters briefly and the members may want to come back at our next sitting to get into more detail on them. As far as the push-button phones for the members' offices are concerned, we gave all the information to the Board of Internal Economy and I know, from using one myself, it will speed up the operations of our gals in the office and of ourselves.

To give a dollar saving on that is pretty hard, as I think the member knew when he asked the question, but listening to the standing committee on members' services, I think everybody there felt it would be a great help, not only to them but to their office assistants.

I was a little disappointed the member for Etobicoke thought our statement did not spell out a little more about what we were going to do. I listened to his seven or eight questions after that. If he had listened to and read the statement, he would have seen we covered those in it.

Maybe the statement did not mean as much to him as it did to me but, being a businessman, any time I can show savings such as we have in there in different areas—I did not have time to show all the savings we have made—and at the same time keep our staff at a lower level, then I think that is running a business in a very efficient way.

To answer the statement that we were so general in a statement like this, if the member wanted me to take a couple of hours, I guess I could have done that, but I would sooner have the dialogue back and forth so the member asks the questions he knows are bothering him, to which I hope we can give the answers.

As far as wages go, in all our contracts we use the fair-wage guidelines. We have not had much trouble with that over the period I have been with Government Services, so we will continue to use that government policy. We use fair-wage guidelines in determining the wages we pay for jobs.

The member knows the Ministry of Natural Resources looks after planes. I will only say, as one minister, that if we are going to a particular area we do try to double up. In some cases the Premier (Mr. Davis) feels only a certain number can go on a plane for safety reasons. I guess he does not want us all wiped out in one shot if it happened to go down. I could be wrong, but I believe the number travelling on any one plane at any one time is something like three ministers of the crown.

Many members make reference to limousines. The car I drive at home is better than the car that drives me around when I am here. I really do not believe the people of Lanark think I drive a limousine. I drive a Buick. I drive an Oldsmobile here but the one I have at home has many more features than the one I have here. I am sure the people of Lanark do not believe it is a limousine. I could not afford one anyway.

As far as giving the cost of all these is concerned, I have seen that on the order paper different times. We can give the cost for our ministry, but I do not have all the other ministries at my fingertips.

We are pursuing the east-of-Bay project with the mayor of Toronto; in fact, yesterday afternoon we had another meeting on that. We are sticking to our guns for the million square feet of office space for the future across the other side. Members have heard me say many times that is what we want. We are getting more co-operation now, and it looks as if we will have something settled in the near future on that site. I will be able to report back to the Legislature when that happens, but at this time I do not want to say too much more because we are still in negotiations.

Mr. Haggerty: I thought you had the footings in already.

Hon. Mr. Wiseman: No. We will have them in pretty fast if we get that million square feet; some of them anyway.

As to the $2 million for our handicapped, referring to the statement the honourable member mentioned I made in the House, we have done a lot of work, and I think the member knows that, around this building and others. He wondered what the officer is doing right now. I spoke to him yesterday and we are working on another area. For those who have a hearing problem, we will have phones located in this building as well. The phone will be marked, and no one will know the person has a problem, other than by the sign above it saying it is a phone that can be adjusted to a person's hearing needs. We will have them in this building and other buildings throughout these complexes.

As the member knows, just around this building we built the ramp at the front. I know that was in years gone by, but if he looks around he can see the washrooms here were done in last year's budget to give access to the handicapped. One just needs to look around this building. It is very difficult to have a lot of services here for the handicapped because of the age of the building and the elevation at the front and so on, but we have done it. We have done it on all our retrofit buildings, and of course it is a must in all our new buildings, such as the new courthouse that opened in St. Catharines yesterday.

The shredding of documents is another saving we are making. We do not have to keep them in storage. We used to have to pay in advance $140,000 a year. Now we are shredding them, and we are putting them back into recycled paper. I do not have to tell anyone that I hope something up to 1,000 tons of recycled paper will go in to make up this $140,000 this year. The $12,000 we are paid is another add-on, so we are really saving $152,000 in that program and may be helping not to destroy so many trees.

I think everyone in this House knows I am fully committed to the buy Canadian policy. I know the member for Prescott-Russell (Mr. Boudria) knows that. If members read the statement I made, it showed that 100 per cent of the 1,100 items in the sundries end are purchased in Canada and 95 per cent of those are manufactured in Canada. Only about five per cent, I am told, are bought offshore and assembled here. They are all assembled or sold through Canadian manufacturers or suppliers.

We have set up a procurement officer—we give him another title in the statement—to work along this line, to show where we can buy more

Canadian products. We have gone to trade fairs. There was one held here recently at the Skyline and we had our people there talking on how to sell to government. We found people who manufacture certain items we did not know they could manufacture were in fact manufacturing in Canada. So it was helpful to us and to them to have this dialogue with us.

We will continue to work along with the Ministry of Industry and Trade. As I said in my statement, we know that if we buy Canadian it means more jobs for our fellow Canadians, those who are out of work, and we have a responsibility in that area.

Regarding Burwash, if the honourable member knows anyone we could sell that to we would be pleased to hear from him. We have tried, since I have been in the Ministry of Government Services, to assist the people in the area—through Sudbury 2001, I believe it was—and the member for Sudbury (Mr. Martel) was supporting them. We helped when they had the goat farm and we have allowed farmers to farm the farm land. On the part across the road east of the entrance, we have given a lease to the native people to develop it. I understand that development is taking place.

Regarding Burwash, we are actively trying to get someone in there. We have had some of our sister ministries up to have a look at it. I hope we will be successful. I know the member for Etobicoke would like to see something for the benefit of all Ontario, but he would not oppose something that would be of benefit to the member for the area, the member for Sudbury (Mr. Gordon), and members from his own side of the House.

We are actively working on that, and we look forward to our next session.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Wiseman, the committee of supply reported progress.

The House adjourned at 1:03 p.m.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS IN ORDERS AND NOTICES

PSYCHIATRIC PATIENTS

1. Mr. McClellan: Will the Minister of Health provide the following data on patients in the psychiatric units of the general hospitals:

1. What are the methods of admission for each of the psychiatric units of the general hospitals in 1980 and 1981?

2. What are the numbers of patients currently in psychiatric units of the general hospitals?

3. What are the numbers of admissions for each hospital by age, sex and diagnosis for the year 1981-82?

4. What are the numbers of discharges for each hospital by age, sex and diagnosis for the year 1981-82?

5. What is the number and classification of staff for each of the psychiatric units of the general hospitals in 1981-82? [Tabled April 19, 1983]

See sessional paper 50.

2. Mr. McClellan: Will the Minister of Health provide the following data on patients in the 10 provincial psychiatric hospitals:

1. What are the methods of admission for each of the provincial psychiatric hospitals in 1980 and 1981?

2. What are the numbers of patients currently in provincial psychiatric hospitals by age and diagnosis?

3. What are the numbers of admissions for each hospital by age, sex and diagnosis for the year 1981-82?

4. What are the numbers of discharges for each hospital by age, sex and diagnosis for the year 1981-82?

5. What is the number and classification of staff for each of the 10 hospitals in 1981-82? [Tabled April 19, 1983]

See sessional paper 51.

QUEEN STREET MENTAL HEALTH CENTRE

3. Mr. McClellan: Will the Minister of Health advise the House how many involuntary patients at the Queen Street Mental Health Centre have wandered out of the centre without official leave during January, February and March, 1983? [Tabled April 19, 1983]

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The number of AWOL patients involuntary in 1983: January, 12; February, 16; March, 12; quarterly total, 40.

NUMBER OF HOSPITAL BEDS

4. Mr. McClellan: Will the Minister of Health table the number of hospital beds as of March 31, 1983, broken down into: (1) active treatment beds; (2) chronic care beds; (3) extended care nursing home beds; and (4) extended care homes for the aged beds? [Tabled April 19, 1983]

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The number of beds as of March 31, 1983, is as follows:

Acute treatment beds (including psychiatric), 36,636; chronic care beds (including rehabilitation), 12,955;

Extended care—nursing home, 28,941; homes for the aged, 12,881.

MENTAL HEALTH SERVICES

5. Mr. McClellan: Will the Minister of Health advise the House what detailed statistical information concerning mental health services in Ontario is routinely provided to Statistics Canada? [Tabled April 19, 1983]

See sessional paper 52.

INFORMATION ON MUNICIPALITIES

6. Mr. Eakins: Would the Minister of Industry and Trade supply the following information:

1. What was the cost to the ministry for production of the 1980 Profiles of Ontario/Canada Municipalities?

2. What was the cost to the ministry of the 1981 Profiles of Ontario/Canada Municipalities?

3. For each municipality in Ontario, would the minister provide the following information for the year 1982: (a) the number of plants established, (b) the number of jobs added; (c) the number of plants closed; (d) the number of jobs lost; and (e) the number of plant expansions?

4. For each municipality in Ontario, would the minister also provide the following information for 1982: (a) the amount and percentage of commercial/industrial taxes; (b) the amount and percentage of business taxes; (c) the average residential and farm property tax per household?

5. Since the ministry does not intend to publish a 1982 Profiles of Ontario Municipalities, when does the ministry intend to publish the 1983 Profiles of Ontario/Canada Municipalities? [Tabled April 20, 1983]

See sessional paper 53.

WORKERS' COMPENSATION BOARD

7. Mr. Di Santo: Will the Minister of Labour table the following information:

1. How many specialists are employed by the employment services branch of the vocational rehabilitation division of the Workers' Compensation Board?

2. How many injured workers have been placed by the specialists in each year since the inception of this service?

3. How many workers placed through this service have or are receiving wage supplements by the Workers' Compensation Board?

4. How long does the job placement normally continue after the workers' wage supplements cease? [Tabled April 20, 1983]

Hon. Mr. Ramsay: 1. Thirteen.

2. Two hundred and ninety-six workers were placed from March 2, 1982, the inception of the service, to March 31, 1983.

3. The board does not keep any statistics on this.

4. This information is not readily available, as it would be necessary to review thousands of files. However, after completion of the program and before a worker's case is closed, the counsellor follows up for an additional four to six weeks to ensure that there is no further problem. If a worker is later dismissed or laid off, and still cannot return to his or her previous trade or occupation, the case can be reopened at any time.

TRUST COMPANIES

10. Mr. Peterson: Would the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations indicate the number of persons whose employment with Seaway Trust has been terminated during the period January 7 to March 31, 1983? [Tabled April 20, 1983]

Hon. Mr. Elgie: During the period from January 7 to March 31, 1983, no employees were terminated at Seaway Trust Co.

11. Mr. Peterson: Would the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations indicate the number of persons whose employment with Greymac Trust has been terminated during the period January 7 to March 31, 1983? [Tabled April 20, 1983]

Hon. Mr. Elgie: During the period from January 7 to March 31, 1983, the employment of 16 persons, including eight persons in part-time positions, was terminated at Greymac Trust.

12. Mr. Peterson: Would the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations indicate the number of persons whose employment with Crown Trust has been terminated during the period January 7 to February 7, 1983? [Tabled April 20, 1983]

Hon. Mr. Elgie: During the period from January 7 to March 31, 1983, the employment of one person was terminated at Crown Trust.

13. Mr. Peterson: Would the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations indicate the number of persons whose employment with Kilderkin Investments has been terminated during the period January 7 to March 31, 1983? [Tabled April 20, 1983]

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I have been advised by the interim receiver and manager, the Clarkson Co. Ltd., that since they took control of Kilderkin Investments Ltd. on February 15, the employment of 24 employees has been terminated and that these include the 23 who were advised on April 26 by the Clarkson Co. that their services were no longer needed.

14. Mr. Peterson: Would the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations indicate the number of persons whose employment with Maysfield Property Management has been terminated during the period January 7 to March 31, 1983? [Tabled April 20, 1983]

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I have been advised by the interim receiver and manager, the Clarkson Co. Ltd., that since they took control of Maysfield Property Management Inc. on February 3, there may have been one or two persons who left or were terminated and that 305 employees continue to be gainfully employed working on the former Cadillac Fairview buildings.

18. Mr. Peterson: Would the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations indicate the cost to the ministry of the Morrison inquiry, pursuant to section 152 of the Loan and Trust Corporations Act? [Tabled April 20, 1983]

Hon. Mr. Elgie: As at March 31, 1983, $717,977 has been paid to cover the cost of the Morrison special investigation and inquiry pursuant to section 152 of the Loan and Trust Corporations Act.

19. Mr. Peterson: Would the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations advise of the terms and conditions set out in the offers of those other trust companies submitting offers for the management/acquisition of Crown Trust Co.? [Tabled April 20, 1983]

Hon. Mr. Elgie: The Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations is unable to provide the terms and conditions set out in the offers of other trust companies submitting offers for the management/acquisition of Crown Trust Co. because such offers were made on the basis that if not accepted, they would remain confidential.

20. Mr. Peterson: Would the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations set out the terms of reference by which the internal independence review of ministry staff and procedures, as announced, is to be guided? [Tabled April 20, 1983]

Hon. Mr. Elgie: The terms of reference by which the internal independent review of the ministry staff and procedures is being guided are "to review the adequacy of the administrative practices and procedures of the financial institutions division as to their adequacy to carry out the requirements of the loan and trust legislation."

21. Mr. Peterson: Would the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations set out the terms of reference by which the Residential Tenancy Commission SWAT team, as announced, is to be guided? [Tabled April 20, 1983]

Hon. Mr. Elgie: The group of residential tenancy commissioners and support staff referred to as a SWAT team was conceived by the commission in the fall of 1982, to deal primarily with a group of applications for rent review for the group of residential complexes formerly owned by Cadillac Fairview Corp., which were the subject of two resales in quick succession, involving Greymac Credit Corp. and Kilderkinn Investments Ltd.

Their terms of reference are, and they are guided in their considerations by exactly the same considerations that guide other residential tenancy commissioners and staff when dealing with other applications:

They are to investigate, hold hearings and hear evidence and argument, make findings and establish rents by orders, in accordance with the requirements of the Residential Tenancies Act and the Statutory Powers Procedure Act.

These commissioners and staff will be dealing with these particular applications as a group, since all of these complexes formed a part of the same transaction or group of transactions, with what appear to be the same basic facts, which will apply to each of the applications with respect to these complexes. By using the same group of commissioners and staff, the commission will be able to deal with these applications in a consistent way.

22. Mr. Peterson: Would the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations set out the terms of reference by which the five-person team "recruited to assist the registrar" as announced, is to be guided? [Tabled April 20, 1983]

Hon. Mr. Elgie: The advisory committee was established to provide guidance to the registrar from experienced businessmen on issues arising from the registrar's possession and control of Crown Trust Co., Greymac Trust Co. and Seaway Trust Co. and in particular the issues which must be considered in order to preserve or realize on the assets of these companies for the benefit of depositors, other creditors and shareholders in that order of priority.

23. Mr. Peterson: Would the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations advise the amount of funds advanced to Crown Trust Co. by Canada Deposit Insurance Corp. between January 7 and February 7, 1983? [Tabled April 20, 1983]

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Between January 7 and February 7, 1983, Canada Deposit Insurance Corp. did not advance any funds to Crown Trust Co.

24. Mr. Peterson: Would the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations advise the amount of funds advanced to Seaway Trust by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corp. between January 7 and March 31, 1983? [Tabled April 30, 1983]

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Between January 7 and March 31, 1983, Canada Deposit Insurance Corp. advanced funds to Seaway Trust Co. in the amount of $1,700,000.

25. Mr. Peterson: Would the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations advise the amount of funds advanced to Greymac Trust by Canada Deposit Insurance Corp. between January 7 and February 7, 1983? [Tabled April 20, 1983]

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Between January 7 and March 31, 1983, Canada Deposit Insurance Corp. advanced funds to Greymac Trust Co. in the amount of $30,600,000.

26. Mr. Peterson: Would the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations advise which person, persons, entity or entities, in his opinion, have the capacity to sell the Cadillac Fairview buildings, subject of the recent trust company controversy? [Tabled April 20, 1983]

Hon. Mr. Elgie: From the investigations that have been conducted, it would appear that the original 50 numbered companies are the owners of the Cadillac Fairview properties. The numbered companies have had their names changed as shown on the attached list. These companies have been constrained by an order made on February 3, 1983, by the Associate Chief Justice of the High Court in the Supreme Court of Ontario from in any way dealing with, disposing of or encumbering any interest any of them may hold in these properties pending the completion of litigation to trace and recover the moneys advanced by the three trust companies on the security of these properties.

In the Supreme Court of Ontario
No. 1380/83

27. Mr. Peterson: Would the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations advise by virtue of what statute, regulation or other authority does Central Trust have the authority to refuse payment on guaranteed investment certificates or similar evidences of Crown Trust indebtedness to a depositor, because the holder of the GIC, etc., is on a "restricted creditors list"? [Tabled April 20, 1983]

Hon. Mr. Elgie: The registrar and Central, on advice of counsel, has refused payment on guaranteed investment certificates or similar evidences of the indebtedness of Crown Trust to certain creditors where the money on deposit may be the subject of a counterclaim or may be set off against an amount owing in any suit involving those named on the list.

OPTED-OUT DOCTORS

28. Mr. McClellan: Will the Minister of Health table by region and by medical specialty the most current numbers and percentages of doctors opted out of OHIP? Will the minister also table the most recent figures on the total number of doctors opted out of OHIP, together with number and percentage of (1) general practitioners, and (2) specialists?

What is the dollar value, the number and the percentage of OHIP billings submitted on an opted-out basis in relation to total OHIP billings (a) from general practitioners, (b) from specialists, (c) from anaesthetists, (d) from obstetricians and gynecologists, (e) from general surgeons, and (f) from ophthalmologists? [Original notice February 14, 1983, tabled April 21, 1983]

STATUS OF CANDIDATES AND FORMER MEMBERS

30. Mr. Roy: Could the Premier indicate, of those individuals who ran as nominated candidates for the Ontario Progressive Conservative Party during the 1981 provincial general election and who subsequently lost, which of those individuals have, since that time, been appointed, assigned or hired by or to a ministry, agency, board, commission, post or other such position, of a remunerative or nonremunerative nature, over which the Ontario government has the power to make the decision of appointment, assignment or hiring? In addition to naming those individuals, could the Premier indicate the nature of the appointment, assignment or hiring, and could he indicate, where such is the case, the level of remuneration? [Original notice September 24, 1982, tabled April 22, 1983]

31. Mr. Roy: Could the Premier indicate, of those individuals who ran as nominated candidates for the Ontario Progressive Conservative Party during the 1977 provincial general election and who subsequently lost, which of those individuals have, since that time, been appointed, assigned or hired by or to a ministry, agency, board, commission, post or other such position, of a remunerative or nonremunerative nature, over which the Ontario government has the power to make the decision of appointment, assignment or hiring? In addition to naming those individuals, could the Premier indicate the nature of the appointment, assignment or hiring, and could he indicate, where such is the case, the level of remuneration? [Original notice September 24, 1982, tabled April 22, 1983]

32. Mr. Roy: Could the Premier indicate, of those individuals who ran as nominated candidates for the Ontario Progressive Conservative Party during the 1975 provincial general election and who subsequently lost, which of those individuals have, since that time, been appointed, assigned or hired by or to a ministry, agency, board, commission, post or other such position, of a remunerative or nonremunerative nature, over which the Ontario government has the power to make the decision of appointment, assignment or hiring? In addition to naming those individuals, could the Premier indicate the nature of the appointment, assignment or hiring, and could he indicate, where such is the case, the level of remuneration? [Original notice September 24, 1982, tabled April 22, 1983]

33. Mr. Roy: Could the Premier indicate, of those individuals who ran as nominated candidates for the Ontario Progressive Conservative Party during the 1971 provincial general election and who subsequently lost, which of those individuals have, since that time, been appointed, assigned or hired by or to a ministry, agency, board, commission, post or other such position, of a remunerative or nonremunerative nature, over which the Ontario government has the power to make the decision of appointment, assignment or hiring? In addition to naming those individuals, could the Premier indicate the nature of the appointment, assignment or hiring, and could he indicate, where such is the case, the level of remuneration? [Original notice September 24, 1982, tabled April 22, 1983]

34. Mr. Roy: Could the Premier indicate which former Progressive Conservative members of the Legislature have been appointed, assigned or hired since 1970 by or to a ministry, agency, board, commission, post or other such position, of a remunerative or nonremunerative nature, over which the Ontario government has the power to make the decision of appointment, assignment or hiring? In addition to naming those individuals, could the Premier indicate the nature of the appointment, assignment or hiring, and could he indicate, where such is the case, the level of remuneration? [Original notice September 24, 1982, tabled April 22, 1983]

Hon. Mr. Davis: Since the names of all appointees are already a matter of public record, the expenditure of time and effort required to provide the information in question would not be commensurate with the benefits to be derived thereby.

ONTARIO MUNICIPAL BOARD APPOINTMENT

184. Mr. Roy: Could the Premier indicate whether there was any communication, either oral or written, on or after September 21, 1982, between himself or members of his staff and Mr. Morley Rosenberg, Mr. E. Goodman, Mr. Hoskinson, the Premier or anyone in the Premier's office, concerning the Toronto Star story, dated September 21, 1982, referring to the matter of Mr. Rosenberg and his request for an appointment to the provincial court bench and his actual appointment to the Ontario Municipal Board? Could the Premier indicate the substance of such communication? [Original notice October 1, 1982, tabled April 22, 1983]

186. Mr. Roy: Could the Premier table all correspondence since January 1, 1980, between his office and Mr. Morley Rosenberg, Mr. E. Goodman, Mr. Hoskinson, the Ministry of the Attorney General or anyone in the Premier's office, or any other individual concerning the question of the appointment of Mr. Rosenberg to the provincial court bench, the Ontario Municipal Board or any other position over which the Ontario government has the power to make the appointment? [Original notice October 1, 1982, tabled April 22, 1983]

Hon. Mr. Davis: No record is kept of communications, apart from correspondence, with persons who might contact this office. The only correspondence on file in this matter is the one letter which is already a matter of public record.

NORONTAIR HEADQUARTERS

192. Mr. T. P. Reid: Will the Minister of Northern Affairs table the report relating to the headquarters of norOntair? Who wrote the report? When was it available to the minister? [Tabled April 29, 1983]

Hon. Mr. Bernier: norOntair is administered by the Ontario Northland Transportation Commission, through contractual arrangements with a number of northern commercial air carriers who operate a total of nine government-owned de Havilland Twin Otter aircraft, which serve 21 northern Ontario communities.

The aircraft are leased by the ONTC to the carriers who operate route patterns established by the Ministry of Northern Affairs in consultation with the Ministry of Transportation and Communications. Overall corporate services provided by ONTC, include marketing, ground handling services and the provision of major spare parts and specialized equipment.

The ONTC personnel who perform these duties are located at ONTC's headquarters in North Bay.

Current priorities and trends have indicated a need to adjust norOntair services to meet forecast demand for local and feeder air services in northern Ontario. A major initiative has been the purchase of two Dash-8 aircraft to supplement and complement norOntair's existing services.

A full review is now under way at ONTC, MTC and in my ministry to determine the optimum use of these two pressurized turbo-prop airplanes. Any decision which might affect the location of the headquarters of ONTC's norOntair personnel has been delayed pending the outcome of this review.

INTERIM ANSWERS

8, 9, 15 to 17, 29, 35 to 183, 185, 187 to 191, 193 to 195: The following statement was prepared under Cabinet Office letterhead.

The government will attempt to provide an answer to as many questions as possible before the prorogation of this session. It should be noted, however, that the tremendous increase in the number and complexity of questions placed on the order paper could require that increased amounts of time and manpower be diverted from present assignments in order to provide the information requested. An alternative would be to increase the resources allotted to the performance of this function. At a time when the government is endeavouring to adhere to an ongoing restraint program, neither course of action would seem to be appropriate.

Should there be questions that cannot be answered within the stated period, given these circumstances, members should note that sources other than the order paper may be utilized as part of the search for such information.

For example, the Public Accounts of Ontario will be of assistance in regard to many of the questions dealing with expenditures. Questions of this nature can also be directed towards the ministers responsible for such transactions during the estimates process.

All honourable members enjoy access to the research and information services provided by the legislative library, and all parties possess their own research capabilities funded through their budgets.

It is hoped that through a combination of these approaches, with the full co-operation of ministers and members, all honourable members will be able to attain the information that they seek.

Every effort will be made to answer the following questions on or before December 31, 1983: 8, 9, 15 to 17, 29, 35 to 183, 185, 187 to 191, 193 to 195.
